"I oppose the licensing of all new plants and would attempt to see that plants that have not been licensed are not brought on line," Brown said.

Those plants that are already licensed should be "phased out as soon as timely and responsible alternatives are available," he said.

Brown cautiously tempered his promise by noting that federal and state law would hamper his plan.

"I realize that a president only has so much power and a dramatic switch such I propose must have the support of the people and Congress," Brown said. "But the American people are going reject nuclear power when their government gives them a viable alternative," he added.

The 41-year-old Democrat says his plan would require a tremendous investment in conservation, hydro, solar and geothermal power "and a host of other energy inititives.

"A sober choice must be made between addiction to nuclear power and a more sensible set of alternatives....more compatible for a secure future for our country," he said.

In the case of Seabrook, Brown says he doesn't see a problem in finding an alternative source of non-nuclear power for New England.

"I don't see a problem, particularly if we can develop a policy with Canada to share some of their hydro-electric power," Brown said.

Anti-nuclear activists, who might be expected to jump on Brown's presidential bandwagon, are cautious about supporting Brown based on his claim.

Many say they've "heard the promises before" and point to a speech by President Jimmy Carter during the 1976 presidential campaign. Shortly after being nominated, Carter told a New Hampshire audience that nuclear plants should be built "where people don't live; where the environment will not be destroyed and with the reactor core beneath the ground."

"He made promises and I have a record to back up my claims," Brown said of Carter's record. "I signed the toughest anti-nuclear law in the country and I haven't seen any other prospective nominees in either party come even close to my record on nuclear power."

California has two nuclear power plants currently generating electricity and Brown takes credit for stopping three others.

If it's sick to love a pen, then the world's going crazy...

It happened to secretaries first. Then lawyers, bookkeepers, waitresses cabbies, housewives, and businessmen succumbed to the beauty of our Pilot Razor Point and Fineliner pens.

Some people felt it was sick to get so emotionally involved with our pens. But is it really so crazy to love a Pilot Razor Point pen that writes with a sharp smooth line and costs a mere 79¢? Is it nuts to flip over its unique little metal collar that smartly helps to keep its point from going squish?

If it is crazy, it's going to surprise a whole lot of people. In fact, we understand that Pilot Razor Point even has what it takes to score extra points with football players.

It also comes to our attention that many coaches are fans of the Pilot Fineliner. Along with all the other Razor Point features, the 69¢ Pilot Fineliner has the strength and drive to go through carbons. It's hard to resist a pen that holds the line like a Pilot.

...aim for Senate accountability

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Ten Veteran's Service Organization members who were elected Tuesday night by commuters to the Undergraduate Student Senate said yesterday their main concern is holding student government accountable for its financial dealings.

Walter Laughlin, VSO Vice President and one of the new senators, said the student governments' accounting system is "screwing everyone up" and that they should be "held accountable for what they spend."

Senator Paul Withers, a student who also serves as VSO advisor, cited the upcoming Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden speeches sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, as an example of their claim.

Withers said that DVP is not letting students know the true cost of Fonda's appearance. DVP's estimated program cost, he said, is nearly $7000 too low. Withers said DVP quoted him $2785 as the cost of the appearance while his estimates are about $10,000.

DVP vice-Chairman Howard Goldman last night estimated total program costs to be $7,000, "at the most."

Goldman said if $1 admission fees are charged, total expenses will be lowered to approximately $2,800. An audience of 4,200 is expected.

Withers said VSO senators plan to protest the $1 admission fee that DVP plans to charge students. He said this is in violation of the DVP constitution and only a senate vote can suspend the rule. The senators will attempt to block DVP's request for the suspension at the senate meeting Wednesday night, he said.

"We want people to know what they're spending," Laughlin said. "Why draw up a constitution if they're going to change the rules."

"Our complaint is strictly financial," said Kevin Keegan, another new senator and VSO member. While VSO does not object to Fonda's speaking on campus, they do object to the students being required to pay for her speech, he said.

The new senators cited student apathy as a major problem here. Laughlin said he wanted to get the veterans together with students. Their diversified experiences, he said, could be very useful to the university as a whole.

"We plan to promote things for the entire university community," he said. "We're veterans up here, and commuters down in the senate."

The other VSO members elected to the senate are Jeff Barcus, Joseph Collins, John Flaherty, Don Long, Rod Reinhold, Neal Sullivan, and Paul VanSchynedel.

About 100 new student senators were installed in office last night after being elected Monday and Tuesday by 11.3 percent of the UMass undergraduate population.

Senators are listed according to the number of votes they received.

In Northeast Residential Area: from Crabtree; Warren Childs; from Hamlin, Kevin LeClaire; from Leach, Cornelius Andres; from Lewis, Tricia Vonchesi; from Mary Lyon, Beth Rosenberg; from Thatcher, Mike Jingozian.

In the Central area: from Baker, Steven Etkin, Susan Kennedy; Brett, Joel Finnard; Butterfield, Dennis Doherty; from Chadbourne, Dorothy Butler; from Gorman, Dave Powers; from Greenough, Jim McBratney; from Van Meter North, Paul Garofoli; Van Meter South, Liz Flanagan. The house councils or area governments will decide the tie in Wheeler dormitory, and one position in Gorman.

In the Orchard Hill area: from Dickenson, Tim Petter, Lawrence Wright; from Field, Michael Melbourne; from Grayson, Steve Pineo, Adam Peck; from Webster, Ken Moore, Deb Feinstein.

In the Southwest area: Washington-L, Merrill Green; Washington-M, Harry Brod; Washington-U, Cindy Fausch; Coolidge-L, Mary Morin, Allison Curren; Coolidge-U, Ann McDevitt, Denise Pengeroth; Crampton, Maureen Harrell; James, Dave Burns; Kennedy-L, David Pearson; Kennedy-M, Michael Manning; Kennedy-U, Larry Kocot; Melville, Lynn Butler; Thoreau, Steve Fox. The Prince house council will have to decide the election.

Julie Robertson was elected to the Board of Governors.

There were 36 commuter senators, 15 of whom were incumbents. They are: Jill Tregor, Anthony Johnson, Timothy Condon, Leon Thomas, Paul Van Schyndel, Don Long, James Lewis, Linda Geary, Pat Hart, Kevin O'Leary, Roberta Perkins, John Szewczyk, Kevin Keegan, Bill Fitzgerald, Dave Routhier, John Flaherty, Paul Withers, Paul Malumphy, Bari Nijiri, Peter Egan, Joel Weissman, Joseph Collins, Richard Tuttle, Micheal Ferrigno, Ron Reinhold, Michael Cohen, Sharon Israel, Walter laughlin, James L. Blue, Marea Wexler, Allan Huntley.

Four write-in candidates that were elected are: John Rosner, Jeff Barkus, Neal Sullivan, Seth Nokoff. Also S. Leonard, R. Moran, and M. Cohen were elected to the Board of Governors.

Southwest officials declare quiet hours

By ELLEN TUCHMAN
Collegian Staff

Southwest Residential Area officials have distributed a quiet hours policy to be effective from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m. throughout Southwest, but say they have no means to enforce it.

Since the university library closed, Heads of Residnece and their supervisors have met numerous times to develop a noise-control policy to best meet student needs.

Melton Miller, Master/Director of Southwest Residential College, said in a news release issued this week, "What is being asked for in this request is that we all respect the right of others to have a quiet palce to study and to sleep." The twelve hour quiet hours period was decided upon by the H.R.s, Melton Miller and his assistant directors.

Miller said many students wrongly assume they must leave their dormitory if they want to study. This policy returns the basic right to study in their dorms to students, he said.

H.R.s said they are leaving the question of just what constitutes noise up to students.

"This will be an evolutionary process...enforcement will start with the grossest offenders," Miller said. The crux of the policy is consideration of others and H.R.s hope that it will succeed on this basis.

Steve Finnegan and Dave Magliaro, H.R.s for Moore House, said they feel the policy enables students to take part in establishing the corridor atmosphere they desire.

One H.R., who requested his name be withheld, said he doesn't believe the job of the H.R. is to "kick people out of the dorm if they are noisy." According to the present housing contract, only excessive noise would be classified as "endangering behavior."

The responses of Southwest area residents varied. Jeff Walker, an R.A. from Cance dormitory , said that students might rebel against the policy and make even more noise than usual. He said 12 hours is too long a period to expect a restriction of activities. Although students have a right to study, they also need a release afterwards. The policy denies this need, he said.

One R.A. who wished to remain anonymous, said, "Quiet hours as a set time is ridiculous and hard to enforce, even though there is a need for quiet. Students just have to respect each other."

Susan Moyer, a junior from Moore House, said, "I think this policy should be upheld--it's merely a demonstration of courtesy toward one's neighbor." Another student added, "Since the library is closed people are forced to study in their rooms. The reason to be here is to study and if this can't be done effectively, then there is no point in remaining here."

One freshman said he believes the entire area would remain reasonably quiet without specific hours instituted. David Goldman, angry about the library closing, said he feels the forms are not conducive to studying regardless of the quiet hours. He said he is opposed to any policy of this nature.

Two students from Thoreau said quiet hours are consideration hours and this "policy" has always been followed by their fellow residents. They said they believe the policy is geared to the towers.

Kennedy and feminism

Senator gives women's issues high priority

By MONICA McKENNA
Collegian Staff

Senator Edward Kennedy has been a prominent public figure for several years now. His name carries an aura which borders on the legendary; his politics and personality provoke diverse reactions—often he has been accused of hanging his career on his family name, yet his record suggests that his political sensitivities reach deeper than this would imply. As speculation increases over his possible run for the presidential nomination, it seems relevant to examine his political ideals and intentions. For example, his claim to be a champion of women's rights is important in its implications for feminists and in the illumination it may cast on other aspects of his policies.

Women today are faced with a semi-resolved situation. Many women still encounter several types of discrimination. Kennedy appears to be aware of the problems and proposes a plan of action to alleviate some of them.

Kennedy has always been involved with women on both personal and political levels. His political machine has never been totally male oriented. Mary Murtagh, until her death earlier this year, was an important influence in his policies. He has recently ,pointed a full time aide for women's issues. Since he has always had one of the most effective organizations on Capitol Hill, the role of women staff-members like Irene Emsemn, Chris Birch, and Mary Falconton is an important one. Tom Southwick of Kennedy's Washington Press Office said that women's issues held a high priority status in Kennedy's affairs and would continue to do so should he run for National office.

His actions would appear to validate this statement. In 1976, he voted against the Packwood Amendment—which would have eliminated restrictions on abortions—but he has since altered his political stand on the issue. Though he is personally opposed to abortion, he has moved that there be federal funding of legalized abortions. His Health Care Plan (recently estimated to cost $29 billion annually) would undoubtedly provide better treatment for all women.

Kennedy was the Floor Leader for the E.R.A., which has so far failed to attain the necessary support from 38 states for national ratification. Many of his policies reflect his awareness of feminist issues. The national plan drawn up during International Women's Year by women's organizations contained 26 resolutions on ways to end sexual discrimination in employment, education, marital property ownership and other areas. Some of these, such as abortion, have been included in his political platform despite their controversial nature.

In the past 25 years the number of American women employed in paying jobs doubled—the figure was estimated at 39 million last year. The proportion of women in major professions has risen, though the figures are still low. In 1977 there were 90 female mayors and 685 legislators in the U.S. 8 percent of the country's judges and lawyers were female. Kennedy has expressed particular interest in encouraging larger numbers of women to pursue professions in law.

In his recent appointment of Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, he nominated the first woman judge now working for the federal courts in Massachusetts. Southwick also mentioned Kennedy's speech on the need for more women scientists, especially in the fields of engineering, chemistry and physics. He has taken a stand against budget cuts for the Women's Jobs Program. To date, his actions speak as loudly as his words.

Unlike his brothers, Ted Kennedy seems to respect the legislative processes of government; delight in senate proceedings; thus, his advocation that there be more women in both House and Senate enhances the claim that he favors women in politics. Were he to become President, the female viewpoint might well be more readily considered and understood.

Though not always in agreement with many radical feminists in America today, Kennedy respects their views and recognizes that there is a need for such activists in the current climate of opinion, according to Southwick. Southwick also stressed that Governor King's attitude towards the Women's Movement is not shared by Kennedy, and though the two have worked together in the past on political and economic issues, King's firing of the Commission On the Status of Women was his own decision.

Thus, Kennedy's active and controversial style has led him to attack giants in business and government, to criticize figures like Nixon and Carter, and to propose schemes such as the Health Care Plan, and Famine Relief. Yet since his appeal so often transcends ideology, he manages to retain a massive body of support.

His actions concerning the Women's Movement seem to indicate a realization that the female role can be many and various. It may also demonstrate that this astute senator is acutely aware of current political opinion.

Though some actions may be mere vote winners, they nevertheless constitute "action" for the women of America.

Carter, Kennedy to attend party fund-raiser

WASHINGTON — Sounding more and more like rival candidates, President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy are offering a preview of what it would be like if they clash for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

With their rhetoric heating up, the two men planned appearances, timed not to overlap, at a Democratic Party fund-raiser Wednesday.

Kennedy, showing every sign of moving steadily toward a presidential bid, planned to appear at a poolside reception preceding a $1,000-a-plate dinner sponsored by the Democratic National Committee.

The senator told dinner organizers that he would skip the meal.

Carter was the featured dinner speaker. Party spokesmen said more than 1,000 tickets were sold for the event.

House votes in Panama canal treaties bill

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House passed and sent to President Carter on yesterday a bill to carry out final details of the treaties that will eventually give control of the Panama Canal to Panama.

House members had turned down a similar measure last week. But they approved the bill 232 to 188 after backers of the treaties argued that defeat might bring chaos in Panama. The Senate approved the legislation Tuesday.

The treaties, which take effect Monday, will end U.S. possession of the Panama Canal, which slices across the Central American country and connects the Pacific Ocean with the Caribbean.

Carter and Panamanian leaders already had signed the treaties and they had been ratified by the Senate.

The bill, now headed for certain signing by Carter, establishes a new U.S.-controlled commission that will operate the canal until, under the treaties, the Panamanian government takes full control of the waterway on Dec. 31, 1999.

House defeat of the canal legislation last week was an embarrassment to Carter, who is sending Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to Panama on Monday for ceremonies marking the end of U.S. possession of the canal.

Prior to Wednesday's vote, Carter personally telephoned treaty opponents and House leaders, appealing for approval of the bill.

In debate before Wednesday's final vote, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill told his colleagues the canal is regarded by Latin Americans as "the apple of American imperialism" and urged them to approve the bill as the final step in carrying out the treaties.

"We'll keep our word," O'Neill said. "I think it's going to be a friendlier Western Hemisphere."

The bill's floor manager, Rep. John M. Murphy, D-N.Y., told the House that rejection of the bill could spark violence in Panama.

"A timebomb is ticking away ..." Murphy said. "We have one week before we might face chaos in Panama."

Rep. Robert Bauman, R-Md., who had been a leading opponent of the bill, told the House the measure had to be passed to protect the U.S. rights to run the canal and station troops there until the waterway becomes Panamanian property at the end of the century.

But Rep. Floyd Spence, RS.C., appealed to the House to stand fast against the bill.

"We're trying to appease our enemies," Spence contended. "We have given in and we have been pushed around by everybody and we invite more of the same."

Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, also urged defeat of the measure, saying: "With Soviet combat troops in the Caribbean, do we dare give away the Panama Canal? Those Russian troops are training Marxist terrorists all over the Caribbean."

The treaties turn most of the Panama Canal Zone over to Panama at the stroke of midnight Monday. Other canal property will be turned over to Panama in stages, concluding with the transfer of the canal itself at the end of the century.

Vets to vets: Fonda has rights

VSO should comment on public platform

As a Vietnam veteran I feel it is necessary to comment on the actions currently being taken by the Veterans Service Organization on behalf of the veterans here at UMass.

Our involvment in Vietnam and the ensuing strife back in the states left me with many strong convictions. The most important of which surrounds the issue of Freedom of Speech. I learned from the counter-intelligence ploys of our government that, if you can effectively manipulate or outright deny platforms for Free Speech, then constitutional rights, the flag and any other patriotic symbol you can think of serves no other purpose than kindling paper.

William Collins

We have a right as students to comment on the Fonda/Hayden appearance, but to do it on the playform made available to everyone – the question and answer period at the end of the speeches.

Don't hide behind the shield of a "special interest" group with the support of the National Veterans of Foreign War and the American Legion to build a case for special handling in this instance.

Rather than alienating people by the "power of the group", we as individuals can be much more effective by setting a moral example of the sinfulness of War.

We MUST educate the students of today of the mistakes of the past. Otherwise, we condemn them and those afterwards to even more tragic consequences.

William F. Collins is a Collegian guest columnist

Didn't we learn a lesson from 'Nam?

To those professional ex-servicemen who oppose the Sept. 30 speeches by Tom Hayden and Jane Fonda at UMass: these spokesmen at the Veterans Service Organization presume to speak for all us Vietnam era vets and the student body. But their heads are in the sand. Their egos are helping them forget what the rest of the country learned during those years.

They were the footsoldiers for Corporate America, the pawns in the politics of greedy, chauvinistic old men who continue to rule this country. The myth died awhile ago.

Where were you guys then?

The Watergate tapes, the Pentagon Papers and the Shah

of Iran were testament to the deceit at government's highest levels.

Sending men to Vietnam was criminal, and many of us were deeply affected by repurcussions of those times. But the freedom to express opinions overwhelmed a president twice (Johnson dropped out, Nixon resigned, both in disgrace), and will survive until big government and big business are afraid of revolution. It is then we will all be pawns.

If for no other reason, Jane Fonda should be accorded Distinguished Visitor's status for her complicity in China Syndrome, which presented the stupidity of nuclear power in exaggeratedly accurate terms. Logic would make it seem that these same jingoistic veterans, "spokesmen", believe that Three Mile Island didn't happen, or that it wasn't serious, or that the "spokesmen" for the authorities levelled with us.

David Reid is a Collegian guest columnist.

The DVP should present all sides

Charges brought by UMass veterans last week to discredit the scheduled appearances of Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden on September 30, were based on their conceptions that the team are "known subversives" whose appearances would violate an existing state statute preventing such; raises some interesting questions about freedom of advocacy and the Distinguished Visitor's Program itself.

Jim Moran

In the past, persons speaking on campus in connection with the program have tended to be speakers with a political philosophy on the left side of the spectrum. Consider some of the people who have spoken here, as taken from a list of DVP speakers since 1970: ecologist Barry Commoner (1973), civil rights activist Shirley DuBois (1970), Communist Party leader Gus Hall (1972), socialist-author Michael Harrington (1971), former Vice-President and U.S. Senator Hubert Humphrey (1970), Chicago Seven lawyer William Kuntsler (1971), Senator George McGovern (1971), and radical author-teacher Howard Zinn (1971).

About the only right-of-center political speeches were given by rocket scientist Werner Von Braun (1973) and a debate with James Reston (1973). Now, while I have no objection to an obvious leftist bias, I do think that those persons responsible for the selection of DVP speakers should be mindful of the fact that there are those individuals who will take them to task for such arrangements. The DVP could, I'm sure, find some very credible and intelligent speakers of conservative persuasion. I submit the names of journalist William F. Buckley, economist Milton Freidman, or libertarian David Brudney.

After all, just because most stupid people are conservative, does not mean that all conservative people are stupid.

If the Vets here are concerned with protecting the integrity of the Vets who "gave their lives and were wounded and maimed in support of the long-standing ideals and beliefs of this nation," as they said, then perhaps they may consider that one of those "long-standing" ideals is the basic tenet of freedom of expression, in accordance with the First Amendment.

Insofar as Fonda and Hayden are concerned, maybe the Vets ought to consider that if it weren't for people like this husband-wife pair, we might still be in Southeast Asia today, and that their buddies would still be the casualties on the six o'clock news.

Furthermore, Chapter 264, the state statute regarding criminal penalties for the existance of subversive persons and organizations, are most blatantly in collusion with the principles this nation was founded upon. If the Sons of Liberty hadn't been subversive, we might today find ourselves under British autonomy.

'The DVP could, I'm sure, find some very credible and intelligent speakers of conservative persuasion.'

One major weakness of this law, based on the Smith Act of 1940, is the fact that it provides for no objective test if criterium as to what constitutes a "subversive" person or organization. At what point, for instance, does mere advocacy translate into actions which threaten the government or create a situation under which the government would be in danger? The law doesn't spell this out. In addition, it has been superceded by more modern Supreme Court decisions and Congressional legislation

As to Fonda's speaking here, one might argue that since she met with the "enemy," in Hanoi, she is a qualified treasonist. However, since the Congress did not declare war upon Vietnam, there can be no argument that she betrayed the sanctioned interests of our government.

Those veterans who feel that Fonda's anti-imperialist philosophy contradicts their beliefs about the Vietnam War, have every right to stage a counter-demonstration and to invite their own speakers. But they do have the right to prevent others who may wish to hear Fonda and Hayden's views on the issues of today.

MassPIRG makes fall plans for anti-nuclear energy march

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group plans to turn student support for the anti-nuclear movement into an active energy campaign statewide, Malcolm Quint , staff coordinator for the organization's Amherst chapter said yesterday. The student-run organization's next effort will be a Safe Energy Walk scheduled for Oct. 14.

"The Amherst route will travel from the Montague nuclear power plant to North Amherst, hopefully passing plenty of fall foliage, said Susan Birmingham, the MassPIRG staffer who is planning the walk-a-thon.

"We'll have people pledging money for each mile walked and set up educational booths along the route," she said. "We're planning a route away from nuclear power and into the sun," added MassPIRG staffer John Pepi.

"Popular support for the anti-nuclear movement has flowed back into our local projects," said Quint. The energy level at New York last Sunday showed me that the public is concerned about issues that affect their community."

MassPIRG has targeted energy as its primary concern this year. Besides chartering buses to the September 23 rally in New York City and sponsoring the Safe Energy Walks around the state, the group has involved itself in educating local communities about the Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Companies' (MMWEC) attempt to purchase a larger share in the Seabrook nuclear plant.

"So far we're battling 1,000 in the local area," said Quint. "We've convinced the local power boards in Chicopee, South Hadley and Greenfield not to purchase their share. this type of community education is what MassPIRG is all about."

He said other projects the UMass chapter will tackle this year involve reform in small claims courts, examination of water supplies for potentially hazardous wastes (21 community water systems have been found contaminated, according to student board chairman Ken Ward) and opposition to a plan to divert the Connecticut River into the Quabbin Reservoir supply.

"The student activist movement is like grass under a roadway," said Quint. "They can pave it over but a few sprouts of grass will always break through, if it's left alone the road will return to foliage in a short time."

The UMass chapter office and Consumer Action Center are located in 423B of the Student Union.

Fall foliage makes early showing

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The message is already out to outof-state tourists who each fall jam New Hampshire's highways to see the state's famous fall foliage.

Come on up, says Jack Sargent, chief of the state Forest Fire Service.

"Leaf peepers" are getting an early look at brilliant colors this year, thanks to a frost last week.

Foliage in the Pittsburg-Connecticut Lakes area, in the northernmost part of the state, already is at its peak of brilliance, about one week ahead of time, according to Sargent.

Foliage in the Lancaster-Littleton area is nearing its height of brilliance, and the colors extend into Franconia Notch State Park and as far south as Lake Winnipesaukee, he said Tuesday.

"Sharp cold is only one of several factors involved in the change of color in leaves from the lush green of summer to the bright red, yellow and gold of autumn," said Sargent.

Cold weather seems to single out red maples, particularly if they are not robust or are damaged in some way, he said.

S. African Prime Minister:

Racist law open for change

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — In a startling turnabout, Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha has suggested changing laws prohibiting interracial sex and marriage — pillars of South Africa's apartheid policy.

Botha discussed both laws during a congress of the ruling National Party in Cape Town on Tuesday. His remarks were published here yesterday. It was the first time a leader of the white-minority regime even questioned the statutes.

The prime minister skirted the issue of whether the laws should be scrapped entirely, saying only his government was open to suggestions for "improving" the legislation but said, in his opinion, mixed marriages were undesirable.

But he told the congress no law should be regarded as a "holy cow" and said that he would not tolerate laws which insulted people in South Africa.

Botha's remarks, cautious as they were, surprised critics of the regime's race segregation policies.

"It is remarkable that Mr. Botha is even thinking about this," said Kowie Marais, spokesman on justice matters for the Liberal Progressive Federal Party.

A report in the Rand Daily Mail, a critic of apartheid, said "highly placed government sources" indicated legal groundwork was to be prepared to scrap all laws regulating social behavior on the basis of race.

"At all times," Botha told the congress, "we will consider positive suggestions about any act. There is no such thing as standing by a law whether it is good or bad."

While he reiterated he personally opposed mixed marriages in South Africa, Botha declared: "I concede there is a problem where people really love each other and wanted to get married."

Both the Immorality Act and the Mixed Marriages Act have been cornerstones of the Nationalist Party, in power since 1948, to maintain the 4.5 million white minority's authority over the country's 19 million blacks.

The Immorality Act — prohibiting sexual relations between whites and blacks — was first made law in 1927. The act was expanded in 1950 to prohibit sexual relations between whites and all nonwhites.

The Mixed Marriages Act became law in 1949 and prohibited marriages across the color line. Marriages between white South Africans and non-whites outside South Africa were declared null and void within the country, in an amendment to the act passed in 1968. This amendment meant those mixed race couples married outside South Africa could be prosecuted under the Immorality Act if they returned here.

Nixon, Ford not invited to opening

BOSTON (AP) — The nation's two surviving ex-presidents apparently aren't going to get a chance to honor their predecessor when the John F. Kennedy Library opens next month.

The Boston Globe reported that Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford won't be invited to the opening celebration.

The newspaper said the official reason for not inviting the two is that the Oct. 20 opening in Boston is not being planned as a celebrity gala, but as a gathering of the late president's official, political and personal family and friends.

But the Globe also said there were reports the family thought Nixon's presence at the opening would be inappropriate because of his role in Watergate. Family members concerned about having to explain such a position — and perhaps ignite a controversy that might win sympathy for him — confined the guest list to people with connections to President Kennedy, the newspaper said.

An exception was made for President Carter.

Women booters down UConn Huskies, 6-1

By ROB EMMONS
Collegian Staff

The Women's varsity soccer squad continued its winning ways yesterday, dumping opponent UConn 6-1. UMass started its first home game somewhat cautiously, but once they started, scoring the goals came regularly.

Margie Anderson broke the ice twelve minutes into the game, tucking one inside the opposite post from the left wing. Nancy Feldman added another goal later in the half of a beautiful cross by Angie Caouette, and UMass led at halftime 2-0.

Not until Nina Holmstrom had stung UConn for a third time did the visitors score the initial goal of their season. They failed to muster much more offense (save for a breakaway attempt squelched by Kelley Tuller) as UMass took firm control. Maddy Mangini and Elaine Contant found the net and Holmstrom added her second before the bloodbath was over. UMass fired forty-two shots to the visitors' eighteen.

Golfers finish 5th in NE's

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

With a tremendous second round comeback, the UMass men's golf team finished fifth in a field of 37 teams, in the 45th annual New England Intercollegiate Golf Championship played Monday and Tuesday at Taconic and Waubeka Springs Country Clubs in Williamstown, Mass.

The Minutemen, despite shooting 326 in Monday's action at Taconic, fired a 302 Tuesday at Waubeka Springs to jump up 12 places in the standings and finish fifth behind champion Salem State (603), Central Connecticut (605), Williams College (625), and Rhode Island (626).

Mike Thibeault of Central Connecticut won medalist honors, firing a 148, Bob Reardon of Providence was runnerup with a 149, and Dean Martin of Salem State took third with a 150. There were five players tied at 151. Marty Hunt and Tony Kelley lead the Minutemen, both shooting identical rounds of 83 and 74 for a two-round total of 157. The rest of the squad finished as follows: Bob Gladchuck 85-74-159, Mark Duggan 79-80-159, and Steven Midttun 81-80-161.

UMass coach Ed Vlach accounting for the high first round scores said: "the greens at Taconic had just been worked on two weeks before the tournament and they were rough in spots, causing some errant putting." Vlach, although not satisfied with the club's first round performance, was impressed and proud of the way his squad hung in there and came back to play some fine golf. I was also extremely proud of Tony Kelley, because of the fine golf he played under rough circumstances." The circumstances Kelley had to face involved the theft of his clubs and golf shoes the night before the tourney. Kelley had to use Vlach's clubs and shoes and still performed well. "Tony is to be commended for that," added Vlach.

The Minutemen go into their next tournament, the Toski Intercollegiate Tournament with a lot of confidence in both their game and themselves. The Toski Tournament, the last one of the fall season for UMass, will be played on the home course, Hickory Ridge C.C. in South Amherst Sunday and Monday. The tourney will involve some 25 teams and will provide some tough competition for the Minutemen, many of the same clubs as in the New Englands.

Harriers fall victim to Friars and Crimson

By JANE WOLFMAN
Collegian Staff

This was one of those meets the UMass mens cross country team would rather forget as they were defeated by both Harvard and Providence College Tuesday afternoon at Boston's Franklin Park. Providence's dominance was obvious with final scores PC 21, Harvard 39, and UMass 69.

"We are inexperienced," said Harrier coach Ken O'Brien. "But that wasn't an excuse, we really lacked aggressiveness. We weren't ready mentally to put forth that kind of an effort," O'Brien added.

After the first mile it became clear that the Minutemen were not even in the race as Providence and Harvard went on to take the top seven spots with UMass sophomore Paul Beaulieu the first to finish for UMass in the eighth spot.

Junior Kevin Molteni finished next for the harriers in twelth place and senior captain Rick Walls placed fifteenth overall. Also placing for the Minutemen were Steven McDougall and Paul Kirks. Providence All-American Ray Tracey won the five mile event with a time of 23:52.

"We don't run that well in the beginning of the season," said Walls. "Teams that beat us in the beginning of the season, we can usually run evenly with or beat them by post season," he added.

Saturday the Harriers travel to Villanova to take on Villanova, Rutgers, Pitt, George Washington, St. Bonaventure, and Duquesne, in an Eastern Eight meet. "We're looking forward to it," said Walls. "All of those teams will be in the IC4A's and we'll be getting a feel of what they have and what we'll have to expect."

Stickers host Keene St.

By LIZ STURM
Collegian Staff

The UMass stickers, with a record of 1-0, take on the Keene State Owls today at home at 3 p.m. on the NOPE hockey field. Although the Minutewomen shutout the Owls with a score of 5-0 last year, coach Pamela Hixon is not sure what to expect from Keene State and their new coach in UMass' second game of the season.

Coach Hixon plans to stick with the same starting line-up, both offensive and defensive, that was used in defeating Westfield in an away game last Saturday. UMass' strategy is to play their own game and keep attacking. To do this Hixon hopes to bring the ball up the right side of the field, where key players O'Niel and Strong are positioned, and crossover to the left when in scoring distance.

The JV team will be following up the varsity with a home game against Franklin Pierce at 4:15.

Booters blank Ephmen, 4-0

By DAVID BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Tony M. Dias scored what turned out to be the only goal UMass would need 15 minutes into the first half of yesterday's soccer game as the Minutemen blanked Williams College 4-0 for their first season victory.

Dias was joined in the scoring column by senior Scott Cooper, freshman Gus Martins and sophomore Denis Walsh. It was Dias' fourth goal of the year, the first for the other three Minutemen.

UMass' offense domianted most of the game and when there was a let-up in that department, the defense took over. Williams directed 20 shots toward Minuteman goalie Mark Marilla while UMass peppered the Ephmen's goal with 28 volleys. Coach Russ "Cap" Kidd praised Marilla's performance saying, "When we were down, he was up."

UMass applied pressure from the opening minutes of the game and looked like they were ready to set up a training camp in the Williams end of the field. This scenario continued with only a few interruptions to the UMass end until Cap's Kickers scored at 15:05 into the game.

Greg Omasta started the play with a throw-in from the sidelines to the right of the opponents goals. The pass was handled by Cooper, who directed the ball out front to Dias. Dias positioned himself in a small crowd and booted the ball off the bounce past the goalie's shoulder into the right of the net.

Minutes later Dias looked like he was going in alone for a second goal after making a steal at midfield, but the Williams goalie, Doug Orr, came out and brought Dias down. Dias and the UMass bench both thought he was tripped. The referee didn't.

Forward Wayne Moran set up the next UMass goal by drawing the defense to himself 10 yards away to the left of goal, then feeding Cooper with a soft pass out in front. Cooper wasted no time in sliding one along the ground to the goalie's left. That goal came at 24:25 and concluded the scoring for the first half.

Williams appeared to get itself organized in the second half and began to apply some pressure. Marilla was called upon to make a save early when Ephman Neal McLaughlin got by the UMass defense at midfield and scrambled in alone. A slightly misfired shot from 15 yards out was handled neatly by Marilla.

UMass upped it's lead to 3-0 at 14:22 when Moran (two assists) danced down the right side and connected with rookie forward Martins from the corner. Martins took the ball about 12 yards away to the right of goal and tucked one, unmolested, past the diving keeper.

For the last five minutes of play Williams was fortunate if it even touched the ball.

We were in control most of the game," Marilla said afterwards. Tri-captain Mike St. Martin said he thought the team worked the ball "pretty well" and he was "definitely satisfied" with the win, "But we didn't play our strongest game."

"At points I thought we looked brilliant," Coach Kidd said, "and at times like we were playing out of a fog. Our restarts still leave a lot to be desired."

Sports grab bag

Hot on the heels of Mark Marchand's earth-shattering "Wondering If..." column, I offer my little collection of potpourri.

Government intervention into professional sport began years ago when baseball was foolishly given exemption from anti-trust laws thus allowing it to become a monopoly. Now the federal courts have found it in their power to once again pervade the realm of sport and appoint themselves as the authority on player compensation.

Judge Robert Carter's ruling that Seattle return Lonnie Shelton and Vinnie Johnson along with $450,000 to the New York Knicks and in essence allow the Knicks to have signed Marvin Webster free from compensation is stepping about beyond the courts' legal boundaries.

In effect it reduces the power of the league commissioner, Larry O'Brien to that of a public relations man. O'Brien should be commended for sticking to his guns and ordering Shelton and Johnson to stay in Seattle, after all, it is his league to control, isn't it?

Whether this ruling will have any effect on the San Diego compensation to Portland for the Clippers signing of Bill Walton, a deal in which I believe San Diego got rooked, remains to be seen.

One of the true aspects of sport is to be a model of consistency, so let's hear it for baseball's king of the hill Bowie "the Boob" Kuhn who time and time again has led us to believe that he suffers from grave mental deficiencies.

Bowie's latest adventure with the Spaceman, Bill Lee, has the commissioner being opposed by the American Civil Liberties Union. Sometimes you just can't win.

It's a shame that it took the UMass athletic brass until 1979 to realize that the ECAC is pretty much a useless organization. UMass should have seen the handwriting on the wall when the league didn't televise a single UMass contest when Julius Erving played here.

As for the ECAC itself, it is my firm belief that by ostracizing the Eastern Eight, the ECAC has begun a slow death. It has been rumored that the Ivy League will receive a TV pact next year as will the Big East conference. If these two groups also pull out of the ECAC, then the conference will be left holding an empty bag and will be nothing but a name.

It is a shame that collegiate sport has come to the point where money and power over-ride the athlete. There was a time when collegiate sport was played for the enjoyment of sport itself, but that time has long since passed.

Although I'm still quite upset about the Celtics release of Curtis Rowe, I must say that the team is finally headed in the right direction. Actually, the team started moving upward as soon as it ridded itself of John Y. Brown.

The additions of Bird and Carr don't need much mention but there is still the question of a playmaking guard. What hurts the Celtics the most in this area is that in order to acquire a solid guard they will have to give up two or more players, since they don't have any personnel available that they could trade one-for-one.

Perhaps the Celts might be able to acquire the likes of Randy Smith who has made public his feelings that he doesn't enjoy his being traded to Cleveland. Maybe former Cavaliers, now Celtics coach Bill Fitch can work out a deal with his former club.

For those fans of Minuteman basketball, you might be glad to know that former UMass star Mark Haymore is alive and well and playing professional ball in Italy.

An ammendment to the Distinguished Visitors Program constitution to allow the organization to charge $1 admission fee to the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden appearance this Sunday was approved last night by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The motion—opposed by the Veteran's Student Organization—was passed by a 53 to 13 vote following a heated debate between VSO members and DVP officials and their supporters.

Howard Goldman, Vice-President of DVP, said the veteran's group had "no right" to try to stop the appearance of Fonda and Hayden. He said when he tried to communicate with VSO prior to the meeting they would not cooperate. Most of the university community supported the appearance and only a small group of veterans had protested the program, he said.

Goldman said the $1 fee was being charged to help offset the program cost so that DVP would not exhaust this semester's funds. He said the appearance would cost DVP an estimated $7000 and that their budget for this semester was only $8000. He said that by charging the admission fee, DVP will have about $5000 for the remainder of the semester.

Results of senate vote and related story on page 3.

Senator Paul Withers, a VSO member, said DVP did not obtain correct expense figures from the physical plant and others. Veteran Albert Sparks said it made "no sense" for Fonda and Hayden to be paid. Other VSO members attacked DVP for their handling of the situation.

Kenneth MacCrae, a UMass graduate and veteran of the Vietnam war, said Fonda and Hayden should have the right to speak, and that VSO's contention that it would hurt their program was invalid.

Bruce Levy, Southwest co-president, said, "The right to dissent is the right of freedom of speech and if the veterans have that right, then so does Jane Fonda.

Goldman later said tickets for the speech would be available outside the Hatch and at the Tix counter in the Student Union from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. today and tomorrow. He said anyone with University identification will be allowed to purchase up to 2 tickets. UMass IDs will also be required for entrance to the event in the Curry Hicks Cage, he said.

...while denying Pierce impeachment talks

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted against suspending one of its constitutional laws to discuss a motion to impeach acting Student Attorney General William Pierce.

Senator James Lewis motioned to impeach Pierce because "I don't feel we should have an appointed Attorney General related politically to the senate presidents" and because "other people were doing his (Pierce's) work over the summer."

Pierce was originally appointed by former co-President Herbert Tyson to replace an ousted attorney general. Lewis said he believes Pierce was reappointed to the ost by current co-Presidents Brian Burke and Richard LaVoice solely because Pierce campaigned for the two men when they ran for office last April.

Senate law provides that the presidents choose an attorney general, and then their selection must be approved by the senate.

Lewis said Pierce, who had been chosen as attorney general with the intent that Pierce work in that capacity this past summer, had "done nothing the whole summer."

"I was working for the United States Congress in Washington as an intern," Pierce said of his summer activity.

"When I was appointed to this position by Herb Tyson, I took it without the intention of keeping it on a permanent basis. I've tried to reconstruct the student judiciary by working closely with Dean (William F.) Field. I don't feel I should be impeached because I haven't gone against anything in the student government constitution."

Pierce did not violate a senate law by not working as attorney general during the summer, LaVoice said. He said the senate "did not even have funding for the job until he (Pierce) had already left for Washington."

The senate is presently choosing members of a new search committee to appoint a permanent attorney general. Pierce, who Burke and LaVoice last May chose to chair the committee, said he will not seek the permanent position.

Senator Julie Robinson, who served a paralegal internship for UMass Legal Services last semester and assumed the attorney general's summer duties, said she will run for attorney general.

"I did the work of the attorney general over the summer because Will was not here. I feel I'm being denied the job technically because of the internal politics of the senate," Robinson said.

Robinson, along with senators Ann Bolger and Craig Sherwood, was recommended as a candidate for attorney general by a search committee formed last spring. Burke and LaVoice chose Bolger, but the senate voted them down. The search committee did not provide the senate with substantial reasons to vote for Bolger, senator Rich Tuttle last night said. The senate then approved the president's reappointment of Pierce.

A motion to deny Burke and LaVoice the power to select an attorney general from the search committees' recommendations was also defeated last night, 38-20.

The senate chose Bari Njiri and Beth Rosenberg as two members of the 9-member search committee for attorney general. Other members will be chosen at a later date.

Legislature delays vote on holiday

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press

BOSTON The state Senate blocked quick action on a papal holiday bill yesterday, and the decision was put over until today.

Senate President William M. Bulger promised that there definitely will be some kind of a holiday Monday.

University officials would be expected to abide by any bill signed by King, and will not take action on possible Monday class cancellations until the legislature makes a decision, Arthur Clifford of the UMass News Bureau said yesterday.

The Senate, Bulger told reporters, has attempted to "introduce some rationality" into the idea. This was a reference to a Senate change, unacceptable to the House, that would allow each local governing body in the state to ignore the holiday.

While, he said, not many would do this, they ought to have that "flexibility."

Asked if the House version of a holiday honoring the visit of Pope John Paul II was irrational, Bulger said, "I would not... say it as explicitly."

If the impasse continues, Bulger said, the Senate would back down and accept the House version.

He said there are some communities in the district served by Sen. Robert D. Wetmore, DBarre, that do not want school called off Monday. Wetmore filed the amendment which would allow communities to waive the provisions of the special holiday.

Also, Bulger said, the Worcester city manager has complained that the holiday would cost $150,000 to $200,000. Bulger said he did not know what those expenses might involve. Sen. Daniel J. Foley, D-Worcester, said these would be extra costs for hospital, police and other expenses.

An aide to Gov. Edward J. King said the original holiday bill did not call for overtime pay rates for those who work on that day.

The much-revised bill flew through the House, without debate, at 11 a.m. but was amended later in the Senate. The House would not accept the changes, and that was where things stood overnight, with a conference committee from both branches seeking a compromise.

Treasury may 'coin' dollar bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The dollar bill could become a thing of the past and tomorrow's money might be made of plastic if Congress follows the recommendations released Tuesday by a Carter administration task force on money.

The task force suggested that the government begin replacing the paper dollar with the new Susan B. Anthony dollar coin and, later, with 52 bills.

It also suggested that Congress consider eliminating the half-dollar coin, making pennies out of aluminum alloy if copper prices rise too high and urged a study of using plastic in future currency.

Possible elimination of the dollar bill was immediately attacked by Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of the House Banking subcommittee on consumer affairs. Annunzio told a hearing that he would "do everything within my power to keep the dollar bill in circulation."

Rose Kennedy hospitalized

BOSTON — Kennedy family matriarch Rose Kennedy, described by her doctor as "a tough old gal," was operated on Wednesday for removal of a section of intestine that was damaged by a hernia.

"The operation went well," her doctors said in a statement issued after more than two hours of surgery.

Mrs. Kennedy, 89, the mother of two senators and a president, entered New England Baptist Hospital on Tuesday complaining of nausea.

Dr. Russell S. Boles, a gastroenterologist who is one of her regular physicians, discovered the hernia at 4 a.m. Wednesday, and she underwent surgery about five hours later.

Ex-reverend rapist denied bail

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A former minister convicted of raping a young girl has returned to jail after being free on bail since early this year.

Former Rev. Roy Leo's appeal was rejected about a month ago, and last Friday the state Supreme Judicial Court revoked his bail.

He surrendered himself Tuesday to Hampshire County House of Correction officials. It was not clear whether the court had approved his request to serve his sentence in that jail or in Walpole state prison, to which he was originally sentenced.

Leo had served 11 months of a six-to-10 year sentence. State corrections policy ordinarily entitles a prisoner to consideration for parole after two-thirds of a term has been served, meaning Leo might have little more than three years to serve.

No nukes!

Brown woos New Hampshire with promise to stop Seabrook

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. says that if he is elected president he will keep nuclear power plants now being built, including the controversial Seabrook station, from going into operation.

Brown, an unannounced candidate in New Hampshire's lead-off presidential primary next February, is billing himself as the only presidential contender flatly against nuclear power.

"I believe Seabrook is a mistake because it's neither economically or environmentally sound," Brown said in a recent telephone interview. "It's obvious that the people of New Hampshire would be far better served if that plant is not brought into operation and the funds and site used for something more sensible."

The plant has been the focal point of the anti-nuclear movement in America. More than 2,000 persons have been arrested at the plant's construction site during the past five years.

"I oppose the licensing of all new plants and would attempt to see that plants that have not been licensed are not brought on line," Brown said.

Those plants that are already licensed should be "phased out as soon as timely and responsible alternatives are available," he said.

Brown cautiously tempered his promise by noting that federal and state law would hamper his plan.

"I realize that a president only has so much power and a dramatic switch such I propose must have the support of the people and Congress," Brown said. "But the American people are going reject nuclear power when their government gives them a viable alternative," he added.

The 41-year-old Democrat says his plan would require a tremendous investment in conservation, hydro, solar and geothermal power "and a host of other energy inititives.

"A sober choice must be made between addiction to nuclear power and a more sensible set of alternatives...more compatible for a secure future for our country," he said.

In the case of Seabrook, Brown says he doesn't see a problem in finding an alternative source of non-nuclear power for New England.

"I don't see a problem, particularly if we can develop a policy with Canada to share some of their hydro-electric power," Brown said.

Anti-nuclear activists, who might be expected to jump on Brown's presidential bandwagon, are cautious about supporting Brown based on his claim.

Many say they've "heard the promises before" and point to a speech by President Jimmy Carter during the 1976 presidential campaign. Shortly after being nominated, Carter told a New Hampshire audience that nuclear plants should be built "where people don't live; where the environment will not be destroyed and with the reactor core beneath the ground."

"He made promises and I have a record to back up my claims," Brown said of Carter's record. "I signed the toughest anti-nuclear law in the country and I haven't seen any other prospective nominees in either party come even close to my record on nuclear power."

California has two nuclear power plants currently generating electricity and Brown takes credit for stopping three others.

If it's sick to love a pen, then the world's going crazy.

It happened to secretaries first. Then lawyers, bookkeepers, waitresses, cabbies, housewives, and businessmen succumbed to the beauty of our Pilot Razor Point and Fineliner pens.

Some people felt it was sick to get so emotionally involved with our pens. But is it really so crazy to love a Pilot Razor Point pen that writes with a sharp smooth line and costs a mere 79¢? Is it nuts to flip over its unique little metal collar that smartly helps to keep its point from going squish?

If it is crazy, it's going to surprise a whole lot of people. In fact, we understand that Pilot Razor Point even has what it takes to score extra points with football players.

It also comes to our attention that many coaches are fans of the Pilot Fineliner. Along with all the other Razor Point features, the 69¢ Pilot Fineliner has the strength and drive to go through carbons.

It's hard to resist a pen that holds the line like a Pilot.

...aim for Senate accountability

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Ten Veteran's Service Organization members who were elected Tuesday night by commuters to the Undergraduate Student Senate said yesterday their main concern is holding student government accountable for its financial dealings.

Walter Laughlin, VSO Vice President and one of the new senators, said the student governments' accounting system is "screwing everyone up" and that they should be "held accountable for what they spend."

Senator Paul Withers, a student who also serves as VSO advisor, cited the upcoming Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden speeches sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, as an example of their claim.

Withers said that DVP is not letting students know the true cost of Fonda's appearance. DVP's estimated program cost, he said, is nearly $7000 too low. Withers said DVP quoted him $2785 as the cost of the appearance while his estimates are about $10,000.

DVP vice-Chairman Howard Goldman last night estimated total program costs to be $7,000, "at the most."

Goldman said if $1 admission fees are charged, total expenses will be lowered to approximately $2,800. An audience of 4,200 is expected.

Withers said VSO senators plan to protest the $1 admission fee that DVP plans to charge students. He said this is in violation of the DVP constitution and only a senate vote can suspend the rule. The senators will attempt to block DVP's request for the suspension at the senate meeting Wednesday night, he said.

"We want people to know what they're spending," Laughlin said. "Why draw up a constitution if they're going to change the rules."

"Our complaint is strictly financial," said Kevin Keegan, another new senator and VSO member. While VSO does not object to Fonda's speaking on campus, they do object to the students being required to pay for her speech, he said.

The new senators cited student apathy as a major problem here. Laughlin said he wanted to get the veterans together with students. Their diversified experiences, he said, could be very useful to the university as a whole.

"We plan to promote things for the entire university community," he said. "We're veterans up here, and commuters down in the senate."

The other VSO members elected to the senate are Jeff Barcus, Joseph Collins, John Flaherty, Don Long, Rod Reinhold, Neal Sullivan, and Paul VanSchynedel.

About 100 new student senators were installed in office last night after being elected Monday and Tuesday by 11.3 percent of the UMass undergraduate population.

Senators are listed according to the number of votes they received.

In Northeast Residential Area: from Crabtree, Warren Childs; from Hamlin, Kevin LeClaire; from Leach, Cornelius Andres; from Lewis, Tricia Vonchesi; from Mary Lyon, Beth Rosenberg; from Thatcher, Mike Jingozian.

In the Central area: from Baker, Steven Etkin, Susan Kennedy; Brett, Joel Finnard; Butterfield, Dennis Doherty; from Chadbourne, Dorothy Butler; from Gorman, Dave Powers; from Greenough, Jim McBratney; from Van Meter North, Paul Garofoli; Van Meter South, Liz Flanagan. The house councils or area governments will decide the tie in Wheeler dormitory, and one position in Gorman.

In the Orchard Hill area: from Dickenson, Tim Petter, Lawrence Wright; from Field, Michael Melbourne; from Grayson, Steve Pineo, Adam Peck; from Webster, Ken Moore, Deb Feinstein.

Julie Robertson was elected to the Board of Governors.

There were 26 commuter senators, 15 of whom were incumbents. They are: Jill Tregor, Anthony Johnson, Timothy Condon, Leon Thomas, Paul Van Schyndel, Don Long, James Lewis, Linda Geary, Pat Hart; Kevin O'Leary; Roberta Perkins, John Szewczyk, Kevin Keegan, Bill Fitzgerald, Dave Routhier, John Flaherty, Paul Withers, Paul Malumphy, Bari Nisin, Peter Egan, Joel Weissman, Joseph Collins, Richard Tuttle, Micheal Ferrigno, Ron Reinhold, Michael Cohen, Sharon Israel, Walter laughlin, James L. Blue, Marea Wexler, Allan Huntley.

Four write-in candidates that were elected are: John Rosner, Jeff Barkus, Neal Sullivan, Seth Ninkoff. Also S. Leonard, R. Moran, and M. Cohen were elected to the Board of Governors.

Southwest officials declare quiet hours

By ELLEN TUCHMAN
Collegian Staff

Southwest Residential Area officials have distributed a quiet hours policy to be effective from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m. throughout Southwest, but say they have no means to enforce it.

Since the university library closed, Heads of Residnece and their supervisors have met numerous times to develop a noise-control policy to best meet student needs.

Melton Miller, Master/Director of Southwest Residential College, said in a news release issued this week, "What is being asked for in this request is that we all respect the right of others to have a quiet palce to study and to sleep." The twelve hour quiet hours period was decided upon by the H.R.s, Melton Miller and his assistant directors.

Miller said many students wrongly assume they must leave their dormitory if they want to study. This policy returns the basic right to study in their dorms to students, he said.

H.R.s said they are leaving the question of just what constitutes noise up to students.

"This will be an evolutionary process...enforcement will start with the grossest offenders," Miller said. The crux of the policy is consideration of others and H.R.s hope that it will succeed on this basis.

Steve Finnegan and Dave Magliaro, H.R.s for Moore House, said they feel the policy enables students to take part in establishing the corridor atmosphere they desire.

One H.R., who requested his name be withheld, said he doesn't believe the job of the H.R. is to "kick people out of the dorm if they are noisy." According to the present housing contract, only excessive noise would be classified as "endangering behavior."

The responses of Southwest area residents varied. Jeff Walker, an R.A. from Cance dormitory , said that students might rebel against the policy and make even more noise than usual. He said 12 hours is too long a period to expect a restriction of activities. Although students have a right to study, they also need a release afterwards. The policy denies this need, he said.

One R.A. who wished to remain anonymous, said, "Quiet hours as a set time is ridiculous and hard to enforce, even though there is a need for quiet. Students just have to respect each other."

Susan Moyer, a junior from Moore House, said, "I think this policy should be upheld--it's merely a demonstration of courtesy toward one's neighbor." Another student added, "Since the library is closed people are forced to study in their rooms. The reason to be here is to study and if this can't be done effectively, then there is no point in remaining here."

One freshman said he believes the entire area would remain reasonably quiet without specific hours instituted. David Goldman, angry about the library closing, said he feels the forms are not conducive to studying regardless of the quiet hours. He said he is opposed to any policy of this nature.

Two students from Thoreau said quiet hours are consideration hours and this "policy" has always been followed by their fellow residents. They said they believe the policy is geared to the towers.

Kennedy and feminism

Senator gives women's issues high priority

By MONICA McKENNA
Collegian Staff

Senator Edward Kennedy has been a prominent public figure for several years now. His name carries an aura which borders on the legendary; his politics and personality provoke diverse reactions—often he has been accused of hanging his career on his family name, yet his record suggests that his political sensitivities reach deeper than this would imply. As speculation increases over his possible run for the presidential nomination, it seems relevant to examine his political ideals and intentions. For example, his claim to be a champion of women's rights is important in its implications for feminists and in the illumination it may cast on other aspects of his policies.

Women today are faced with a semi-resolved situation. Many women still encounter several types of discrimination. Kennedy appears to be aware of the problems and proposes a plan of action to alleviate some of them.

Kennedy has always been involved with women on both personal and political levels. His political machine has never been totally male oriented. Mary Murtagh, until her death earlier this year, was an important influence in his policies. He has recently appointed a full time aide for women's issues. Since he has always had one of the most effective organizations on Capitol Hill, the role of women staff-members like Irene Emsemn, Chris Birch, and Mary Falconton is an important one. Tom Southwick of Kennedy's Washington Press Office said that women's issues held a high priority status in Kennedy's affairs and would continue to do so should he run for National office.

His actions would appear to validate this statement. In 1976, he voted against the Packwood Amendment—which would have eliminated restrictions on abortions—but he has since altered his political stand on the issue. Though he is personally opposed to abortion, he has moved that there be federal funding of legalized abortions. His Health Care Plan (recently estimated to cost $29 billion annually) would undoubtedly provide better treatment for all women.

Kennedy was the Floor Leader for the E.R.A., which has so far failed to attain the necessary support from 38 states for national ratification. Many of his policies reflect his awareness of feminist issues. The national plan drawn up during International Women's Year by women's organizations contained 26 resolutions on ways to end sexual discrimination in employment, education, marital property ownership and other areas. Some of these, such as abortion, have been included in his political platform despite their controversial nature.

In the past 25 years the number of American women employed in paying jobs doubled—the figure was estimated at 39 million last year. The proportion of women in major professions has risen, though the figures are still low. In 1977 there were 90 female mayors and 685 legislators in the U.S. 8 percent of the country's judges and lawyers were female. Kennedy has expressed particular interest in encouraging larger numbers of women to pursue professions in law.

In his recent appointment of Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, he nominated the first woman judge now working for the federal courts in Massachusetts. Southwick also mentioned Kennedy's speech on the need for more women scientists, especially in the fields of engineering, chemistry and physics. He has taken a stand against budget cuts for the Women's Jobs Program. To date, his actions speak as loudly as his words.

Unlike his brothers, Ted Kennedy seems to respect the legislative processes of government; delight in senate proceedings; thus, his advocation that there be more women in both House and Senate enhances the claim that he favors women in politics. Were he to become President, the female viewpoint might well be more readily considered and understood.

Though not always in agreement with many radical feminists in America today, Kennedy respects their views and recognizes that there is a need for such activists in the current climate of opinion, according to Southwick. Southwick also stressed that Governor King's attitude towards the Women's Movement is not shared by Kennedy, and though the two have worked together in the past on political and economic issues, King's firing of the Commission On the Status of Women was his own decision.

Thus, Kennedy's active and controversial style has led him to attack giants in business and government, to criticize figures like Nixon and Carter, and to propose schemes such as the Health Care Plan, and Famine Relief. Yet since his appeal so often transcends ideology, he manages to retain a massive body of support.

His actions concerning the Women's Movement seem to indicate a realization that the female role can be many and various. It may also demonstrate that this astute senator is acutely aware of current political opinion.

Though some actions may be mere vote winners, they nevertheless constitute "action" for the women of America.

Carter, Kennedy to attend party fund-raiser

WASHINGTON — Sounding more and more like rival candidates, President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy are offering a preview of what it would be like if they clash for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

With their rhetoric heating up, the two men planned appearances, timed not to overlap, at a Democratic Party fund-raiser Wednesday.

Kennedy, showing every sign of moving steadily toward a presidential bid, planned to appear at a poolside reception preceding a $1,000-a-plate dinner sponsored by the Democratic National Committee.

The senator told dinner organizers that he would skip the meal.

Carter was the featured dinner speaker. Party spokesmen said more than 1,000 tickets were sold for the event.

House votes in Panama canal treaties bill

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House passed and sent to President Carter on yesterday a bill to carry out final details of the treaties that will eventually give control of the Panama Canal to Panama.

House members had turned down a similar measure last week. But they approved the bill 232 to 188 after backers of the treaties argued that defeat might bring chaos in Panama. The Senate approved the legislation Tuesday.

The treaties, which take effect Monday, will end U.S. possession of the Panama Canal, which slices across the Central American country and connects the Pacific Ocean with the Caribbean.

Carter and Panamanian leaders already had signed the treaties and they had been ratified by the Senate.

The bill, now headed for certain signing by Carter, establishes a new U.S.-controlled commission that will operate the canal until, under the treaties, the Panamanian government takes full control of the waterway on Dec. 31, 1999.

House defeat of the canal legislation last week was an embarrassment to Carter, who is sending Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to Panama on Monday for ceremonies marking the end of U.S. possession of the canal.

Prior to Wednesday's vote, Carter personally telephoned treaty opponents and House leaders, appealing for approval of the bill.

In debate before Wednesday's final vote, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill told his colleagues the canal is regarded by Latin Americans as "the apple of American imperialism" and urged them to approve the bill as the final step in carrying out the treaties.

"We'll keep our word," O'Neill said. "I think it's going to be a friendlier Western Hemisphere."

The bill's floor manager, Rep. John M. Murphy, D-N.Y., told the House that rejection of the bill could spark violence in Panama.

"A timebomb is ticking away ..." Murphy said. "We have one week before we might face chaos in Panama."

Rep. Robert Bauman, R-Md., who had been a leading opponent of the bill, told the House the measure had to be passed to protect the U.S. rights to run the canal and station troops there until the waterway becomes Panamanian property at the end of the century.

But Rep. Floyd Spence, RS.C., appealed to the House to stand fast against the bill.

"We're trying to appease our enemies," Spence contended. "We have given in and we have been pushed around by everybody and we invite more of the same."

Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, also urged defeat of the measure, saying: "With Soviet combat troops in the Caribbean, do we dare give away the Panama Canal? Those Russian troops are training Marxist terrorists all over the Caribbean."

The treaties turn most of the Panama Canal Zone over to Panama at the stroke of midnight Monday. Other canal property will be turned over to Panama in stages, concluding with the transfer of the canal itself at the end of the century.

Vets to vets: Fonda has rights

VSO should comment on public platform

As a Vietnam veteran I feel it is necessary to comment on the actions currently being taken by the Veterans Service Organization on behalf of the veterans here at UMass.

Our involvment in Vietnam and the ensuing strife back in the states left me with many strong convictions. The most important of which surrounds the issue of Freedom of Speech. I learned from the counter-intelligence ploys of our government that, if you can effectively manipulate or outright deny platforms for Free Speech, then constitutional rights, the flag and any other patriotic symbol you can think of serves no other purpose than kindling paper.

William Collins

We have a right as students to comment on the Fonda/Hayden appearance, but to do it on the playform made available to everyone – the question and answer period at the end of the speeches.

Don't hide behind the shield of a "special interest" group with the support of the National Veterans of Foreign War and the American Legion to build a case for special handling in this instance.

Rather than alienating people by the "power of the group", we as individuals can be much more effective by setting a moral example of the sinfulness of War.

We MUST educate the students of today of the mistakes of the past. Otherwise, we condemn them and those afterwards to even more tragic consequences.

William F. Collins is a Collegian guest columnist

Didn't we learn a lesson from 'Nam?

To those professional ex-servicemen who oppose the Sept. 30 speeches by Tom Hayden and Jane Fonda at UMass: these spokesmen at the Veterans Service Organization presume to speak for all us Vietnam era vets and the student body. But their heads are in the sand. Their egos are helping them forget what the rest of the country learned during those years.

They were the footsoldiers for Corporate America, the pawns in the politics of greedy, chauvinistic old men who continue to rule this country. The myth died awhile ago.

Where were you guys then?

The Watergate tapes, the Pentagon Papers and the Shah

of Iran were testament to the deceit at government's highest levels.

Sending men to Vietnam was criminal, and many of us were deeply affected by repurcussions of those times. But the freedom to express opinions overwhelmed a president twice (Johnson dropped out, Nixon resigned, both in disgrace), and will survive until big government and big business are afraid of revolution. It is then we will all be pawns.

If for no other reason, Jane Fonda should be accorded Distinguished Visitor's status for her complicity in China Syndrome, which presented the stupidity of nuclear power in exaggeratedly accurate terms. Logic would make it seem that these same jingoistic veterans, "spokesmen", believe that Three Mile Island didn't happen, or that it wasn't serious, or that the "spokesmen" for the authorities levelled with us.

David Reid is a Collegian guest columnist.

The DVP should present all sides

Charges brought by UMass veterans last week to discredit the scheduled appearances of Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden on September 30, were based on their conceptions that the team are "known subversives" whose appearances would violate an existing state statute preventing such; raises some interesting questions about freedom of advocacy and the Distinguished Visitor's Program itself.

Jim Moran

In the past, persons speaking on campus in connection with the program have tended to be speakers with a political philosophy on the left side of the spectrum. Consider some of the people who have spoken here, as taken from a list of DVP speakers since 1970: ecologist Barry Commoner (1973), civil rights activist Shirley DuBois (1970), Communist Party leader Gus Hall (1972), socialist-author Michael Harrington (1971), former Vice-President and U.S. Senator Hubert Humphrey (1970), Chicago Seven lawyer William Kuntsler (1971), Senator George McGovern (1971), and radical author-teacher Howard Zinn (1971).

About the only right-of-center political speeches were given by rocket scientist Werner Von Braun (1973) and a debate with James Reston (1973). Now, while I have no objection to an obvious leftist bias, I do think that those persons responsible for the selection of DVP speakers should be mindful of the fact that there are those individuals who will take them to task for such arrangements. The DVP could, I'm sure, find some very credible and intelligent speakers of conservative persuasion. I submit the names of journalist William F. Buckley, economist Milton Freidman, or libertarian David Brudney.

After all, just because most stupid people are conservative, does not mean that all conservative people are stupid.

If the Vets here are concerned with protecting the integrity of the Vets who "gave their lives and were wounded and maimed in support of the long-standing ideals and beliefs of this nation," as they said, then perhaps they may consider that one of those "long-standing" ideals is the basic tenet of freedom of expression, in accordance with the First Amendment.

Insofar as Fonda and Hayden are concerned, maybe the Vets ought to consider that if it weren't for people like this husband-wife pair, we might still be in Southeast Asia today, and that their buddies would still be the casualties on the six o'clock news.

Furthermore, Chapter 264, the state statute regarding criminal penalties for the existance of subversive persons and organizations, are most blatantly in collusion with the principles this nation was founded upon. If the Sons of Liberty hadn't been subversive, we might today find ourselves under British autonomy.

One major weakness of this law, based on the Smith Act of 1940, is the fact that it provides for no objective test if criterium as to what constitutes a "subversive" person or organization. At what point, for instance, does mere advocacy translate into actions which threaten the government or create a situation under which the government would be in danger? The law doesn't spell this out. In addition, it has been superceded by more modern Supreme Court decisions and Congressional legislation

As to Fonda's speaking here, one might argue that since she met with the "enemy," in Hanoi, she is a qualified treasonist. However, since the Congress did not declare war upon Vietnam, there can be no argument that she betrayed the sanctioned interests of our government.

Those veterans who feel that Fonda's anti-imperialist philosophy contradicts their beliefs about the Vietnam War, have every right to stage a counter-demonstration and to invite their own speakers. But they do have the right to prevent others who may wish to hear Fonda and Hayden's views on the issues of today.

'The DVP could, I'm sure, find some very credible and intelligent speakers of conservative persuasion.'

MassPIRG makes fall plans for anti-nuclear energy march

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group plans to turn student support for the anti-nuclear movement into an active energy campaign statewide, Malcolm Quint , staff coordinator for the organization's Amherst chapter said yesterday. The student-run organization's next effort will be a Safe Energy Walk scheduled for Oct. 14.

"The Amherst route will travel from the Montague nuclear power plant to North Amherst, hopefully passing plenty of fall foliage, said Susan Birmingham, the MassPIRG staffer who is planning the walk-a-thon.

"We'll have people pledging money for each mile walked and set up educational booths along the route," she said. "We're planning a route away from nuclear power and into the sun," added MassPIRG staffer John Pepi.

"Popular support for the anti-nuclear movement has flowed back into our local projects," said Quint. The energy level at New York last Sunday showed me that the public is concerned about issues that affect their community."

MassPIRG has targeted energy as its primary concern this year. Besides chartering buses to the September 23 rally in New York City and sponsoring the Safe Energy Walks around the state, the group has involved itself in educating local communities about the Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Companies' (MMWEC) attempt to purchase a larger share in the Seabrook nuclear plant.

"So far we're battling 1,000 in the local area," said Quint. "We've convinced the local power boards in Chicopee, South Hadley and Greenfield not to purchase their share. this type of community education is what MassPIRG is all about."

He said other projects the UMass chapter will tackle this year involve reform in small claims courts, examination of water supplies for potentially hazardous wastes (21 community water systems have been found contaminated, according to student board chairman Ken Ward) and opposition to a plan to divert the Connecticut River into the Quabbin Reservoir supply.

"The student activist movement is like grass under a roadway," said Quint. "They can pave it over but a few sprouts of grass will always break through, if it's left alone the road will return to foliage in a short time."

The UMass chapter office and Consumer Action Center are located in 423B of the Student Union.

Fall foliage makes early showing

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The message is already out to outof-state tourists who each fall jam New Hampshire's highways to see the state's famous fall foliage.

Come on up, says Jack Sargent, chief of the state Forest Fire Service.

"Leaf peepers" are getting an early look at brilliant colors this year, thanks to a frost last week.

Foliage in the Pittsburg-Connecticut Lakes area, in the northernmost part of the state, already is at its peak of brilliance, about one week ahead of time, according to Sargent.

Foliage in the Lancaster-Littleton area is nearing its height of brilliance, and the colors extend into Franconia Notch State Park and as far south as Lake Winnipesaukee, he said Tuesday.

"Sharp cold is only one of several factors involved in the change of color in leaves from the lush green of summer to the bright red, yellow and gold of autumn," said Sargent.

Cold weather seems to single out red maples, particularly if they are not robust or are damaged in some way, he said.

S. African Prime Minister:

Racist law open for change

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — In a startling turnabout, Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha has suggested changing laws prohibiting interracial sex and marriage — pillars of South Africa's apartheid policy.

Botha discussed both laws during a congress of the ruling National Party in Cape Town on Tuesday. His remarks were published here yesterday. It was the first time a leader of the white-minority regime even questioned the statutes.

The prime minister skirted the issue of whether the laws should be scrapped entirely, saying only his government was open to suggestions for "improving" the legislation but said, in his opinion, mixed marriages were undesirable.

But he told the congress no law should be regarded as a "holy cow" and said that he would not tolerate laws which insulted people in South Africa.

Botha's remarks, cautious as they were, surprised critics of the regime's race segregation policies.

"It is remarkable that Mr. Botha is even thinking about this," said Kowie Marais, spokesman on justice matters for the Liberal Progressive Federal Party.

A report in the Rand Daily Mail, a critic of apartheid, said "highly placed government sources" indicated legal groundwork was to be prepared to scrap all laws regulating social behavior on the basis of race.

"At all times," Botha told the congress, "we will consider positive suggestions about any act. There is no such thing as standing by a law whether it is good or bad."

While he reiterated he personally opposed mixed marriages in South Africa, Botha declared: "I concede there is a problem where people really love each other and wanted to get married."

Both the Immorality Act and the Mixed Marriages Act have been cornerstones of the Nationalist Party, in power since 1948, to maintain the 4.5 million white minority's authority over the country's 19 million blacks.

The Immorality Act — prohibiting sexual relations between whites and blacks — was first made law in 1927. The act was expanded in 1950 to prohibit sexual relations between whites and all nonwhites.

The Mixed Marriages Act became law in 1949 and prohibited marriages across the color line. Marriages between white South Africans and non-whites outside South Africa were declared null and void within the country, in an amendment to the act passed in 1968. This amendment meant those mixed race couples married outside South Africa could be prosecuted under the Immorality Act if they returned here.

Nixon, Ford not invited to opening

BOSTON (AP) — The nation's two surviving ex-presidents apparently aren't going to get a chance to honor their predecessor when the John F. Kennedy Library opens next month.

The Boston Globe reported that Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford won't be invited to the opening celebration.

The newspaper said the official reason for not inviting the two is that the Oct. 20 opening in Boston is not being planned as a celebrity gala, but as a gathering of the late president's official, political and personal family and friends.

But the Globe also said there were reports the family thought Nixon's presence at the opening would be inappropriate because of his role in Watergate. Family members concerned about having to explain such a position — and perhaps ignite a controversy that might win sympathy for him — confined the guest list to people with connections to President Kennedy, the newspaper said.

An exception was made for President Carter.

WIZARD OF JOBS MEETS MAGIC PAN
STARRING JAN DeLEMMA

from the Big Apple Times:
"Jan plays a marvelous role as a bright, but bewildered college co-ed. As a recent graduate of the Restaurant Hospitality Department, Jan begins an exciting adventure through the career days with the wonderful Wizard of Jobs as her guide. Lots of suspense!"

from the LA Star:
"...Magic Pan has found an energetic, hard-working cast of newcomers who have no problem holding their own with the veteran Jan DeLemma. The show has something for everyone."

from the Chicago Breeze:
"Magic Pan sets the stage for the Wizard of Jobs to deliver the performance of a lifetime ...don't miss it when it comes to your campus..."

The Magic Pan

SHOW TIME:

More information for "The Wizard of Jobs Meets Magic Pan" is available at the Hotel, Travel & Restaurant Department. The only performance will be October 2. Don't delay, this is a one-time engagement.

Women booters down UConn Huskies, 6-1

By ROB EMMONS
Collegian Staff

The Women's varsity soccer squad continued its winning ways yesterday, dumping opponent UConn 6-1. UMass started its first home game somewhat cautiously, but once they started, scoring the goals came regularly.

Margie Anderson broke the ice twelve minutes into the game, tucking one inside the opposite post from the left wing. Nancy Feldman added another goal later in the half of a beautiful cross by Angie Caouette, and UMass led at halftime 2-0.

Not until Nina Holmstrom had stung UConn for a third time did the visitors score the initial goal of their season. They failed to muster much more offense (save for a breakaway attempt squelched by Kelley Tuller) as UMass took firm control. Maddy Mangini and Elaine Contant found the net and Holmstrom added her second before the bloodbath was over. UMass fired forty-two shots to the visitors' eighteen.

Golfers finish 5th in NE's

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

With a tremendous second round comeback, the UMass men's golf team finished fifth in a field of 37 teams, in the 45th annual New England Intercollegiate Golf Championship played Monday and Tuesday at Taconic and Waubeka Springs Country Clubs in Williamstown, Mass.

The Minutemen, despite shooting 326 in Monday's action at Taconic, fired a 302 Tuesday at Waubeka Springs to jump up 12 places in the standings and finish fifth behind champion Salem State (603), Central Connecticut (605), Williams College (625), and Rhode Island (626).

Mike Thibeault of Central Connecticut won medalist honors, firing a 148, Bob Reardon of Providence was runnerup with a 149, and Dean Martin of Salem State took third with a 150. There were five players tied at 151. Marty Hunt and Tony Kelley lead the Minutemen, both shooting identical rounds of 83 and 74 for a two-round total of 157. The rest of the squad finished as follows: Bob Gladchuck 85-74-159, Mark Duggan 79-80-159, and Steven Midttun 81-80-161.

UMass coach Ed Vlach accounting for the high first round scores said: "the greens at Taconic had just been worked on two weeks before the tournament and they were rough in spots, causing some errant putting." Vlach, although not satisfied with the club's first round performance, was impressed and proud of the way his squad hung in there and came back to play some fine golf. I was also extremely proud of Tony Kelley, because of the fine golf he played under rough circumstances." The circumstances Kelley had to face involved the theft of his clubs and golf shoes the night before the tourney. Kelley had to use Vlach's clubs and shoes and still performed well. "Tony is to be commended for that," added Vlach.

The Minutemen go into their next tournament, the Toski Intercollegiate Tournament with a lot of confidence in both their game and themselves. The Toski Tournament, the last one of the fall season for UMass, will be played on the home course, Hickory Ridge C.C. in South Amherst Sunday and Monday. The tourney will involve some 25 teams and will provide some tough competition for the Minutemen, many of the same clubs as in the New Englands.

Harriers fall victim to Friars and Crimson

By JANE WOLFMAN

This was one of those meets the UMass mens cross country team would rather forget as they were defeated by both Harvard and Providence College Tuesday afternoon at Boston's Franklin Park. Providence's dominance was obvious with final scores PC 21, Harvard 39, and UMass 69.

"We are inexperienced," said Harrier coach Ken O'Brien. "But that wasn't an excuse, we really lacked aggressiveness. We weren't ready mentally to put forth that kind of an effort," O'Brien added.

After the first mile it became clear that the Minutemen were not even in the race as Providence and Harvard went on to take the top seven spots with UMass sophomore Paul Beaulieu the first to finish for UMass in the eighth spot.

Junior Kevin Molteni finished next for the harriers in twelth place and senior captain Rick Walls placed fifteenth overall. Also placing for the Minutemen were Steven McDougall and Paul Kirks. Providence All-American Ray Tracey won the five mile event with a time of 23:52.

"We don't run that well in the beginning of the season," said Walls. "Teams that beat us in the beginning of the season, we can usually run evenly with or beat them by post season," he added.

Saturday the Harriers travel to Villanova to take on Villanova, Rutgers, Pitt, George Washington, St. Bonaventure, and Duquesne, in an Eastern Eight meet. "We're looking forward to it," said Walls. "All of those teams will be in the IC4A's and we'll be getting a feel of what they have and what we'll have to expect."

Stickers host Keene St.

The UMass stickers, with a record of 1-0, take on the Keene State Owls today at home at 3 p.m. on the NOPE hockey field. Although the Minutewomen shutout the Owls with a score of 5-0 last year, coach Pamela Hixon is not sure what to expect from Keene State and their new coach in UMass' second game of the season.

Coach Hixon plans to stick with the same starting line-up, both offensive and defensive, that was used in defeating Westfield in an away game last Saturday. UMass' strategy is to play their own game and keep attacking. To do this Hixon hopes to bring the ball up the right side of the field, where key players O'Niel and Strong are positioned, and crossover to the left when in scoring distance.

The JV team will be following up the varsity with a home game against Franklin Pierce at 4:15.

Booters blank Ephmen, 4-0

By DAVID BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Tony M. Dias scored what turned out to be the only goal UMass would need 15 minutes into the first half of yesterday's soccer game as the Minutemen blanked Williams College 4-0 for their first season victory.

Dias was joined in the scoring column by senior Scott Cooper, freshman Gus Martins and sophomore Denis Walsh. It was Dias' fourth goal of the year, the first for the other three Minutemen.

UMass' offense domianted most of the game and when there was a let-up in that department, the defense took over. Williams directed 20 shots toward Minuteman goalie Mark Marilla while UMass peppered the Ephmen's goal with 28 volleys. Coach Russ "Cap" Kidd praised Marilla's performance saying, "When we were down, he was up."

UMass applied pressure from the opening minutes of the game and looked like they were ready to set up a training camp in the Williams end of the field. This scenario continued with only a few interruptions to the UMass end until Cap's Kickers scored at 15:05 into the game.

Greg Omasta started the play with a throw-in from the sidelines to the right of the opponents goals. The pass was handled by Cooper, who directed the ball out front to Dias. Dias positioned himself in a small crowd and booted the ball off the bounce past the goalie's shoulder into the right of the net.

Minutes later Dias looked like he was going in alone for a second goal after making a steal at midfield, but the Williams goalie, Doug Orr, came out and brought Dias down. Dias and the UMass bench both thought he was tripped. The referee didn't.

Forward Wayne Moran set up the next UMass goal by drawing the defense to himself 10 yards away to the left of goal, then feeding Cooper with a soft pass out in front. Cooper wasted no time in sliding one along the ground to the goalie's left. That goal came at 24:25 and concluded the scoring for the first half.

Williams appeared to get itself organized in the second half and began to apply some pressure. Marilla was called upon to make a save early when Ephman Neal McLaughlin got by the UMass defense at midfield and scrambled in alone. A slightly misfired shot from 15 yards out was handled neatly by Marilla.

UMass upped it's lead to 3-0 at 14:22 when Moran (two assists) danced down the right side and connected with rookie forward Martins from the corner. Martins took the ball about 12 yards away to the right of goal and tucked one, unmolested, past the diving keeper.

For the last five minutes of play Williams was fortunate if it even touched the ball.

We were in control most of the game," Marilla said afterwards. Tri-captain Mike St. Martin said he thought the team worked the ball "pretty well" and he was "definitely satisfied" with the win, "But we didn't play our strongest game."

"At points I thought we looked brilliant," Coach Kidd said, "and at times like we were playing out of a fog. Our restarts still leave a lot to be desired."

Sports grab bag

Hot on the heels of Mark Marchand's earth-shattering "Wondering If..." column, I offer my little collection of potpourri.

Government intervention into professional sport began years ago when baseball was foolishly given exemption from anti-trust laws thus allowing it to become a monopoly. Now the federal courts have found it in their power to once again pervade the realm of sport and appoint themselves as the authority on player compensation.

Judge Robert Carter's ruling that Seattle return Lonnie Shelton and Vinnie Johnson along with $450,000 to the New York Knicks and in essence allow the Knicks to have signed Marvin Webster free from compensation is stepping about beyond the courts' legal boundaries.

In effect it reduces the power of the league commissioner, Larry O'Brien to that of a public relations man. O'Brien should be commended for sticking to his guns and ordering Shelton and Johnson to stay in Seattle, after all, it is his league to control, isn't it?

Whether this ruling will have any effect on the San Diego compensation to Portland for the Clippers signing of Bill Walton, a deal in which I believe San Diego got rooked, remains to be seen.

One of the true aspects of sport is to be a model of consistency, so let's hear it for baseball's king of the hill Bowie "the Boob" Kuhn who time and time again has led us to believe that he suffers from grave mental deficiencies.

Bowie's latest adventure with the Spaceman, Bill Lee, has the commissioner being opposed by the American Civil Liberties Union. Sometimes you just can't win.

It's a shame that it took the UMass athletic brass until 1979 to realize that the ECAC is pretty much a useless organization. UMass should have seen the handwriting on the wall when the league didn't televise a single UMass contest when Julius Erving played here.

As for the ECAC itself, it is my firm belief that by ostracizing the Eastern Eight, the ECAC has begun a slow death. It has been rumored that the Ivy League will receive a TV pact next year as will the Big East conference. If these two groups also pull out of the ECAC, then the conference will be left holding an empty bag and will be nothing but a name.

It is a shame that collegiate sport has come to the point where money and power over-ride the athlete. There was a time when collegiate sport was played for the enjoyment of sport itself, but that time has long since passed.

Although I'm still quite upset about the Celtics release of Curtis Rowe, I must say that the team is finally headed in the right direction. Actually, the team started moving upward as soon as it ridded itself of John Y. Brown.

The additions of Bird and Carr don't need much mention but there is still the question of a playmaking guard. What hurts the Celtics the most in this area is that in order to acquire a solid guard they will have to give up two or more players, since they don't have any personnel available that they could trade one-for-one.

Perhaps the Celts might be able to acquire the likes of Randy Smith who has made public his feelings that he doesn't enjoy his being traded to Cleveland. Maybe former Cavaliers, now Celtics coach Bill Fitch can work out a deal with his former club.

For those fans of Minuteman basketball, you might be glad to know that former UMass star Mark Haymore is alive and well and playing professional ball in Italy.

Pope's visit gives blessed long weekend

By DAVID LACHANCE
Collegian Staff

All classes for Monday, October 1, have been cancelled, Acting Provost Jerry Allen said last night, because of legislation signed last night by Gov. Edward King making Monday a legal holiday for state employees.

Putting aside its worries about overtime expenses, the Massachusetts Legislature finally agreed yesterday that Monday should be a statewide holiday celebrating Pope John Paul II's American arrival.

A compromise bill declaring the holiday received final House and Senate approval yesterday afternoon and required only the signature of Gov. Edward J. King to take effect.

Rep. Michael Flaherty, co-chair of the Judiciary Committee, said that in general, the bill provides a paid holiday for state and local governmental employees and an unpaid holiday for other workers. However, workers in a few essential fields, such as police, firefighters and hospital workers, will not be entitled to the day off but will qualify for time-and-a-half wages.

Allen said only "certain essential employees" at the university would be at their jobs Monday.

There is "no plan at the present time" to make up the missed Monday classes, Allen said.

Because of the holiday, the Collegian will not publish.

UMass checks out in survey

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

First-year students at UMass are adjusting well to their first semester, and agree that the people in their dormitories are friendly, the food is "all right if you're hungry," and one must adjust to the vastness of the campus, according to a recent Collegian survey.

In an oral survey of freshmen in the five residential areas, students said they have, for the msot part, not declared a major. Some said they did not belong to any clubs or groups unless it was an extension of their major, such as theater majors joing the UMass Theater Guild, or an Animal Science major joining the pre-vet club.

The survey showed first-year students are living in the dormitories or residential areas they requested, or were able to switch to once they arrived at school.

A MacKimmie Dormitory theater major said of UMass, "I wanted a big school, but it's scary at first. There are many opportunities you wouldn't have at a smaller school. But, while you have no problem meeting people, it is hard because you never get to see them again. It would be good if there was a way for people with common interests to meet."

An arboriculture major living in Gorman Dormitory said "it is hard getting used to doing so much homework."

A Pierpont Dormitory CASIAC major agreed, "It takes a little time to get used to the size of UMass."

The survey showed first-year students for the msot part had no problems getting requested classes other than Rhetoric because of the major cutback in the department.

But, a Cashin Dormitory CASIAC major said, "I had a lot of trouble getting advice. I was really disappointed because nobody really cared at CASIAC advising. I had to ask my Head of Residence and resident assistants for counseling, before I finally got a hold of my faculty advisor."

Some of the students surveyed said the dining commons food was poor.. But, the MacKimmie theater major said, "I don't think the food could be much better for the great numbers of people they are serving."

A Thatcher Dormitory HRTA major said, "The food is si bad that I lost 15 pounds."

Another problem noted by students surveyed was the difficulty in getting home after evening classes. A Crampton Dormitory Early Childhood Education major, said "The buses do not run often enough at night."

There were no major financial aid problems cited in the survey. However, most of the students surveyed were not receiving financial aid. Many freshmen said it was very difficult to find non-work-study jobs.

An animal science major living in Mary Lyons, an all female dormitory, saod she likes the people in her dormitory. "An all female dorm is great," she said.

Most of the students surveyed were happy with their roommates. But, a Brown Dormitory political science major said, "i don't get along with my roommate too well. I thought they'd try to match people better—we are opposites."

First-year students said that UMass is what they expected and the people have been friendly. They said they are settling into college life.

Women's group remains active

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Although disbanded last year, the Governor's Commission on the Status of Women is active and montioring legislators and legislation affecting women, commission member Floss Frank said this week.

Frank, a UMass rhetoric lecturer, said about 30 still-active members in the officially disbanded commission take political action and lobby on budgets, tax relief and other women-oriented issues.

On April 1, Governor Ed King fired all members of the Dukakis-appointed commission after it criticized his welfare budget and supported state-funded abortions for the poor.

"Since the commission was fired, many negative bills have eaten away its accomplishments and women are moving backward," Frank said.

She said King refused to provide cost of living increases for welfare recipients who, like other persons living on fixed incomes, are hardest hit by inflation. State-funded abortions are no longer available to state employees since King's abortion budget cut, she said.

The commission members will lobby again in 1980 for bills that did not go through this year, including ones that would provide daycare on a sliding fee scale, and health insurance and flexible hours to part-time employees, according to Frank.

She said the commission also wants the Abuse Protection Law amended to enable victims to obtain criminal sanctions against their spouses. The law would also make it mandatory that the state provide support for victims and their children.

One of the commission's major goals this year is to get various women's groups in the state to form a communications network, Frank said. The commission wants to build coalitions to increase women's effectiveness when they organize for change and lobby for political action.

The American Association of University Women, the National Organization of Women, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and the League of Women Voters, are a few of the larger organizations the commission hopes to bring together, Frank said, to build cooperative working relationships. The coalitions would plan strategies to create and implement progressive public policy issues. The commission also welcomes single issue groups.

The commission is raising funds for a Boston office, a telephone, and a part-time executive director and secretary to post mailings to various women's groups and to lobby with state representatives, Frank said.

A fundraising reception scheduled for December 7 in Amherst will honor Margaret Merry and Kitty Dukakis, she said.

Merry, 70, was chairwoman of the disbanded commission, an ex-president of Wheelock College, and an appointee to the State Board of Higher Education. Merry is also actively working to elect Mel King mayor and is supportive of all women's issues, Frank said.

Kitty Dukakis is a member of the Massachusetts Fine Arts Council, which is raising funds for fine arts in the state. She is currently working on a committee interested in a memorial to the Holocaust. Dukakis is also active in women's issues, Frank said.

On December 8, the commission is scheduled to hold an informational meeting in Springfield, where it hopes to have representatives from all the women's groups and organizations in the state, Frank said.

The disbanded commission has not had contact with the new King-appointed commission, but Frank said that Mary Fantasia, executive secretary of the new commission, was never known to be an advocate of women's issues when she was a state representative, and in fact, was not even a member of the Women's Caucus, a committee almost all women representatives and senators join. As for the rest of the commission, Frank said, "I don't know if they are window dressing or not."

Frank is a member of the Affirmative Action Subcommittee of the State Democratic Committee, which supervise national guidelines for affirmative action in the state.

She is also executive director of the Democratic Women's Caucus in Western Massachusetts, an organization composed of democratic women active in politics, who meet infrequently to encourage each other to participate in politics at all levels of government.

Soviets cancel concert tour

MOSCOW [AP] — Goskontsert, the Soviet concert-scheduling agency, said yesterday an American tour by the Moscow State Symphony orchestra was canceled and gave no reason. Western diplomats linked the cancellation to recent defections by five prominent Soviet performers.

The diplomats said the Soviets were not convinced sufficient security would be provided for the orchestra during the tour, but would not say if security meant protection for the 170-member orchestra or assurances musicians would not be granted asylum should they seek to defect.

Goskontsert officials said the tour could be rescheduled later.

Chemical firm faces lawsuit

LOCKPORT, N.Y. [AP] — Four former residents of the old Love Canal chemical dump neighborhood in Niagara Falls have filed a $600 million class action lawsuit in behalf of themselves and other people who used to live in the area.

Notices of claims totaling $2.65 billion were filed last November against the City of Niagara Falls, the Niagara Falls school board and Niagara County.

But the lawsuits filed Wednesday in state Supreme Court were the first class action suits.

The suit was filed by Gerald T. and Bonnie L. Snyder and Thomas A. and Lois J. Heisner.

Named defendants were the Hooker Chemicals & Plastics Corp., which formerly operated the dump; Occidental Petroleum International, the parent firm of Hooker; and the City of Niagara Falls, the school board and the county.

It's mini-gold rush time

BOSTON [AP] — The lust for gold, whetted by a pricetag of nearly $400 an ounce, is sending amateur prospectors into America's hills and canyons and old abandoned mines in mounting numbers.

"Every time the price goes up $20 in three days we have another gold rush," said Frank Sullivan, proprietor of the Mother Lode Dive Shop in Sacramento, Calif. "It's happened about four times this year."

The price of gold bullion soared nearly $20 an ounce in London on yesterday, reaching a record high of $395.50.

Student threatens to kill self

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. [AP] — A heavy-set student holding a pistol to his head burst into a classroom at a business college yesterday and took 30 students hostage, threatening to kill himself, police said. He let most of the students go after an hour and surrendered two hours after that.

Lt. Hugh Shelton said the gunman, tentatively identified as Louis Posey, held a gun to his head during the stand-off, which started at about noon at Knoxville Business College. The gunman had wanted to come out earlier, Sheton said, but vowed to shoot himself if there was anybody on the street outside.

King gives Carter thanks

WASHINGTON [AP] — Massachusetts Gov. Edward King said yesterday he personally thanked President Carter at the White House for helping ensure that New England will have adequate supplies of home heating oil this winter.

"We're very grateful," King told reporters after chatting with the president in the Oval Office.

King, a relatively conservative Democrat, said as he has in the past that he is backing Carter for re-election but left open the possibility that he could end up supporting Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., if Kennedy challenges Carter for the party's nomination.

He said the possibility that Kennedy will declare himself a candidate is "too hypothetical to comment upon."

Carter creates cabinet post

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House gave approval yesterday to a bill creating a new Department of Education and sent the measure to President Carter.

The House voted 215-201 to create the 13th Cabinet agency. During his 1976 campaign, Carter had promised to place the government's education programs within a single new agency.

The Senate passed the measure Monday.

The measure will reduce the size of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and will rename the agency the Department of Health and Human Resources.

As the House vote was announced, a cheer went up outside the chamber where private supporters of the proposal, many of them teachers, had been waiting.

Pope: Trip's theme focuses on peace

By HILMI TOROS
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II said yesterday "permanent and effective" peace will be a theme of his upcoming Irish-U.S. tour. He also issued guidelines aimed at solving a boundary dispute between Argentina and Chile.

The 59-year-old pope, who leaves tomorrow on his third international voyage in the first year of his pontificate, has characterized the Irish leg of his trip as a "pilgrimage of peace and reconciliation."

He was referring to the fighting in Northern Ireland, where the Irish Republican Army has been waging 10 years of bloody guerrilla war to end British rule and unite the province with the Irish Republic. The pope will visit the Republic but not northern Ireland.

John Paul, working as a mediator between the predominately Roman Catholic nations of Chile and Argentina, summoned delegates from those countries and told them he was "on the eve of starting a trip in which there will be no lack of chances to proclaim the interest of the Holy See for peace and its firm will of contributing to its effective and permanent consolidation."

At the meeting, he issued a three-point guideline for the peaceful settlement of the dispute in what Vatican observers said could be a papal blueprint useful for attempts in solving other international problems.

The pope said the two nations should first look for points of convergence, begin collaboration in other fields and finally build a climate of confidence.

Argentina and Chile have at times been on the verge of war over claims to a group of small islands, and undersea rights, at the tip of South America.

In January, the Vatican agreed to mediate the dispute and the pope designated Italian Cardinal Antonio Samore as his personal mediator. If the mediation is successful, Vatican observers feel, the pontiff may move to try and help settling others, including that in the Middle East.

The fact the pope received the delegations together for the first time was interpreted by Vatican observers as a sign the pontiff intended to continue his activist stand in foreign policy, expected to be further spelled out in his address next week to the United Nations.

At the United Nations, the pontiff has a meeting scheduled with Security Council members and will have an opportunity to have his first formal contact with China. That could set the stage for an historic meeting between the pope and Hua Guofeng (Hua Kuo-feng) during the Chinese Communist Party chairman's official visit to Italy a month later.

WASHINGTON — Gov. Edward King is shown meeting with President Carter at the White House yesterday, in an attempt to drum up slackened business at Quincy's General Dynamics shipyard. During his two-day stay here, King praised Carter for his response to home heating oil problems in New England, and said he would support the President in the 1980 election.

Judges release 'no-name' Vt. Demonstrators from jail

By WAYNE M. DAVIS
Associated Press

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — Vermont officials admitted defeat yesterday in their attempt to identify demonstrators who refused to give their names when arrested at the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant this week.

Most of the 33 arrested Wednesday for blocking the plant's gates refused to identify themselves as had the majority of the 167 arrested three days before.

Faced with space shortages in state jails and the prospect of more confusion in the courts, officials decided to remove all those already in custody before dealing with the second wave of arrests.

Windham County Deputy State's Attorney Jesse Corum said that if the 40 unidentified demonstrators released from jail overnight fail to show up for arraignment, the state's only recourse would be to issue arrest warrants in the name of John or Jane Doe.

"That would seem to be the only thing we could do if they don't appear," Corum said.

The 40 non-cooperators had been in custody since Sunday when the Vermont Decommissioning Alliance made its first attempt to disrupt the Vernon plant's annual refueling.

After three days of saying they could not release the unidentified demonstrators because they might not show up later in court, three judges signed an order releasing the 40 from jail.

District Court Judges Ronald Kilburn, George Ellison and David Jenkins offered no explanation for their about-face other than to say that it was "in the interest of justice."

"All I can say is that circumstances change and the judges felt they had to respond," said Lee Suskin of the state court administrator's office.

He acknowledged that releasing defendents whose names were not known was an "unusual procedure," but he noted that the few protesters who pleaded guilty were given oneday jail sentences while the non-cooperators had already served three days.

Suskin, Corum and other officials all declined comment on the loss of photographs that had forced dismissal of trespassing charges against 30 other demonstrators Tuesday.

Privately police blamed court officials for the loss and vice-versa.

Nuke power future hazy

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The irony was unanticipated, and cruel.

General Public Utilities' annual report was the very picture of progress. Its cover photo proudly contrasted an old 19-megawatt York Haven hyroelectric plant with the new 1,700-megawatt Three Mile Island nuclear plant just upriver.

But by the time the report reached stockholders, Three Mile Island lay critically wounded by the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident, an accident that threatens the survival of General Public and the future of the entire nuclear power industry.

Six months after the accident, Three Mile Island Unit 2, started-up only last December, is out of operation for at least four years by company estimates and conceivably forever, severely damaged and flooded with a small lake of radioactively-contaminated water.

Its sister-plant, Unit 1, is shut down to provide support and could stay out of service a year or more for federal safety reviews.

Critics of nuclear power say the accident has provided them with what they need to stop development of atomic power by reminding a wary public of March 28: the day radiation started leaking from the plant and there was talk of a "meltdown" and of a general evacuation of the populated area around Harrisburg, Pa.

The industry's advocates say quite the opposite, that Three Mile Island may actually strengthen nuclear power in the United States.

Library held up by red tape

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Still no progress has been made between UMass and President David C. Knapp's office and the office of Massachusetts' Attorney general Francis X. Bellotti on the construction problems of the University Library.

At a meeting in Boston last week, both parties pledged to "work together" to battle the various constructural woes that have been plagueing the University recently. However, as of yesterday, no decisions had been reached and no action had been taken concerning the library situation.

A spokesperson in Bellotti's office would not comment on the content of last Friday's meeting, nor would he respond to Knapp's claim that "the state was to blame" for the recent construction problems here on campus.

Possible lawsuits have neither been confirmed nor denied by either office.

Howard White, spokesman for Knapp's Boston office, repeated a statement he had made earlier in the week that "absolutely no decision concerning the library can be made until engineering test results are complete." However, he said some action is expected to be taken by the middle of next week.

In other library related matters, the first phase of transferal of books from the library tower into Goodell Hall has been completed. A total of 150,000 books, reference volumes, documents and periodicals have been moved and are currently in use at Goodell. A second phase, which consists of moving about 60,000 more reference materials and the transferal of copying machines, computer terminals and microfilm readers, will begin sometime next month, according to library officials.

In addition, University officials are planning to renovate areas on campus during the Christmas break, in order to supply more study accomodations for next semester.

Speakers tell of women's historical role

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

British working women in the late 19th century were locked into a miserable double-bind social situation, feminist historian Judy Lown told a Smith College audience yesterday.

Lown, of the University of Essex in England and Miranda Chaytor of the University of London gave a joint lecture entitled, "Recent Trends in Historical Research: British Feminist Perspective."

According to Lown, women had to seek an income for their livelihood and their families, but could only occupy the lowest jobs and receive the lowest wages. Domestic life and "a woman's place is in the home" were among the ideals of the period, but working class women didn't have the means to uphold that way of life, she said.

Lown did research at Courtauld Hill in Halstead, England, 60 miles from London. There, in 1891, 901 workers were women while 114 were men. The mill depended on its female work force, yet the male supervisors ridiculed the women for deserting their domestic duties, Lown said.

The Courtaud Mill had immense power over women, as it was the main source of employment in the town. The officials at the mill judged women morally, dismissing them from their jobs for such acts as living with men to whom they were not married, having illegitimate children, and using dirty language, Lown said.

According to Lown, the women resisted, rebelling against the strict lodging house rules and refusing to use such services as nurseries and nightly entertainment, which they claimed were intended to put them further under the mill's power.

Their resistance resulted in the lodging house and other services being shut down, due to the women workers' banding together successfully and refusing to use them.

"But lots of incidents concerning women have never been covered," Lown said, "and we're looking to rewrite history from a different viewpoint. Histories of industrialization tend to concentrate on men, with very little about the costs to women, and we want to look at how women were experiencing the period of industrialization."

Women had to seek an income for their families, but could only occupy the lowest jobs and receive the lowest wages.

Chaytor, in her studies of women's roles in historical England, is focusing more on domestic life at the time.

According to Chaytor, so little research has been done on women's family roles in the 16th and 17th centuries because there are almost "no research tools.

"The official jobs were held by emn, so their presence is documented year in and year out. Women were invisible, so their presence is hard to trace," she said.

Chaytor pointed out that women are especially hard to research because they never held their own names.

"They were their fathers' daughters, then their husbands' wives," she said.

Vets to Jane: give fee to Boat People

The UMass Veterans Service Organization, which has opposed the scheduled campus appearance Sunday of controversial actress Jane Fonda and activist husband Tom Hayden, yesterday demanded the pair donate royalties from their appearance here and across the country to aid the "Boat People" of Indochina.

Paul Withers, of the organization, said they wanted Fonda to "affirm the sanctity of human life before the politics of personal expediency" by donating royalties to Joan Baez's Human Rights Organization, or any other organization, that will bring relief to the Indochinese.

Fonda and Baez have differed in the past on how to solve the "Boat People" problem.

Meanwhile, the veterans said they still plan to hold an organized, non-violent rally outside the Curry Hicks Cage, the scheduled location, on the night of Fonda's appearance. Leaders of the Veterans of Foreign Wars said yesterday they will not be part of the demonstration because it "will give Fonda more publicity than she is worth."

Bromery unsure of future plans

By JOE GANNON
Collegian Staff

What does one do after being chancellor of UMass for eight years? This is the question now facing Dr. Randolph W. Bromery who was the chancellor of UMass for the past eight years.

The Brom, as he is affectionately known, is now on vacation and he said, "I am not yet sure if I want to remain an administrator or go back to being a faculty member."

An official, who asked to remain anonymous, at City College in New York said Bromery is in the top running for the job of College President. The official said that after the search committee could not reach a consensus on any of the original six candidates in May it stopped looking, but reopened the search in September to consider Bromery.

"I submitted a resume to the search committee in May and then withdrew because I did not want to go through another search," Bromery said yesterday. "If they were to recruit me it would be diffeent but a search committee expects you to come in on your knees and I just won't do that," he said.

Bromery went on to criticize the search process that colleges employ. "Higher education would be better off if they hired professional talent companies to look into prospective candidates' backgrounds to ascertain their qualifications, decide on the best candidates and then try to recruit them," he said.

"Search committees are kidding themselves if they think there is an excess of qualified candidates for the job of president," said Bromery. "It is not a case of them recruiting candidates, it is the candidate waiting in the doorway to be let in.

Randolph W. Bromery

"As far as City College goes there is no pressure on me to make a commitment. I will be in New York next week and I plan to visit the campus and speak to a committee of faculty and students. After I see the school I will decide whether or not to tell them to stop considering me, or that I am interested and will compete." he said.

Bromery had been in the race for the Presidency of UMass but lost out in the final days of deliberations to David Knapp from Cornell. Bromery had announced his decision to resign as chancellor before then.

Bromery said he did have plans to accept an invitation from Aramco, an oil company, to go to Saudi Arabia to study the exploration, drilling, and production of Saudi oil wells on the Red Sea. Bromery is a noted geologist who was a professor at UMass before becoming an administrator.

"Aramco has agreed to my request that while in Saudi Arabia I be allowed to visit universities in Jedda, Rehad and other Saudi cities," he said. "And after that I am going to visit Egypt."

Bromery said that although he now plans to go back to teaching he is not "shutting the door" on anyone. When asked about his eight years as Chancellor, he said he enjoyed them and felt he was leaving a university that is better than when he arrived.

BLACK AFFAIRS

From the Editors

The staff of Black Affairs encourages as much student participation as possible. We would like to see the pages used as a forum for ideas, opinions and discussion for all Third World students on this and other campuses in the Valley. This is especially important in a community where Third World populations are few and scattered. Black Affairs can serve as an important link in establishing communication between these groups.

As a new staff we intend to cover a wider range of activities and to reach a larger cross-section of the community. This semester we have introduced a weekly section of News Briefs, which provides information in a nutshell, of events in various parts of the world. We also plan to run feature stories and interviews as the occasion present themselves. We will continue to present views that are progressive and attempt to keep the community as informed to as many political events as possible. We will focus on events in this community but the Andrew Young's, Steve Biko's, Lolita Lebron's and the vast number of Third World people and countries, large and small cannot be ignored.

The importance of Black Affairs stems from the fact that we as Third World peoples must determine what is important to us and to continue to write about those things from a perspective that raises consciousness, emotions and understanding.

This year we also have a change in editorship. The new editor is Marcia Hospedales, a senior STPEC major and while the Assistant Editor is Karen Thomas, a sophomore majoring in Journalism/English.

We would like to place continued emphasis on the importance of adequate input and responses from the community. We need your help and support in order to better serve you. All interested students should come to the Collegian on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

'We are not here because of hunger,' says Martineau

By KAREN THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

"U.S. officials want you to believe it's hunger that makes Haitians come here, but hunger is not the problem," said Jean-Claude Martineau, Haitian poet and songwriter at the Campus Center before an audience of 60 last night.

Martineau, sponsored by the Commuter Collective (the area government for commuter students) was speaking on the plight of Haitian refugees. He said that Haitians come to this country so that they can live freely.

"In Haiti, any reason to oppose the government is reason enough to go to jail or die," said Martineau. "I cannot sing about what I want. I left because I had a need to express myself."

According to Martineau, Haiti is ruled by one family, the Devaliers. Martineau said that in the 23 years the Devalier Government has had power, over 45,000 Haitians have been killed. "The government has an army and police. Since Haiti is not at war, they instead turned their weapons against the Haitian people," he said.

Martineau explained that in Haiti, the ruling family has power until death. Jean Devalier was succeeded by his son. The Haitian people refer to them as 'Papa Doc' and 'Baby Doc' because they are also doctors.

Martineau said that in 1957, the beginning of the Devalier Government only 50 Haitians were allowed in the U.S. as permanent residents. Now 300,000 have left Haiti and 10,000 are legal residents here. He believes that the U.S. government is deporting Haitians "because they believe Haitians come here because of hunger. If hunger is the reason then Haitians cannot have political asylum," he said.

According to Martineau the per capita income of Haiti is $110 dollars. "When I used to work in a radio station I made $50 a month. I was paid once a month and after the first five days I was as broke as the end of the month," he said.

Martineau continued to explain the working conditions. "There are factories that make things such as baseballs and winter coats, neither which are used in Haiti. People must work 3 months without pay before they become permanent employees. Because the job they are doing doesn't take much skill, the employer just fires everyone and picks up a new load," he said.

A closer look at CABBS

By MARLENE DUNCAN
Black Affairs Staff

This article concerns a relatively new organization called CABBS (Committee for the Advancement of Black Business Students). Its functions are as stated. It serves as a source of vital information pertaining to updated materials of career and academic opportunities within business fields. CABBS also aids in processing applications to various graduate schools of Business Administration. The organization has information on class scheduling and departmental requirements. As a union they fight to receive recognition for the Third World sector of the business school. It is a means of striving to assure that your position within the business realm will be designated.

Recently, CABBS has been working to establish a scholarship service. Financial funding has become necessary so that speakers from firms and faculty of the school of business can be afforded and can act as resources. Proposals for funding have been submitted but input from the community has not yet come in. Presently the newly elected officers are: President-Marcelina Pina, Vice President-Kenneth Mahan, Assistant Vice President-Glen Brown, Treasurer-Raymond Young, Vice Treasurer-Kim Hatton, Secretary-Lynn Butler, Vice Secretary-John Hill. These students have organized to build upon a foundation. They need your participation in order to develop something solid. This is a productive and blossoming group whose main objective is to assist us in reaching our goals. We need to become more disciplined with our studies, our minds, our bodies, our verbal and physical actions.

CABBS has established an office in Rm. 211 of SBA which is open for counseling between the hours of 10-11 a.m., 2-3 p.m., Monday-Friday. The meetings for CABBS are held in Rm. 110 of the New Africa House-Thrusdays at 7 p.m.

Acting on the recommendation of Prosecutor Tom Orloff, Superior Court Judge Donald P. McCullum agreed in California yesterday to drop charges against Huey P. Newton. The Black Panther leader was on trial for the murder of a 17 year old prostitute Kathleen Smith in 1974.

Court drops charges against Newton

(AP) Huey P. Newton, leader of the Black Panther Party was freed yesterday after five year-old murder charges were dropped by Superior Court Judge Donald P. McCullum. Newton was charged with the murder of a prostitute named Kathleen Smith in Oakland, Calif.

The charges were dropped upon the recommendation of the prosecutor, just two days after a second mistrial had been declared by the judge because of jury deadlock.

The jury of eight women and four men told Superior Court Judge Donald McCullum they were unable to reach a verdict after four days of deliberation. It was the second mistrial in the case. Last March, a mistrial was declared after a jury deadlocked 10-2 for acquittal. The current trial was 37-year-old Newton's seventh felony trial since 1964.

The prosecution charged Newton shot prostitute Kathleen Smith on an Oakland streetcorner in 1974.

Newton fled the country while Ms. Smith was in a coma but returned voluntarily from Cuba in 1977 to stand trial.

Newton could have been convicted on a variety of counts. The most serious was first-degree murder, which carries a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

The trial was Newton's fifth murder trial—three of them in the 1967 killing of Oakland policeman John Frey.

His conviction in the first Frey trial was reversed. The second and third trials ended in hung juries, and prosecutors declined to mount a fourth trial. Newton spent 22 months in prison during appeals.

"There is foreign investment in Haiti," Martineau said. Reynolds Wrap made an estimate 208 million dollar profit and only 2 million was left in Haiti as salary and taxes.

Martineau's presentation also included the reading of three of his poems, accompanied by slides of Haiti. The three poems all emphasized his desire to return to his home. "I am a Haitian living abroad longing to go home," he said.

Students arrested in racial fight

WELLESLEY, Mass. (AP) — Three people were arrested and black students were dismissed early when a Thursday high school pushing incident boiled over into a cafeteria fight between whites and blacks in this plush community, police said.

Associate School Superintendent Ted Rokicki said Black students would stay out of school until Tuesday while Timothy Connors, principal of Wellesley High School, meets with black and white parents.

Wellesley police Sgt. Jack Broyles said two black students were arrested after they allegedly walked into the high school cafeteria, with a baseball bat and tire iron. A white youth was arrested outside the school. Three students were injured in the incident.

The black students were identified as Timothy Smith and William Brewster, both 17 and Boston residents. Smith was charged with assault and battery and Brewster was charged with assault.

A white student, Peter Shabot, 17, of Wellesley, was charged with disturbing the peace.

Rokicki said the incident grew out of rumors that Black students had been seen tampering with lockers earlier in the week. The rumors, which had been disproved, led to a shoving match that boiled over into a fight in the parking lot and cafeteria, he said.

"There was an escalation on the part of both sides that ended with the incident in the cafeteria," said Rokicki.

Rokicki said 38 black students attend the high school west of Boston through the state's METCO program, a voluntary plan that buses students from the inner city to suburban schools.

THE JANE FONDA RECORD

When Jane Fonda addressed a student audience at Michigan State University on November 22, 1969, American soldiers were being killed by a Communist enemy in Vietnam. Yet, this did not stop Fonda from making the following statements:

★ "I would think that if you understood what communism really was, you would hope, you would pray on your knees that we would someday become communist."

★ "The peace proposal of the Viet Cong is the only honorable, just, possible way to achieve peace in Vietnam."

★ Vietcong are "driven by the same spirit that drove Washington and Jefferson."

When Fonda traveled to Hanoi in 1972 the Vietnam War was still being fought. While in North Vietnam, she made propaganda statements for the Communists over their radio network. She also posed for photographs at the controls of a Communist anti-aircraft gun.

In spite of this shameful record, we believe Jane Fonda has a right to speak. But we do not believe she should be provided a platform at a tax-payer funded institution. For this reason, we are unalterably opposed to Fonda's planned September 30th address, when she will receive a $4,500 honorarium for presenting her radical views at the University of Massachusetts.

Pet pony dies in car crash

A pet Shetland pony was killed Tuesday on Pomeroy Lane, Amherst, when it ran in front of a car driven by Isabel Straker of Middle Street.

The 10-year-old pony was owned by Donald Lamoureux, 285 Pomeroy Lane. Lamoureux said the pony had been kept in a paddock with an electric fence and said he did not know how the pony escaped.

Police investigate raids on two campus sororities

By MARGARET FLORE
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Police were called in on two separate night-time raids that left two UMass sororities wide-awake and drenched in the early morning hours of yesterday.

Iota Gamma Upsilon, at 406 N. Pleasant St., and Alpha Chi Omega, at 38 Nutting Ave., were both invaded by groups of men wearing ski masks and carrying fire extinguishers filled with water around 2 a.m., police said.

The raiders broke the front door off its hinges at IGU, and shattered a window next to AKO's front door, the police report said. Sorority rooms and the women in them were sprayed with water from the extinguishers. A couple of rooms at AKO were broken into, police said. Members of AKO told police that a similar raid happened earlier in the week.

Some sorority women indicated that they suspected the identity of the raiders, police said, but would not tell police who they thought it might be.

Police said the incident will be handled by the Greek Affairs Office, which was not available today for comment.

A member of AKO said that women in the sorority were annoyed, but "it's to be expected. You know, frats raid..."

A member of the next-door sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma, who saw the raiders leaving last night, commented that there is no way to tell whether the raiders were from within the Greek community or the dorms.

"We found out that dorm people did a raid last year," she said.

Peace Corps, Vista torecruit students

By PETER SMERDON
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the Peace Corps and Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) will be manning an information booth in the Campus Center Concourse from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Wednesday next week.

Bill Romito, a permanent representative at UMass for the Peace Corps, will be looking for students who would like to do village-level development work in Third World countries for two years after graduation.

Michael Marzolla, a VISTA recruiter, will be looking for students who would like to do community-level organization work for a year or more with the poor in the United States.

There are now more than 5,000 Peace Corps volunteers serving in 63 countries, and over 4,000 VISTAs representatives working across the United States. Last year 30 students from UMass joined the Peace Corps, and 50 joined VISTA.

Both Romito and Marzolla are available at the Peace Corps and VISTA Project at 12 Draper Hall, where interested students may contact them.

Both organizations stress that the work volunteers undertake is arduous, but satisfying. Volunteers need to be patient, sensitive and adaptable with a strong commitment to help those in need, Romito said.

Romito graduated from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture at UMass in 1974, and worked with the Peace Corps for over two years in Nepal helping and educating farmers, as well as acting as an advisor to Nepal's Ministry of Agriculture and Food. "What you discover in the Peace Corps," he said, "is part of your cultural baggage for the rest of your life."

In return for their work, Peace Corps volunteers receive, at completion of their service, approximately $3,000, as well as experience and knowledge from parts of the world most people do not even know exist, Romito said.

VISTA volunteers, at the end of a year's service, receive approximately $900, as well as intangible benefits in personal growth and satisfaction which come from working at bringing about social change with the disadvantaged, according to Marzolla.

While in service to the Peace Corps or VISTA, volunteers receive training, living expenses, lodging, medical and dental insurance and some language instruction.

Graduate and undergraduate students who know scarce practical skills are in large demand for both organizations, as are those who speak French or Spanish for the Peace Corps. But both programs accept students in the liberal arts, and the Peach Corps will accept those who do not speak French or Spanish as long as they have some sort of language background.

The Peace Corps is involved in such fields as—agriculture, fisheries, biology, health, skilled trades, business, education, engineering, urban and rural planning, forestry, social services, math and science teaching.

VISTA workers are involved in many varied fields, including—community-organizing in Detroit, setting up a "health out-reach" program in Texas, and assisting a handicrafts co-op in Appalachia.

Both VISTA and the Peace Corps allow applicants to express a placement preference. both Romito and Marzolla vehemently denied that they or their organizations were connected with the Central Intelligence Agency.

Two anti-nuke groups bow out

Associated Press

SEABROOK, N.H. —Two groups against nuclear power have disavowed any connection with the planned Oct. 6 demonstration at the Seabrook nuclear plant being staged by a third anti-nuclear group.

"The American Friends Service Committee of New Hampshire cannot participate in, support, or in any way endorse the October 6 action," the group said in an internal memo written two months ago, but leaked to the media Wednesday.

Eric Wolfe of the committee confirmed the authenticity of the memo, but said it written soon after the Coalition for Direct Action at Seabrook announced its demonstration plans. He said the group's nonsupport for the demonstration stands.

Members of the Seacoast Clamshell Alliance held a news conference in Seabrook to announce they do not support and will not participate in the demonstration.

Instead, they said they are directing their energies toward a campaign to identify the corporate ownership and economics of nuclear technology, which was to include a non-violent demonstration on Wall Street Oct. 29, the anniversary of the stock market collapse in 1929.

The group members said they hoped to halt Seabrook construction by "focusing for the immediate future on the extremely vulnerable financial situation of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, the builder of the $2.6 billion plant, and the nuclear industry."

In Concord, Wolfe said too much emphasis has been given to "taking and holding" the Seabrook site and not enough time has been given to drawing up specific guidelines about what to do in case of a confrontation with authorities.

"We feel inadequate attention has been given to preparing for non-violence," he said.

"But nonetheless, we feel there is sufficient good faith on both sides to avoid violence at Seabrook," he said

How To Get A $1,615 A Week Job In Alaska

Even If Totally Unskilled Start At $1,020 Weekly

Anchorage, Alaska (Special)—Jobs in Alaska are now among the most highly paid in the world. And by high paying we mean big money—$1,020 to over $1,600 a week, plus room and board, either free or at nominal cost. The key to all this is overtime—plenty of it. If you don't mind working about 70 hours a week at a relatively unskilled job, $12 to $19 an hour with time-and-a-half and even double time adds up to those big fat checks you've always dreamed about. So no matter whether you can run a dozer, weld, handle a shovel, fly a helicopter or even wait on tables, local and multinational corporations will be quite eager to forward transportation. And that is where we come in. We are the experts on the companies who are hiring. We developed the ALASKAN EMPLOYMENT KIT, a complete instruction manual and directors listing 1,320 current employers in the Arctic. Plus sample inquiry letters, resumes, application letters with pre-printed labels and procedures. And the jobs will go to those who know where and how to apply. This kit can be obtained by sending $9.95 cash, check or money order to ALASKAN EMPLOYMENT, Dept. 13-2 894 National Press Building, Washington, D.C. 20045. On C.O.D.'s add $1 goodwill deposit (deductible). Keep it for 90 days. If for any reason you do not obtain Alaskan employment within that time, or are not satisfied with the employment offered, simply return the ALASKAN EMPLOYMENT KIT and your money will be refunded promptly and without question. Do not delay. Tear out this message as a reminder. Send for your NO-RISK copy today.

'Why Teddy' satire beautifully written

To the Editor

I would like to compliment Stephen Nojeim on his Sept. 26, editorial entitled "Why Teddy?". This article has proven to be one of the finest pieces of political satire to come across to date. The way he systematically misrepresents the claims of socialists and furthermore misplaces Teddy on the political spectrum is brilliant. He successfully argues against all those far right political opinionators who cannot understand the basics of good political argumentation.

The best way to make political argument is from the vantage point of understanding. An argument carries force to the extent it accurately represents its enemy. Developing his/her claims as s/he would and then showing their shortcomings—be it in theory or in practice.

He has shown the ultimate ineffectiveness of those who resort to such forms of political name calling.

Mr. Nojeim has my thanks for he made this point splendidly, and the humor of his article has made my day.

Lost Monday unfair to some

To the Editor:

I am appalled at the fact that classes may be cancelled Monday, only because the Pope is coming to Boston. Monday is the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur, the holiest day of the year for people of the Jewish faith. Despite the fact that this affects several thousand students and faculty, regular classes were scheduled. But now, due to the Pope's visit, an event which will have a direct effect on relatively few people on campus, classes will probably be cancelled.

I have no choice but to question, not the cancellation of classes, but the reason for this proposed cancellation.

Let's forget past and think future

To the Editor

It's time to stop wallowing in the mistakes of the past, and begin showing concern for the future. The issues of the day are energy, the economy, and the status of human life around the world. These, and other social concerns, should be the focus of our protests. Certainly, the Vietnam veterans should not be forgotten, but held as the symbol of our national conscience. The peaceniks did not prolong the Vietnam conflict, the military did. (a veterans opinion of the VFW "club")

Fortunately, those years are past. Let us unite, and demand responsible action, accountable to us, from the government on the social issues of today. Let the protests of the 60's begin anew. We are the people, and collectively, have the power.

Let your voice be heard. PEACE, LOVE, NO NUKES.

Pete Siegler

Vets to VSO: Remember the first

To the Editor:

We would like to add our six cents worth to the Fonda, Hayden—VSO brouhaha. As Vietnam-era veterans, we recognize the VSO's contention that Fonda's actions during the Vietnamese conflict are part of the reason that many combat veterans are having difficulty re-integrating themselves into society.

But we also believe that Fonda and Hayden have a constitutional right to publically express their views. We think that these are not the most crucial issues, but rather that students will be charged $1 for an event that is guaranteed in the Undergraduate Student Senate constitution to be presented with no admission fee.

Free speech is fine, but Fonda and Hayden are receiving seven thousand dollars and are also planning to film the proceedings for a movie that will likely generate more revenue for them. We feel that students should not be subjected to the burden of supporting the lifestyles of these wealthy celebrities.

Can't bear Ted led by Reds?

To the Editor:

Concerning the editorial in the Collegian, "Why Teddy," of September 26, I would like to say I couldn't agree more. Face it, Kennedy is a socialist; an enemy of the state; a boldfaced, perfidious scoundrel. How long are we going to sit back and allow these socialists, communists and Kennedys to expropriate our land, rape our women and deny us access to the church of our choice?

In closing, consider this: If the non-contributors are given a free lunch, who then will insert the screws into this nation's carburators?

It should be a great show folks.

So step right up, with your dollars ready of course, and be one of the first to see the newest rage of the silver screen-political circuit.

And remember, your personal interests are at stake.

Jack Gallagher

If you're sick of the average egocentric movie star and politician, come on down and become part of the new movement in social consciousness.

You can tell anyone who cares to listen 20 years from now that you, as the then-future of America, did your part to institute social change, that you played a part, however minor, in "The Grand Design" and that you helped to coalesce the Nouveau New Deal.

Don't mention to those who will have cared to listen, though, that MGM provided the cue cards—because you won't have the time.

It won't have been necessarily a sequel to the first show, either. Make sure you have made that clear to them.

Tell them it wasn't just the urgency. "It wasn't just the egency, it wasn't like that at all.

"It wasn't sunshine or Pepsi that made me like that."

California couldn't have been that beautiful.

So it must have been sincerity, however they might take it. But that wouldn't have been what bothered you the most about the whole thing.

The main thing is: A semi-politico and an actress, under the auspices of emotion, are trying to form a political base for a spur-of-the-moment, trendy Democrat: namely, Jerry Brown.

It's bad enough having people like Henry Kissinger around without having "The China Syndrome" become as much of an issue as detente; in which case both movie and foreign policy would be affected in Washington by people who have no right to affect anything there.

A dollar to Fonda and Hayden is a dollar to Brown.

There's an oily mess

Bob Carroll

As you are reading this, millions of your fellow Americans are being ripped off. They are not being robbed in the traditional sense, in fact, many are not even aware that they are victims at all.

The criminal in this case is Big Oil. A recent Federal Trade Commission study shows that despite the oil industry's claim of massive shortfalls in petroleum availability—supplies were up from between four and eight percent over the first four months of 1979 in comparison to figures for 1978; which was, incidentally an "oil glut" year.

The oil crisis hoax reached such ridiculous proportions earlier this year that the American Petroleum Institute, the official spokesman for the oil industry, had to admit there were gross "miscalculations" in estimating stocks of crude oil. The nation came into 1979 with 9.7 percent more crude stocks in reserve than it had at the start of 1978. In 1978 the industry was moaning because it had so much oil it couldn't even get prices up to the permitted ceilings.

How can crude oil supply figures fluctuate so badly? It's very simple. A CIA assessment révealed that for the first five months of this year, American firms actually exported more oil than over a comparable period in either 1977 or 1978. This indicates market manipulation—drawing down stocks on purpose in order to create a crisis atmosphere.

Virtually every tactic has been used by the oil industry to generate an atmosphere of shortages in order to raise prices. For instance, why has Big Oil cut back on domestic drilling at a time when their profits are going through the roof?

Why are refineries, capable of operating at 91 to 92 percent of capacity, running now at only 84 percent of capacity?

The Carter Administration for months has backed every move that would make gasoline and other fuel products more costly, on the theory that higher prices would reduce consumption.

This naive plan, coupled with the Iranian revolution and OPEC increases led to frustrated motorists and rich oil executives.

Bob Carroll is a Collegian commentator

On your mark, let's go to Smith

In our ongoing attempt to broaden our cultural horizons, we visited Smith College this week-end. For some inexplicable reason, the Smith Social Committee left us swingers off their invitation list, and we didn't have the requisite Harris Tweeds to fake an Amherst matriculation.

John Hensleigh & Tom Malone

Fools. Couldn't they see? They were nothing but gleaners. They got to scrounge about the floor, searching for leftovers from the Ivy League harvest. A wilting wallflower here or there, or groups of freshwomen who "don't"—that is all that remained. Oh, excuse us. Perhaps we misjudged their intentions. Perhaps they were really there to cultivate provocative and meaningful social relationships. How? How, when both parties are stone drunk, when the university beau is fantasizing about the wee hours, and the mid-western heiress, unimpressed by his Levi's "slim-fit" shirt, is trying to escape without treading on his Frye-booted toes? (Did they come to simply dance?) A ten-piece band belts out chords to the delight of the solitary couple. Ivy Leaguers are too suave to dance; university beaus would love to. I mean, after all, everybody knows that more than three dances with a woman obligates her to take you home. But the heiresses won't dance. They have to remain chaste for the sons of Manhattan advertising moguls.

There is only a limited amount of time that one can allow himself to feel like a garbageman asking out the daughters of the daughters of the American Revolution. It wasn't the designer jeans or the L.L. Beans, it wasn't even their stilited conversation—it was the look in their eyes, the patronizing gazes they gave us, that made us want to say "sorry ma'am, we sure is sorry we clanked them cans around outside your window this morning. Won't happen again, ma'am. We sure sorry."

We bolted for the door. The night wasn't lost, though. We could still make the party in Puffton. Hurrying down the steps, we passed a university beau, crouched in the shrubbery, who was battling a belly-full of Jack Daniels, and in the gym, we could hear the women come and go, talking of Michaelangelo.

'I DOUBT IT, CARSTAIRS — IF THEY WERE SOVIET COMBAT TROOPS, WOULDN'T WE HAVE SPOTTED THEM AGES AGO?'

Columns precarious propositions in land of free-thinking scribes

The concept of an editorial page goes way back. Way back to the concept of opinions; everyone has an opinion, most people have more than one, two.

Let's hear them!

This is the place for the UMass community's opinions. Obviously, there is no room for all of them, but, the more input received, the more output enjoyed.

All ideas are welcome.

Important. The ideas expressed on this page are those of the writers themselves and not the Collegian's. All unsigned editorials represent the viewpoint of the editorial board.

There are absolutely no rules as to whom may write columns or letters, except those of space limitations.

Space limitations are the reason every letter does not get published. I assure you every letter gets read and the quantity of letters and commentaries that are printed reflect the amount received; that's the best anyone can do in an impossible situation.

All news stories, columns and letters must be typed at 67 characters across the page and triple spaced. The reason, is that's the only way the copy can be layed-out and the way our graphics department will accept the copy in order to typeset the stuff.

Thank you very much.

Van Morrison is a 'legend'

By TOM ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

There is probably no term more over-used by record reviewers than "legend," but there are times when it just has to apply. In the case of Van Morrison, "legend" is the least one can say. He has been in the business nearly as long as the Rolling Stones or the Who, and he is still turning out great records.

Last year's Wavelength (on Warner Brothers) placed high on many a Top Ten, and Into the Music may very well do the same for 1979. While there is a bit less exuberance on this disc, it's still an immensely enjoyable release.

The new album opens up with three gutsy, brassy tunes—"Bright Side of the Road," "Full Force Gale" and "Stepping Out Queen." As with "Kingdom Hall," the opening cut of Wavelength, Van assets his presence immediately and slowly mellows out a bit as the album progresses.

Never one for standing still, Van next moves into a realm he has entered sparingly with two rather folkish songs featuring the penny whistle of Robin Williamson. While his long career has spanned all sorts of music, seldom have I heard Van sound so natural as with the sweet instrumentation of "Troubadours" and "Rolling Hills."

The first side closes with the rollicking "You Make Me Feel So Free," and then things get laid back a bit for side two. First, Van recalls his early bluesy roots with "Angelio." "And the Healing has Begun," one of the best songs on the album, winds up with Van rambling about staying up late and listening to Muddy Waters records.

Van Morrison is scheduled to appear at the Curry Hicks Cage on Wednesday, October 3.

Significantly, one of the least impressive songs on the album is the only non-original one—the classic "It's All in the Game." Even this is by means bad, but it seems to lack some of the conviction that is such an essential part of Van's unique vocalizing.

"It's All in the Game" seques into the final number "You Know What They're Writing About," which is of course "a thing called love." As he often does, Van closes the album with a deliberately repetitious, almost mesmerizing piece. It is this approach which defines his vocal style, so accurately described by the album's title.

Thur far the sales of Into the Music are lagging behind those of Wavelength. One factor for this could be the lack of an obvious single on this album. The three singles from Wavelength, while not Top 40 hits, got considerable FM airplay and certainly helped Van toward his "Comeback of the Year" accolades for 1978. Although the individual songs on Into the Music do not have quite the same immediate appeal as those on its predecessor. As a whole this album ranks comfortably up in the Morrison catalog.

In addition to a fine album last year, Van resumed touring for the first time in a number of years. He's back on the road again.

It is always hard for someone with as much well-known material as Van Morrison to make a big impact with a new album. However, the new songs he will undoubtedly perform Wednesday night at the Curry Hicks Cage should hold their own against classics like "Moondance," "Brown-Eyed Girl," "Wild Night" and, of course, "Gloria."

Oops we goofed again, sorry!

The Collegian incorrectly reported Wednesday the vote of the Graduate Student Senate. The Senate voted 10-9 in favor of recognizing the North Village Tenants Association.

Around Archeaologists

Students from UMass recently aided in a salvage dig in Chicopee, Mass. The site was discovered when the state began to extend interstate 395 through the area. Researchers have dated some of the artifacts to approximately 2500 years ago, whether this date is accurate or not still remains to be seen. The early society of people is thought to be an agriculture-based culture because of the large deposits of seeds and pottery found. (Staff photo by Jim Mahoney)

Senate studys House raises

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved without dissent yesterday an amendment that could prohibit any pay raise for members of Congress from going into effect until a new Congress is elected.

Passage of the amendment offered by Sen. Richard Stone, D-Fla., tossed another factor into the complicated bargaining procedure between House and Senate negotiators who will decide the composition of the final bill.

If accepted by both chambers, it apparently would mean that no pay raise voted by the current Congress could go into effect until Jan. 1, 1981 — after all House members and onethird of the Senate have been through the 1980 elections.

After passage of the amendment, the Senate took up other provisions of an emergency appropriations bill which contains the volatile issue of whether — rather than when — Congress should raise its own pay.

There was no word on when the actual bill containing the pay provision would be passed by the Senate.

The Stone amendment was modeled after an early constitutional provision that failed to be ratified by enough states to be included in the original Bill of Rights. Stone's amendment was cosponsored by three other senators — including Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., who heads the Appropriations Committee

UMaine plays host to kickers

By Mike Estrada
Collegian Staff

Still trying to prove, mostly to themselves, that they are a New England contender, the UMass men's soccer team travels to UMaine at Orono tomorrow for a 10 a.m. game.

The UMass shelling of Williams on Wednesday was enough of an indication of their goal-scoring ability. Tony M. Dias, by virtue of his fourth goal in three contests, has established himself as an explosive offensive threat.

But UMass players and Coach Russ Kidd have expressed a concern with the inconsistent play over the course of a 45-minute half. In the season-opener at Bridgeport, an apparent relaxation in going to the ball allowed the hosts to score late in the overtime game after fans had left the stands and everyone in the press booth had sung "the party's over."

Kidd attributes the problem to an apparent "lack of concentration" after re-starts in action such as corner kicks. But Kidd agrees that the Williams game gave the booters some renewed confidence. Late in the game Wednesday, midfield hustle by the Minutemen caused a flurry of penalties by a frustrated Williams squad.

Against Maine, UMass will be facing a young team that, with three losses in four contests, is learning to play college soccer the hard way. The Bears did salvage a tie with Bates, a game in which high-scorer Bill Meader had three goals. But the fact that Maine goalie Jeff Johnston had saved 80 goals in four games indicates that the Bear offense is lacking.

"We're better than we were last year but it's tough," said second year coach Doug Biggs. "We're learning as we go. "Its (Rhode Island, Boston U.) tough competition to learn against."

Netmen score

A home court advantage did nothing for the University of New Hampshire Wednesday as they were downed by a very strong men's tennis team from UMass. With one win already under their belts, the netmen chalked up another by defeating UNH in seven of nine matches.

Sergio Strepman's match, according to Coach Steve Williams, was a big match as he came back from a 0-6 blow out in the first set, to win the second and third sets, and the match, 0-6, 6-4, 6-4. Strepman was UMass' number one man against UNH.

Mark Huetteman, playing in the second singles spot, was the only singles competitor to fall, losing to Bill Morrill in straight sets, 6-4, 6-3.

JV booters

The J.V. booters started out on the right foot by destroying Williams College, 6-2 at home Wednesday afternoon. The offense led an outstanding effort, while the defense kept on top of things. The scoring started with a beautiful rising 20 yd. boot off the foot of Bob Boyd, and getting an assist on the play was Mike Jenkins. Within four minutes the Minutemen scored again as Kevin Fowler knocked in a goal from 10 yards out with an assist from Bob Boyd which ended the scoring for the first half.

The Minutemen didn't waste much time in the second half as Bob Boyd opened the scoring less than two minutes into the half with a goal off of Joel Stirlacci's rebounding shot. A minute later Gary Deets set up a perfect goal as Mark Miskin booted the ball from 30 yards out high into the far corner, to extend the lead to 4-0.

Harriers fall

Despite a 20-37 loss to Harvard on Tuesday, the UMass Minutemen ran some of their best times ever in the 5000 meters (3.1 miles) at Franklin Park in Boston. "When I showed them their times, they didn't feel so bad about losing," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said.

Sophomore Judy McCrone was the first Minutewoman across the line and finished third overall with a time of 17:50. McCrone's time was the seventh fastest time ever recorded for the Franklin Park course. "I couldn't believe that I ran that fast," McCrone said. Judy went through the two-mile mark in 11:11, cutting 29 seconds off her previous best for that distance.

Golfers lose

The UMass women's golf team fell victim to first-meet jitters as they finished a disappointing sixth in the EAIAW championships last weekend at Mount Holyoke. Eastern power Penn State walked off with the meet, takinig the top four individual places and finishing over two hundred strokes lower than the last place Minutemen.

In what Coach Jane McGahan described as "typical tournament weather—rainy cold" tje women couldn't seem to get in the weing of things. Junior Jane McCarthy was the only bright spot for UMass, completing the two day journey in 87-97, 184. Other women competing for UMass were Laurie Gibbons, Barbara Spilewski, Sally Rohan and Joan Rosen.

"It was a case of our freshmen trying too hard," explained Coach McGahan. "The girls aren't bad golfers but, except for Jane, they came in with scores so high I don't want to reveal them."

Coach Kidd has said some second-half standouts from the Williams game will see more playing time at Maine. Fullback Chris New and freshman forward Gus Martins, who netted the Minutemen's third goal Wednesday, are among the substitutes to see more action.

BOOTER BANTER: Although Wednesday's game drew a modest crowd of about 500 persons, soccer still does not bring out the hordes as does lacrosse in the spring.

Garber's Gorillas prepare early for spring

By JANE WOLFSON

Although lacrosse is primarily thought of as a spring sport, the UMass men are able to take advantage of a fall season as well. "Fall lacrosse helps to familiarize new players with what we do," said laxmen coach Dick Garber.

"It gives them a chance to meet teamates, do fundamental drills, play intersquad game scrimmages, and just play lacrosse," Garber said. "It gives the players a chance to practice without being under the gun."

This fall Garber has had the largest turn out ever for fall lacrosse, with over 100 men coming out. This includes a record 33 freshmen as well. They practice Monday through Thursday, "With most kids averaging three days a week," according to Garber.

Last spring the Minutemen finished with an overall record of 8-5, and lost to Navy in the quarterfinal round of the NCAA. But this year they will be starting basically from scratch as they lost the depth of their team to graduation.

Most sorely missed will be All-American scorer Brooks Sweet. Last season Sweet scored 45 goals along with 42 assists. His career totals are just impressive with 106 goals and 66 assists.

The goalie positions are wide open due to the graduation of the Minutemen's outstanding goalies Don Goldstein and Eric Banhazl. Expected to take over the position could be one of fine six goalies, sophomore Tom Curran, the oldest member of the crew, freshmen Steve Shelley and Chris Benedetto from Long Island, Tom Salir from Connecticut, Dan Alshuler from Pennsylvia, and Dave Wall from Eastern Mass.

Leading the Attack will be Dave Martin, Paul Weller, and Joe Bellavia.

Freshmen at defense to watch for are Stu Sachs, Tom DeNormande, and Jimmy Woods. At midfield, returing veterans will be Steve Martino, Peter McArero, Guy Kidd, and Dave Ellsworth. They are expecting strong competition from freshman Tom Connor, Tim Cutler, Pat Downs, Ernie Shapiro, Andy Felix, Paul Fogerty and Eric Conz.

Presently UMass has just four scrimmages set for this fall. This Sunday the freshmen will take on the Babson varsity at home on 2:00. They will also travel to face Boston College on Oct. 14. They have an alumni game here on Oct. 20 at 9:30, and Dartmouth travels here on Oct. 28.

Gridders face off against Crimson

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The UMass football team will pack its bags and take its act to the hallowed halls of Cambridge this afternoon for a 1:30 contest Saturday against the Harvard Crimson.

The Minutemen will be looking to avenge last year's 10-0 loss at the hands of the Crimson. Coached by Joe Restic, Harvard comes into the game with a 1-0 record after last Saturday's 26-7 crushing of Columbia University. In that game, Harvard quarterback Burke St. John hit on 10 of 16 passes and threw one TD pass in his first game at the helm of the unusual Harvard Multiflex offense. St. John does the majority of his passing to senior split end Rich Horner and junior tight end Chuck Marshall.

The aerial offense of the Crimson will put added pressure on the UMass secondary which has had its problems in the first two games of the year. The Minutemen will be hoping for a sustained pass rush from its youthful defensive line led by middle guard Ray Benoit and tackles Dan Petrie and Eric Cregan who pressured Maine quarterback John Tursky well last Saturday.

On the ground, St. John will be giving the ball to senior halfback Tom Beatrice and junior halfback Paul Connors. Both of whom run and catch passes well out of the Multiflex.

Catch all the exciting action of Minutemen football this Saturday on WMUA, 91.1 FM, as UMass visits the Crimson of Harvard. Howie Sobolov and Tim Wasserman call the plays. Pre-game show with Jim Mullins and Fred Weiner begins at 1:00.

The Crimson defense is anchored by linebackers Bob Woolway and Matt Sabetti who both helped to hold Columbia to a paltry 64 yards on the ground.

The Minutemen, meanwhile, come into the game after a 38-14 pounding of Maine last Saturday for their first win of the season (1-1). In that contest, UMass finally got its running game untracked with both halfback Cliff Pedrow and quarterback Mike McEvilly scoring two touchdowns apiece.

Overall, the series between the two schools stands at 9-4-1 with Harvard on top. The series began in 1906 with the last two games being shutouts; 17-0 UMass in 1977 and the 10-0 Harvard win last year.

In last year's contest, Harvard didn't employ the Multiflex against the Minutemen in a low-scoring contest that saw the Crimson resort to the "Power I" to score the only ten points they would need.

After Saturday's contest, the Minutemen will return home for three straight games at Alumni against North Carolina Central and Yankee Conference foes Boston University and Rhode Island.

Stickwomen dump Keene; Walsh scores three goals

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Senior forward Laurel Walsh scored three goals and led a strong UMass field hockey team to a lopsided 8 to 1 victory over Division Three Keene at the NOPE field yesterday. Their record is a perfect 2-0 now.

On a day made for field hockey (bright and sunny) the stick-women scored early and often against the beleaguered Keene squad. A relentless offensive attack and solid defense kept Keene pinned back all afternoon as Coach Pam Hixon's team played with intensity; leading 3-0 at the half and outshooting poor Keene 34 to 3 for the game.

All-American Laura O'Neil opened the onslaught early and Laurel Walsh netted her first goal of the game at 18.30 (the teams play continuously for thirty five minute halves) off a deflection in front off the Keene goal.

Pity Keene goalie Colleen Petticrew—she was very busy. The first Keene shot on goal occurred at the 23.50 point and the UMass stickwomen were just warming up.

Coaches Hixon and Tami Gannon were constantly positioning their players and All-American Judy Strong scored an unassisted, diving goal at 23.40 to up the score to 3-1, UMass. The shots on goal at this point stood at 15 to 1, UMass.

If the game was ever in doubt the stickwomen cleared things up in the second half, popping in five goals. The relentless pressure paid off with Walsh netting a strong, unassisted goal at the 4 minute mark to continue the deluge at 4 to 0, UMass.

Walsh and the words "hat-trick" became synonymous a minute later, UMass 5, Keene 0. Shots on goal at this point read an embarrassing 19 to 2. Sue Caples flicked in a long corner shot five minutes later and Coach Hixon began substituting freely. The pro-UMass crowd watched as the Hixon squad did not let up and kept pressuring Keene with a crisp passing attack.

Goalie Robin Jenning proved human, however, as Keene's Jo Green prevented a shutout at the twelve minute mark on their third and final shot of the day.

Freshman Chris Coughlin made it 7 to 1 on a corner rebound shop and Julie Hall, playing well all day, scored off an O'Neil pass tucking it in the corner and closing out the scoring at 8 to 1.

A 34 to 3 shot advantage does not tell the whole story. Defenseman Carol Duffy, Sue Kreider, Karen La Verdiere, Patti Bossio all played with intensity and discipline. Bossio sprained her knee but expects no trouble for Saturday's game with Vermont.

Laurel Walsh seemed unimpressed with her hat-trick saying, "I haven't really counted my goals and we beat them 5-0 last year. But you never know—sometimes the bad teams upset you."

Major league Minutemen

As the 1979 baseball season draws to a close (for the Red Sox at least) I look back on the whole thing with a lot of mixed feelings. One of the things I feel very good about is the showing of three ex-UMass hurlers (all at different stages of their big league careers) trying to make their mark on our national pastime.

The first of these pitchers is Mike Flanagan, now with the Baltimore Orioles, who has already made a mark for himself. Everyone knows the Flanagan story by now, I hope. He's been on the cover of The Sporting News, Sports Plus and half a dozen other sports publications. He is the winningest pitcher in the major leagues (23 victories to date), he has the Cy Young Award in his hip pocket and some folks are starting to seriously consider him for MVP (my vote still goes to Ken Singleton).

At UMass, Flanagan was an excellent all around athlete. He played on the freshman basketball team (we had one way back then) and he started for coach Dick Bergquist his first year here. Aside from being the best pitcher in the Yankee Conference, Flanagan was also the best hitter. In one game against Maine, he threw a shutout and hit three home runs.

Flanagan's record at UMass was a remarkable 12-1, with his only loss coming in his last UMass start, a 2-1 heart-breaker to Harvard at Fenway Park.

In 1973, Flanagan left UMass after a tremendous two-year career. He was drafted by Baltimore in the seventh round, and spent three years in the minors before joining the Birds in '75. It took him three years to reach the star status he enjoys today, but everyone from Bergquist to Earl Weaver knew all along that it was only a question of time.

Another UMass hurler who has made it to the big leagues is Jeff Reardon, now a reliever with the New York Mets. Unlike Flanagan, who was destined for success when he left UMass, Reardon got to the bigs the hard way.

Reardon was a starter at UMass, and despite setting the school's career strikeout record, he had a losing record for his four-year stint here, (5-3 in 77, 5-5 in 76, 4-5 in 75 and 1-4 in 74). Dissappointingly, Reardon was not drafted after his UMass career was over.

The Reardon success story began that summer, when a Met scout saw the hard-throwing right-hander and signed him to a contract.

Reardon went first to "A" ball in Virginia, and then on to "AA" ball in Texas where he was 17-4 and named Player of the Year. In the Florida Instructional League Reardon was transformed into a reliever. He spent this past season with Tidewater in the International League, where he was 4-1 with a club that hit only .240.

Early this month, the Mets called up Reardon, and in performances thus far he has shown potential. How Reardon does next spring will probably determine his future with the club.

The third young pitcher of mention is righthander Doug Welenc, now in the Houston Astros organization. Right now, Welenc is where Flanagan was six years ago and where Reardon was two years ago.

Last spring was Welenc's lst with the Minutemen and it was the kind of year the likes of which you see once a decade. On the mound, Welenc was 9-2 with a 1.33 ERA and three shutouts. At the plate, Doug led the team in average (.365) hits (54) and RBI's (30).

Welenc was named team MVP, All Yankee Conference, Yankee Conference Player of the Year, All New England, All Northeast Regional, member of the Pan-Am tryout team in Colombia in June, and the list could go on forever and it probably does.

In June, Welenc was drafted by the Astros, the same club that drafted him after he finished high school.

This past summer he pitched with Sarasota in the Gulf Coast Rookie League, where he went 7-1, with a 1.56 ERA. Welenc will probably pitch "A" ball next spring, and will hopefully keep going up the ladder till he lands in the Astrodome.

POPE:

Pope prays for Boston faithful

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press

BOSTON —Pope John Paul II opened a pastoral visit to his divided American flock yesterday, raising a shepherd's crozier to bless a drenched but ecstatic Boston. He had words of praise and friendship but warnings, too, for this rich and troubled nation.

"I greet you America the Beautiful," the pope told a cheering throng in Boston Common in the first major address of his six-city U.S. tour. "I want to tell everyone that the pope is your friend."

He hailed America as a free and generous land, but said its youth was being lured from religion to the empty "escape" of sexual pleasure, drugs, violence and indifference.

"I propose to you the option of love, which is the opposite of escape," the pontiff said amid a downpour that had turned the historic common into a sea of mud.

As many as 400,000 people crowded the park, waving flags, banners, handkerchiefs and whatever else was available as the pope, dressed in white and gold, raised his arms in blessing.

The crowds had stood under umbrellas, singing while they waited for the pontiff, who landed at Boston's Logan Airport in mid-afternoon. His motorcade from the airport ran about 40 minutes late, but when he BOSTON —It was easy for Anna Kodzik to explain why she braved the crowds and drizzle at Logan International Airport to see her fellow countryman, Pope John Paul II.

"He is my life," said the native of Poland.

When the pope emerged from an Aer Lingus 747 Monday to begin his six-city U.S. tour, Mrs. Kodzik jumped up on a press platform and began waving a red and white Polish flag attached to a coat hanger.

"I sewed it together in the car on the way here," said the Medford woman, displaying the flag made of red and white handkerchiefs sewn together with large, crude stitches.

Mrs. Kodzik, a native of Cracow where Pope John Paul II served as archbishop, began to weep when the pope appeared from the plane and walked down the stairway to the waiting crowd.

"It means everything to me," she said. "I'm just so happy."

Mrs. Kodzik came to the airport with her son Peter, who worked as a draftsman for Magic Stage Inc., the Medford firm which built the press stand and platform from which the pope addressed the crowd.

"It just makes me so proud," she said after the pope climbed into a limousine for

Couple calls for people power

By PAMELA LINDMARK

Inflation, big business and nuclear industry were Sunday night targeted by political activists Tom Hayden, 40, and Jane Fonda, 42, as the "burning issues" of the 1980 elections.

The pair, who spoke more than two hours before a 4,200 capacity crowd at the Curry Hicks Cage here, said it is time consumer power ruled.

Although the building security was heavy in anticipation of problems from veterans groups angry over Fonda's appearance, no incidents were reported. Veterans, John Birch Society members and Truth Squad members in favor of nuclear power gathered peacefully outside the building during the speeches.

The time has come, Hayden said, "to cut the economic umbilical cord that supports nuclear and business industry in America."

Speaking on behalf of the Hayden-founded Campaign for Economic Democracy, the pair said a conversion is needed from what Hayden termed a "perverted cesspool of politicians polluted by corruption" to what Fonda called a "nation that belongs to the people."

The responsibility for change, they said,

Veteran's Service Organization members who had originally opposed Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden's appearance here were satisfied with the couple's speech Sunday night, said VSO Vice-President Walter Laughlin.

Laughlin said VSO issued a press release prior to the speech in which several questions were asked of Fonda. "I imagine Ms. Fonda got ahold of that, and in her introduction she addressed most of the questions," Laughlin siad.

In their release, the veterans demanded that Fonda and Hayden donate the proceeds from their speech to the Indochinese refugees and asked them and the nation to "stop ignoring the human consequence and continual suffering of the Indochinese people."

The veterans also questioned Fonda on her personal benefits from her actions during the Vietnam War, as well as her and Hayden's political aspirations. The veterans also accused Fonda of ridiculing the veterans who fought in Vietnam and asked her what she would do for those veterans, and to meet with veteran groups to discuss these issues.

King gives pope silver platter

BOSTON (AP)— Gov. Edward J. King's gift to Pope John Paul II yesterday was a sterling silver tray, 13 inches in diameter.

The governor also gave silver trays, 6 inches in diameter, to Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, and to other cardinals visiting Boston for the papal Mass on Boston Common.

The governor's office said the trays were bought with private funds from Towle Silversmiths of Newburyport. The tray for the pope cost approximately $240 and was inscribed to him from the governor. The smaller trays cost $110 apiece, the governor's office said.

T-shirts say 'pope adds life'

BOSTON (AP)— Edward Thomas flew from his home in Pomona, Calif. to Boston early Monday morning to see Pope John Paul II, but ended up working instead — hawking commemorative medallions and key chains to pope viewers.

"As soon as I got here, a friend of mine introduced me to some guy named Ed. I don't know his last name," said Thomas, 24. "Ed asked me to sell these things, then handed me a gross of medallions, a gross of key chains and a vendor's license. We haven't discussed pay yet.

"But he's flying me around to follow the pope and sell these. He's also paying for my hotel rooms."

Thomas stood on a street corner with a display stand and a large leather bag full of the trinkets, just a few blocks from the papal altar on the Boston Common. He wasn't worried about not seeing the pope in Boston, John Paul II's first stop on his American tour.

"I'll see him in one of the cities," he quipped.

He was one of a multitude of hawkers lining the streets, selling anything they could find dealing with the pope's visit. Street musicians sang near subway stations with their instrument cases open for donations from the passing throng.

Items on sale ranged from posters or wall hangings to tshirts, bibles, buttons, books, records and papal bouquets.

Most vendors worked on commission but a few entrepreneurs risked their own money.

Erin Young, 20, of Framingham, took out a $4,000 loan to print 2,000 t-shirts with the Coca-Cola insignia and the words "The Pope adds Life."

Seabrook police fear violence

SEABROOK, N.H. (AP)— Those who must enforce the law at Seabrook this weekend genuinely fear that a history of peaceful demonstrations at the nuclear power plant may be replaced with violence.

They say the thousands of expected demonstrators don't understand the danger posed by rugged terrain around the oceanside plant, or a "battle plan" created by the demonstration's leaders.

The Coalition for Direct Action At Seabrook says it intends to occupy the power plant site Oct. 6 and stay there until construction is stopped. The coalition has advocated the use of ladders, wire cutters and other tools to breach the fence around the 115-acre plant site.

"My great concern," says Attorney General Thomas Rath, "is that the people who would be attracted to this event don't know what they're getting into.

"It's a real horse of a different color. It's just not going to be the joyous celebration of a group of people sharing the same philosophy that we've seen in the past; not because of the police, but because of the tone the organizers have set for themselves."

That tone, Rath says, has forced police to make contingency plans they might not have had to in the past, and don't wish to impliment this Saturday.

SC will rule on worker safety

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Supreme Court yesterday said it will decide whether workers have a right, free from an employer's retaliation, to refuse work they feel is too hazardous.

Beginning its 1979-80 term with a storm of activity, the nation's highest court returned from a three-month recess to issue orders in more than 800 legal controversies.

In addition to agreeing to resolve the worker safety case, one that could affect millions of Americans, the justices also took these actions:

Agreed to decide in a New York case whether states may prohibit public [illegible] from using inserts in cus[illegible] bills [illegible] pu[illegible]

Mashpee Indians denied ownership

WASHINGTON (AP)— The U.S. Supreme Court yesterday refused to revive an Indian tribe's attempt to regain ownership of Mashpee, Mass. and collect $500 million from the town's current landowners.

The justices turned down, without comment, a Mashpee Tribe appeal from lower court rulings that it does not have the legal right to file such a lawsuit.

In Mashpee, longtime selectman Kevin O'Connell said: "I feel relieved for many of the people in the community who have been drastically hurt financially.

"But there is no dancing in the streets. My town is torn apart and has been for the past three years," O'Connell added. "It is going to take a long time to heal the wounds."

The tribe's 1976 suit shocked the real estate market in the Cape Cod resort town of 3,000 year-round residents. After the suit was filed, virtually no mortgages were available because titles were clouded.

Homeowners could not move, and developers were stuck with bank notes and tax bills for property they could not sell. O'Connell said he knew one widow in need of nursing home care who could not sell her house to pay for it.

The town government is on the verge of bankruptcy, with taxes more than $1 million in arrears, O'Connell added. He said many landowners will not be able to recover financially unless the banks can give them two years or more to pay up their overdue mortgages.

Russell Peters, chairman of the Wampanoag Tribal Council, which filed the suit, said of the Supreme Court's refusal to review the case: "I think it's really a miscarriage of justice. Civil justice is not very civil."

U.S. District Court Judge Walter Jay Skinner dismissed the Indians' case in 1978 after a jury ruling that the Mashpees did not meet the legal definition of an Indian tribe.

The 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last February upheld the dismissal, sparking the tribe's Supreme Court appeal.

The Mashpees contended the tribe never legally relinquished ownership of the 11,000 acres that encompass the town. Indians were a majority in the town until the last decade.

The 1976 lawsuit charged that under a series of federal laws called the Indian Nonintercourse Act, tribal land could not be surrendered or taken without federal consent.

In addition, the suit sought $500 million in "trespass damages."

The case hinged on whether the Mashpees were a tribe in 1976 and in other years critical in the town's history.

The federal jury ruled that even though the Mashpee-Wampanoag Indian Tribal Council has been recognized by Massachusetts as the representative of the Mashpees since 1974, the Mashpees do not meet the legal definition of Indian tribe.

In their Supreme Court appeal, the Mashpees argued that under the standards used by the jury "a tribe could disband even though its members retained a tribal organization, identified themselves as Indians with a common tribal ancestry and held communal lands."

Hub property-tax ruling upheld; businesses taxed as homes

WASHINGTON (AP)— A Boston property-tax ruling which officials claim will cost the city $100 million in rebates was refused review by the Supreme Court yesterday.

The justices turned down the city's appeal aimed at reinstating its policy of taxing owners of commercial buildings at a higher percentage of their property's true value than private homeowners.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled last March 23 that commercial property tax rates can be no higher than rates on residential properties.

The state court's decision was handed down to settle a lawsuit filed by Norman Tregor, owner of a downtown Boston office building, who received a $86,931.79 tax bill from the city in 1976.

Tregor's building was assessed at $320,000 and taxed at the established commercial property rate of $252.90 per $1,000 assessed valuation.

Tregor's property had been assessed at a far higher rate of its true value than if it had been a residential [illegible] a note [illegible] the city of Boston in flagrant disregard of constitutional and statutory mandates," the state's highest court ruled that Tregor was entitled to a "reasonable abatement."

It defined that rebate as the difference between his 1976 tax bill and what his tax bill would have been had it been based on the same 26.8 percent assessment rate as the average residential property in the city.

In seeking help from the nation's highest court, city lawyers argued that the appropriate remedy would have been a rebate of the difference between Tregor's 1976 tax bill and what it would have been had it been assessed at "the average of all property in the city."

"The Supreme Judicial Court overlooked the practical impact of its decision, which discriminates against taxpayers of all classes in the ensuing year," the city's appeal said.

"...The windfall received by Tregor as a result of this decision would create a revenue shortfall which would have to be made up by a general tax increase in subsequent years. This burden would fall inequitably on all taxpayers," the city said in quoting the one dissenting state court judge.

Racial center cites low budget, problems

By KAREN LIBUCHA
Collegian Staff

While racial dissonance is on the rise on the UMass campus, the funding for a program geared toward combating racism is being cut, said Director of the Center for Racial Studies, Bheki Langa.

The center, established in 1971 and located in Moore House in the Southwest Residential Area, recently had its director's salary cut in half, lost a teaching assistant and is trying to continue functioning on what Bheki described as a "grossly inadequate budget."

The 1971 $30,000 annual budget has been cut to $14,000, four-fifths of which must be used to cover salaries, Langa said.

The center teaches courses in Southwest dormitory classrooms on racial problems existing in the United States, South Africa and Cuba, and sponsors various workshops and seminars dealing with the "dynamics of racism." A film series and an outreach program in which members speak at rallies, high schools and other community events are also part of the center's program.

The administration originally required heads of residence and residence assistants to take at least one course in racial awareness in order to prepare themselves for any racial problems that may arise in dormitories.

Under the direction of former Southwest Area Master Director James Matlack, this requirement was made optional, causing the racial studies courses to decrease in enrollment and the program to suffer severe budget cuts, Langa said.

Langa attributed low student enrollment in racial studies courses to the fact that some students believe that by taking such courses they will be admitting they are racist. The reason students should take such courses is to understand misconceptions about different cultures, Langa said.

A G-core requirement, proposed last year by the Committee to Combat Racism, a campus group, would require all students to take at least one course in the awareness of human oppression.

The proposal is presently being evaluated by the Faculty Senate for feasibility. Langa said to instill such a university requirement would be "the most sane thing you can do in a country that is slipping into a pre-1960 era of racial awarenes."

Langa said center seminar groups have experienced problems in the past because participants became too emotional to take a responsible position on racial issues. "There aren't enough resources to sufficiently address the problem," Langa siad.

When the center gets the money it needs to expand its program and involve students in small discussion groups, then perhaps campus-wide racism can be addressed, Langa said.

Under the direction of Langa, the center has drafted a forty-page request for funding proposal to submit to various foundations for grants. In order to keep the center staffed and able to distribute information necessary to combat racism, center staff persons are proposing a $91,050 annual budget. Langa said he was looking forward to working with the new Southwest Master Area Director, Melton Miller on achieving these ends.

The staff for the Center for Racial Studies consists of Bheki Langa and Mokubung Nkomo, both South African graduate students working on doctorates in international education, and Steve Coons of San Diego, Calif., who is working on his doctorate in political science.

Marea Wexler, whose paid Teaching Assistant position was cut this semester, still volunteers her time at the center and is working with the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy to push through the proposal for a G-core requirement. Also on the staff is Valerie Young, a graduate student in the School of Education.

Langa is also performing in a play he wrote about South African apartheid in an effort to raise student awareness and money for future projects at the center. The play will be performed at Hamden Commons in Southwest Oct. 14 and 15.

Women meet, share ideas, pool resources

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

A network of campus women's groups to share ideas and pool resources was planned Saturday by a meeting of the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Issues discussed included anti-violence and safety, sexual harassment, grievance procedures and organizing International Women's Week, Abortion Action Week and Jewish Women's Week.

Twenty-five women, including representatives from Legal Studies, the Women's Caucas, the Bi-lingual Collegiate Program and the Socialist Feminist Collective, attended the three-hour meeting.

UMass women need a "network directory so we know where to go for events and meetings," SCERA member Mary Jane Paika said. She suggested programming the computer terminal in SCERA, located in 422 Student Union, as a women's resource center where information from various campus groups could be coded and easily obtained.

"Women need an active way of contacting with each other a means to organize and advertise events by developing some sort of contact system to get groups together."

"This way the computer terminal would list the resources and information with phone numbers so people wouldn't have to run from one office to another all over campus searching for information. Right now women can look under sexism and women's issues but I want to add other categories on the terminal," Paika said.

The purpose of this terminal would be to "have a way of communicating between women's groups so we know what each group is doing and we can support each other," SCERA member Lesley Murovitz said.

"We need an active way of contact with each other, a means to organize and advertise events by developing some sort of contact system to get groups together," SCERA member Margaret Reid said.

Suggestions were made for funding International Women's Week which will not receive as many funds as last year.

"We need to start now with fund-raising or International Women's Week won't become a reality," said Jill Tregor, SCERA member and week organizer.

Plans for Abortion Action Week, Oct. 22 to 24, were discussed by members of the Socialist Feminist Union. Planned events include placing a table in the Campus Center concourse for signing petitions, workshops on the moral and health issues concerning abortion, films and a concert.

UMass women ready for both marriage and career

By DEBBIE COHEN
Collegian Staff

"Career or marriage" for UMass women is no longer an either/or proposition; for most, it is "career...and maybe marriage," according to a recent Collegian survey.

The survey of 50 students revealed that both sexes expect a woman to pursue a career and, if she chooses, to marry. Every woman interviewed said she plans to have a career, and all but two men said that they expect their future wife to work.

"My wife will have to have a career or else I won't marry her," one man said. "You can't have a healthy marriage unless both partners have a successful career.

Another man said that he wants his future wife to pursue her career despite any marriage conflicts it could cause. Because "if the marriage doesn't work out, I don't want to ruin her life by taking away any opportunities," he said.

In contrast, a few men said their wives would have a career "until it interferes with the marriage."

One man said his future wife will work "in the early going...until she has kids."

None of the women interviewed said they desired to become a housewife, although some said that they would modify their careers or even stop working if a conflict arose between work and marriage.

One woman commented, "Hopefully, my husband will make enough money to support me...If we have children, then my marriage will definitely take precedent over my career."

Some women interviewed agree with this philosophy, but others feel that a career is equally or even more valuable to them than marriage.

One woman said that she looks for "security in a career, not in marriage." She said, "A healthy marriage is dependent upon a successful career."

SUPE petitions for study space

By PAUL BANKS
Collegian Staff

The Students United for Public Education will be asking students today to sign a two-part petition, calling for improved campus study space and increased access to library information, chairman Greg Tarpinian said.

The petition is at a SUPE-operated booth outside South College, open from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The booth will be set up until Friday.

Of the library situation, Tarpinian said, "If we students don't stop this now, in five years this campus is going to be a wasteland."

SUPE's goal is "to unite all students against the attacks on higher education," Tarpinian said. The group believes "education is a right and not a privilege. It is a social responsibility to educate those who want higher education," he said.

SUPE is interested in improving four facets of UMass life, Tarpinian said. First, the group believes tuition should be abolished because it is a barrier to obtaining higher education. Second, they disapprove of state-mandated budgets.

Fonda—her changing role

A quick ten minutes in a small room in the Curry Hicks Cage -- a chance interview with Fonda and Hayden, the political couple who even now go on with a nationwide, 50-city, 30-day "barnstorming" tour. A chance to ask of politics and the politics behind what we see -- of marriage, children, career and future...a quick ten minutes...The following are brief exerpts from an interview with the couple conducted by Collegian reporter Pamela Lindmark immediately before their Sunday night appearance at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Collegian: How is the tour affecting you personally, as a couple? Are you getting tired? Is it ever a strain on your personal relations?
Hayden: Are you kidding?
Fonda: No, not at all.
Collegian: How do you feel about all the controversy? There's been a lot of controversy on this campus, and as I understand it, in other places you've been...specifically, here with the veterans.
Hayden: It generally helps us. . .Because they're foolish enough to attack our right to freedom of speech, or hers in particular, and that gets the student government all agitated, gets the students all aroused. . .brings out more veterans groups to support us. It converts more people to a posture of waking up and thinking about issues.
Collegian: Do you think the whole Vietnam issue and what's happened during that period of your life has relevance here? Should it be brought up Fonda: Well, the whole problem with vets and what they're having to face today is something I care incredibly about and that's why I made "Coming Home." That's the irony of this whole thing.
I don't think that there's anybody that has put in as much time (someone who's not a vet) and worked as closely on these issues and tried to do what I've tried to do.
Collegian: Some of the vets seem to feel you have exploited them for your own purposes with your film "Coming Home."
Fonda: I don't think that that's true, at all. . .That's not the feeling of most of the vets, I don't think.
Collegian: Your new movie "9-5" -- does it deal with feminist issues at all?
Fonda: It's a comedy, but it's about office workers, so it's going to show everything.
Collegian: Do you think it will have political relevance to the women's movement?
Fonda: It hink it's going to have a lot of meaning to clerical workers. I think that it will be funny and entertaining enough that a lot of people will want to see it regardless of whether they're interested in the issue or not.
Collegian: Are you concerned with the woman's role in the United States today?
Fonda: Certainly
Collegian: Do you think your role — how people view you — has changed through the years?
Fonda: Certainly... Well, I. . .
Collegian: What I'm trying to say is your movies have changed in content. . .your involved with more with politics now. . .do you think people are viewing you as a more credible individual than they did, perhaps, years ago?
Fonda: Why don't you judge that after the speech and just tell from your own audience.
Collegian: How do you feel about your role as mother and father, as parents. . .your political involvement — does that affect your children at all? Does it worry you?
Hayden: I don't want to talk about it. I think that a line has to be drawn somewhere or else you become totally celluloid.
Fonda: We have a private life and we have a public life. We care to show you our public life.
(Hayden walks away from interview.)
Collegian: The progression seems to have been in your life from a focus on acting to one on politics...Do you see this as a natural progression?
Fonda: It's not a true progression, you're a little off there. I think that I focus more on acting than I ever have before.
Collegian: Politics combined with acting?
Fonda: That's been true for the past 10 years.
Collegian: As opposed to earlier in your carrer?
Fonda: Before I was an activist I could have cared less...I was an apathetic drop-out.
Collegian: You were at Vassar college...your major there?
Collegian: Why?
Fonda: I wasn't learning anything and I was wasting my parents' money...I thought that I could learn more out in the real world. I don't encourage that as a solution, I have nightmares about it. I wish that I hadn't done that, but I didn't find school relevant to me at the time.
Collegian: You just finished the movie with Robert Redford — "The Electric Horseman," have you discussed some of the issues of the Campaign for an Economic Democracy?
Fonda: We shared info all the time...I've known Robert for years. We've been in three movies together and we share a lot of information about our activities and our concerns. We're both very actively involved in the solar movement as is his wife Lola.
Collegian: Since you've come to the East coast and started the tour — do you have any insight now that you didn't have?
Fonda: Yeah, I think that that's accurate...I had a feeling that things are not always as they sometimes are described.
It's been a while since I've been to the East so I wasn't sure what the situation would be here. . .
You who live in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire in particular have a tremendous opportunity, because of the primaries, to pressure the candidates to take positions. . .Seabrook. . .
Collegian: Do you find the East coast conservatives are more conservative than those in California?
Fonda: Oh, I'm not in any position to judge. . .

lies with the consumer.

The corporations, Hayden said, are "setting prices that can't go on without leading to a greater crash than the one in 1929."

"There is no economic investment for the future of the people and the economy of the United States," he said.

"There's been a lot of talk about limiting government...it's hypocritical and one-sided if you don't talk about limiting the behavior of big business."

Hayden called for a move "to deal with corporate power in the marketplace rather than a reduction of the power of government."

It is because of the power of big business and the nuclear industry, Hayden said, that we are faced with the high level of today's energy crisis.

Consumption habits of the American people are not solely responsible, he said, as corporations would like to believe.

Hayden's view of the U.S. economic future, if unchanged, was pessimistic. He said the country is left with "an inflation we can't afford," -- a slow economy which would freeze women and minorities from positions "barely gained" in the last few years, ending with last unemployment.

"I call that bankruptcy," he said. "Intellectual and political bankruptcy."

Citing solar development in his home state of California, Hayden said he sees solar horizons broadening, serving not only as an energy alternative, but also as a "job boom for the future."

"We need to call upon these industries to lay their cards on the table and we will lay our cards on the table and if we can prove it is economically possible...then they should give up and invest their money in some other business," he said, drawing audience applause.

Fonda followed Hayden's speech with one covering a wider variety of issues.

"I prefer to be able to see who I'm talking to," she said, asking for camera lights shining at her to be shut off before she would speak.

Her opening words addressed the controversy surrounding she and Hayden, their campaign and their tour. She said she believed there were veterans present "who are angry, who are confused, who are upset, and this saddens me very much...this saddens me very much..."

"While I absolutely share as much as I can, I think it is misdirected when directed at myself in particular," she said.

Fonda said she once was a "believer" who "couldn't tolerate" the truth she saw. "The other side of the coin of faith is rage," she said.

"There was a tendency to view soldiers as part of the problem," she said of the Vietnam era. "I never felt that."

"I said, 'Don't write off soldiers,' they have been deceived just as much as the rest of us...," she said.

"Those of us who never went there will never ever be able to understand what they went through," she said. "We'll never know."

"It's critical that we don't forget them," she said, calling for pressure on politicians to continue with and increase veterans' aid.

Fonda said she and Hayden would be willing to meet with veterans, that they have done so in other areas, but only with those "truly representative, not one of the groups who are mouthpieces of right-wing propaganda organizations."

In developing their theme of "economic democracy," Fonda said the women's movement and ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment should be secondary to the more central issue of economy.

The Western Mass. Arbotion Action Coalition talked with SFU about organizing community projects, representative Karen Lederer said.

Jewish Women's Week, organized by Everywomen's Center and Hillel, will also be held Oct. 22 to 29. The program will include speaker Sonya Michele, who will discuss "Jewish Women in the Midwest," a critique of Israeli women, videos and an art exhibit.

Everywomen's Center representatives discussed plans for community education dealing with women and violence. Counseling for rape and abuse victims and a 24-hour hotline are currently available at the center.

Women Against Pornography will participate in a march on Times Square in New York at noon, Oct. 20, a representative said. Currently the group is protesting X-rated movies on campus.

SCERA members also discussed setting up a grievance committee for campus women who are sexually harassed.

The Women's Media Project is planning a bi-weekly film series, a WMUA radio show, women's magazines and resource materials, video and audio equipment and a resource list of women with media skills in the Pioneer Valley, according to a newsletter read at the meeting.

A newsletter describing the meeting will be mailed out to interested women's groups who were not present. It will be translated into Spanish, as requested by the Bi-lingual Collegiate Program representatives.

"We need a way to pull together quickly and effectively on big issues," SCERA members said in a memorandum. "We need to ensure that there is an adequate flow of information among us, and that we are not duplicating each other's efforts."

"There is a need for organizations to remain autonomous, speaking to the needs of their own constituents, but there are issues and approaches on which we can and must agree."

Selectmen approve extension

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night approved a 1200-foot extension of the West St. Bikeway from the Pumping Station to the Crocker Farm School.

The selectmen said they hope the bikeway will connect UMass and Hampshire College, said Selectwoman Nancy Eddy.

The approximate cost of the eight-foot wide bikeway is $19,993.16, 25% of which will be borne by the town.

The selectmen approved and signed the town warant for the Special Town Meeting October 15 in the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School. They voted to support Article 8, a Housing Internship Program, in which interns would be trained by appropriate town officials to conduct screening inspections of local homes.

"Officials at the University have expressed an interest in working with the town on this project and it appears that the Environmental Health Program at UMass would be the most appropriate source of interns," said Assistant Town Manager Donald Jacobs.

Renovation halt keeps workers in limbo

By KARIN HOLMES

Various workers displaced from Goodell due to renovations planned last year, may now be placed in limbo because of the building's use as the temporary library, Physical Plant Director George Norton said.

The organizations, formerly in Goodell, are now in several other campus buildings.

"We moved to Wilder Hall with the intention of moving back, but now we don't know what's going to happen," said Gamilla Gaston, of the Everywomen's Center.

"The renovations to be done include heating, lighting and ventilation to accommodate office space. The designs are in the final stages and were getting underway, until they were stopped," Norton said.

"We may go back to the original plans once the library problem is over or the plans may be changed due to the new needs Goodell may acquire along the way," he added.

"The plans can't continue at this time before heating, lighting and ventilation can be worked on. Offices have to be constructed. Walls have to be put up and the scope of the occupants has to be considered," he said.

Ben Rodrieguez of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, who also moved to Wilder Hall, said there are mixed reactions to being moved. "The staff loves the building and there are small rooms for us to counsel in rather than the open space we had in Goodell. The building is old, though, and there are a lot of indoor problems. There is flooding and the temperature is often odd - it's freezing in the winter and unbearably hot in the summer."

The Communications Skills Center was moved to Bartlett, but staffers say they are content with the move. "Although we lost the view, we are ideally located in Bartlett. The only problem is that our space is spread out in small rooms, and each one needs personnel and phones. Our staff is small and the cost of phones has gone up for us," staffer Shirley DeShields said.

Carter stand softens on troops

WASHINGTON (AP)— President Carter said last night that the United States will increase its military presence in the Caribbean, but he told the nation that the controversy involving Soviet troops in Cuba "is certainly no reason for a return to the Cold War."

He reiterated that during recent negotiations, Soviet officials have insisted that the troops do not make up a combat force.

The issue concerning Soviet troops in Cuba has delayed Senate consideration of the SALT II accord signed by Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in Vienna.

the trip into Boston.

"My son, he built the platform for the pope."

Peter, 22, said he worked part-time for the firm, which usually builds high-risers for large, outdoor rock concerts. He smiled when he heard his mother's description of his job.

"My son," she said proudly, "he works for the pope."

finally approached along Beacon Street, standing in an open car, his arms outstretched, the throng broke into shouts and cheers.

Umbrellas were lowered as the stirring hymn "Praise to the Lord, the Almighty" signaled the pope's arrival. He stood on the altar, brightly spotlighted against the dusk, and began the Mass. "In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

The motorcade had changed its route to avoid a demonstration by an estimated 1,000 persons protesting the shooting of a black youth at a football practice Friday.

The pope had spoken of the city's racial problems in a visit to Holy Cross Cathedral en route to the common, noting that "people of all races, colors and creeds ... have created workable solutions."

Thousands lined the city's narrow streets as the pontiff's motorcade drove from Logan Airport, passing through neighborhoods that represent Boston's — and the nation's — diversity.

This is the nation's secondlargest Catholic diocese. More than two million of the area's 5.7 million residents are Catholics.

Waving flags of papal gold and white, crowds a dozen deep along the sidewalks shouted "Viva il papa!" as the motorcade passed through the Italian North End. Rosaries were held aloft as it whisked, too, through Irish "Southie" and the Hispanic section of the South End.

Gold and white were everywhere when the pontiff landed at the airport after a three-day visit to Ireland.

The pope's Aer Lingus jumbo jet, the "St Patrick," set down at 2:49 p.m. EDT as a band from St. Ann's parish in Neponset blared a welcome and waved flags of red, white and blue stripes.

The pope, emerging from the jet in a brilliant red robe, kneeled at the bottom of the ramp and kissed American ground as a reception group of 400 church and government leaders cheered and applauded.

First lady Rosalynn Carter welcomed John Paul II for the week-long tour that will also take him to New York, Philadelphia, Des Moines Chicago and Washington. She had invited the pope to visit when she had an audience with him last May at the Vatican.

"We welcome you to our country with love," she told him. "We Americans of every faith have come to love you in a very special way."

The pope replied in his deep, thickly accented voice: "It is a great joy for me to be in the United States of America ... to greet all the American people of every race, color and creed.

"I come to you, America, with sentiments of friendship, reverence and peace," he said. "I come as one who already knows you and loves you, as one who wishes you to fulfill your noble destiny of service to the world."

Yom Kippur services held

More than a thousand people attended Yom Kippur services held in the Student Union Ballroom Sunday and yesterday.

The services, sponsored by UMass Hillel, were conducted by Hillel coordinator Rabbi Saul Pearlmutter. Three separate services were held, one Sunday night and two yesterday.

The holiday, which is the holiest day of the year for Jews, is customarily celebrated by a day of prayer and fasting. The holiday began Sunday night and ended at sunset yesterday. At the end of the Monday services refreshments were served by Hillel, signifying the end of the day-long fast.

MEET FOUR PEOPLE WHO FOUND CAREERS WITH NSA.

COMPUTER SCIENTIST

"My objective on graduating from college was to obtain employment with a leader in my profession. NSA fulfilled that objective. The histories of NSA and the computer have been intertwined since the origins of both. NSA continues to be the pacesetter in the data systems field — presenting opportunities to be a part of the latest technology being developed and used industry-wide."

Pressing vets wooed?

Stephen Klein

The press conference was to be held at 6:30 in Campus Center room 101. The press showed up; about 100 Veterans of the Foreign War attended (they were not Nazi-by-association as Fonda so aptly mentioned twice in her chat with the UMass community and which Hayden had corrected to just once); the John Birch Society made an appearance, but Hayden and Fonda didn't show up...not until later. It's a big missing media event. At that level that's all it was.

However, the anti-Fonda veterans suffered defeat on all fronts.

The show climaxed a culmination of emotions and a barrage of piercing rhetoric which has not been equalled on this campus since the parthenogenesis scare of late or the Grateful Dead concert last spring.

Student organizers cited some interesting reasons for the Hayden, Fonda disappearing act at the originally scheduled press conference. It was cancelled by Fonda's advance people for fear of tarnishing public relations – it wouldn't look right on television to view such a clash of ideals between the actress, the activist and the vets. It would bounce her back to the old image, in so many words.

Is there not something hypocritical about this scene? Fonda, a staunch supporter of the grassroots, civil disobedience movement throughout the sixties and into the seventies, dodges a group peacably assembled to do the very same thing.

Fonda spoke beautifully. She addressed the veterans squarely in what was perceived as a perfect marriage between the right thing at the right time in the right way. It was amazing. I just can't decide if it was for real. As the excellent actress, she could stand on her head, laugh, cry and seem angry all the while convincing me she was for real. She certainly convinced the 4000 attendees as was clear from the numerous ovations. I believed her but...

Perhaps the heart of the problem was the old labeled head trick. Veterans, in it's universal form, is a loaded term meaning anything from Nazi connected rhetoric tossers to "corporate apologists" to anti-Fonda pro-freedom of speechers to pro-Fonda vets. Fonda was under the impression, the sincere impression I might add, that most of the vets weren't groups of concerned vets – that's not the impression I received, in the least. Whether it was intentional or not, it was smear by association. Yes, the John Birch Society was there passing out extreme propaganda. "An actress she may be, but Jane Fonda's love affair with communists and their goals for America is no act."

But, to make the great leap from Bircher ideals to veterans in general to UMass veterans is convenient.

The veterans got the shaft. It's wrong. The Vietnam veterans in particular are constantly getting the royal shaft. My first semester I lived with a Vietnam vet who swore up and down the Marines didn't affect him in the least (or his 11 month tour of Vietnam for that matter). Every night he would grind his teeth to the point of vibrating the dorm windows. Then on top of that they get shitted on by all us confused idealists...

The press conference was held after the show; word was passed around via whispers spread around the press seats.

As the veterans lined up from the originally cancelled press conference they marched in formation to the Curry Hicks stage singing "God Bless America" and the National Anthem and it made me think. It made me think we've all missed something and it makes me very confused. It was embarrassing for that patriotism doesn't exist today.

What's really confusing is should it exist in the same light as it has in the past? The rhetoric was certainly there all evening.

V.F.W.: "God Bless America..."
Hayden: "...politicians polluted by corruption..."
V.F.W.: "...beneath bombs red glare..."
Hayden: "The Seabrook occupation is wrong."
Fonda: "I scold my children, does that mean I don't love them."
A heckler: "Treason"
Fonda: "Don't lose hope..."
Fonda: "Don't lose hope..."

Pope, peace hide n' seek

Julie Robinson

If you have recently read such papers as the Boston Globe or the Boston Herald American, you have probably viewed several accounts of the historic visit to Boston by Pope John Paul II. The visit, though a celebrated event throughout New England has been tragically marred by the shooting of a 17-year-old football player from Jamaica Plain High School.

Such placating remarks as : "It was a random shot," and, "It couldn't have been racially motivated" are simply trite in the face of a crying congregation and a stone-faced mother who tells of her son's fight for existence while in a coma. The Globe advocates "prayers, not marches," to solve the city's racial tensions and racially oriented crimes. Where were the prayers when Joseph A. Nardone, Stephen McGonigle, and another white Charlestown youth used a 22 callibre pistol on Darryl Williams? Did not the Pope's blessings apply to him?

Mayor White said, "The Pope came here in peace." Is there peace in Charlestown now? Is there peace in Roxbury now? Is there peace in South Boston? What is peace??? The general call seems to be: You name it, we'll game it. Something is grossly wrong with our society when this type of deceipt takes place within hours of a papal visit. Or before, or after.

Darryl Williams is in critical condition at Boston City Hospital while three beer-guzzling, baby hit-men are charged with assault and battery. What is peace, and where is it?

How many times must we see a Seta Rampersad, a Jose Pontez, a Craeman Gethers or a Darryl Williams?

The newspapers have emphasized the cooperativeness of the Charlestown community during the whole ordeal. Where was the cooperation when those poor, misled, young men bought the handgun with which they maimed another human being? What is peace and where is it?

The time is long since past when people of oppressed nations realize that they are the victims of legal oppression and psychological warfare that has never before been witnessed. Prayer and harmony does not deflect bullets. The time has long since past when people must act with urgency for the good of society because if we don't, the raging malice, deceipt, disunity, and hatred that we now see exhibited will be the downfall of humanity.

That's not my 'role as Jew'

To the Editor

Regarding James Lewis' editorial "Black-Jew rift very serious problem," Collegian, Sept. 21:

I want to thank Mr. Lewis for clarifying for me my role as a Jew in U.S. society. I had always thought that I had actively opposed the Bakke decision, favored school desegregation, and tried in general to be supportive of Third World liberation struggles. I guess all the power my people have in Congress and the media has distorted my self-awareness. Thanks again for enlightening me. I'll have to go tell all my relatives.

Teddy doesn't 'steal lunch'

To the Editor

Stephen Nojeim's editorial of September 26, reminiscent of the ludicrous trash that Ayn Rand churned out in "The Fountainhead" and "Atlas Shrugged", is a typical example of the simplistic and irrational arguments that capitalists [and Fascists] offer against socialism.

In several hundred words Mr. Nojeim has reduced several hundred years of work by social theorists to his profound conclusion: "SOCIALISM IS FOR THE LAZY." He also tells us that socialism "theorizes an equal share for everyone, regardless of his or her contribution." Not quite. The appropriate phrase is "...from each according to his ability, to each according to his needs."

This does not necessitate an equal share for everyone per se, just an equalization of the wealth among all members of society as a whole. The central issue here is fairness. Mr. Nojeim, is it fair that because of his ability a Ph.D's ill child should be afforded quality medical care while an assembly line worker must tell his ill child that he cannot pay for the same medical treatment?

Don't worry achievers, Kennedy doesn't want to steal your lunch, he just wants to see that everyone has a lunch. In a nation as wealthy as ours, is that too much to ask?

Stephen Collins

Teddy's rich, not red

To the Editor

In his article "Why Teddy" Stephen Nojeim makes many absurd assumptions. The first of which is his assertion that Senator Kennedy is, "a staunch socialist." Senator Kennedy has never used the word socialist to describe himself, he is absolutely not a member of any socialist organizations, and American socialists would not describe Senator Kennedy as a socialist.

Another absurd assumption is that socialists are commonly referred to as liberals. Apples do not equal pears, nor do socialists equal liberals. Mr. Nojeim should know the meaning of a word before he uses it in an article.

Another absurd statement Mr. Nojeim makes is that "socialism is for the lazy." This is a generalization which has no factual basis whatsoever. Yet another absurd statement is that Kennedy wants all workers to receive the same pay. Senator Kennedy has never said that all workers should receive the same pay, nor has he ever proposed legislation of this nature. Mr. Nojeim should be aware that Senator Kennedy is a wealthy individual and were socialism imposed in America he would lose his wealth.

Stephen Nojeim's article "Why Teddy" was full of many inaccurate and prejudicial statements.

Machine gun Joe's back?

To the Editor

I thought when Joe McCarthy died he was gone for good. It's too bad to see that he's been reborn, in spirit at least, in the person of Stephen Nojeim (Why Teddy? 9/26).

Editorial/Opinion

Choice thrills

Eric Janszen

Here I am, a white, male, middle class American student, young and energetic with all of American life's possibilities before me. I could finish school, get a job, get married, buy a car, buy a forty thousand dollar house for a hundred thousand dollars and have a couple of great kids to keep me busy while I'm waiting to see what kind of cancer I'm going to get, then die.

Or I might wind up in the military, learn esoteric technical skills, get promoted to ever higher ranks, and in the heat of a terminal oil shortage, be called to active duty in a sudden war, get blown to bits by some poor bastard defending his country's only valuable material resource.

Why, I could even stay in school doing graduate work for a leading University. Then, after years of concentrated effort, I might develop a practical engineering application of theory for a limitless, non-polluting energy source which, with some alterations, will be used by the military to kill millions of people in an exotic way. Even accidentally.

The scope of possibilities seems endless. But me, am I going to do one of these great things with my life? No. I'm apathetic. I'm going to throw my life away. How, you ask? Easy. You can do it too. Here's how:

1) Take a lot of drugs. The daily, even hourly ingestion of common prescription and illicit drugs is a vital step away from the more tedious and promising career and professional lifestyles requiring a presence of mind you can ill afford. Later, when you are several million brain cells removed from any hope of developing your career potential, you can leave all well behind by starting in on the heavy depressants and anti-psychotics. As you increase your daily intake of thorazine to 1000 miligrams, proceed to step two. (Your motto: Drugs. The next best thing to not being here).

2) Listen to Rock n' Roll and Punk tunes. Done almost constantly and at oppressive volumes, it is not crucial that particular artists be heard provided that the words and noises rattling your eardrums convey sentiments of anger, social impotence, and hopelessness. Also, it is not necessary to be subjected to this music at all times, such as during calls from your probation officer, but fail not to suffer serious exposures while engaged in activities associated with step three. (Your motto: Today is the first day of the last week of the rest of your life).

3) Get a huge car. If you can hold the road, a winding, two lane road like Route 202, for instance, in a 1969 Plymouth Fury III going ninety miles an hour, nearly conscious, with a Ramones tape blaring over the screaming of your friend who's dangling out the window threatening mayhem to everyone you pass, then you have created, at that moment, a climax of the American success mode antithesis. This is the whole point of your life. To preserve it, veer into a tree. (Your motto: No. Buzzards shall inherit the earth).

This may all sound a little drastic to you, all this free choice. Actually, it can be narrowed down to three decisions. You, the conscientious American student can either:

a) Aspire to do any number of things you would never want to do, following in the footsteps of successful men whose lives you would never want to emulate.

b) Throw your hands up and celebrate your confusion, and fail.

c) Do something else.

Thus, given a choice between failures, you are left to pursue discomfortingly formless aims, if you still care. Which I do not. Which brings me back to this business of throwing my life away. Of course, I could grow up first. We all might, and then what? What if we were to take doing "something else" seriously? Well at least then we'd all have to like each other or at least cooperate and that's boring. Ask your folks. They all know about boredom.

Mud sticks to foreigners

Refugees get shaft

Elved Owens

ABC's 20/20 recently focused on Seadrift, a Texas town in which acrimony has grown up between Vietnamese refugees and the native population. When the Vietnamese first arrived they were given employment in crab-meat processing plants; with diligence they managed to accumulate enough capital to buy their own boats and to compete with crab fishermen on the coast. The natives became distressed; they had long established their own harmonious routines, they were agreed about fishing terrorities and practices and they were content enough with their safe lot. All this changed when the Vietnamese, with their reputation for hard work, moved in, causing the Texans to feel threatened and insecure in the new, earnestly competitive atmosphere.

This situation alone would be sufficient to fuel suspicion between natives and newcomers (and who knows how much this pattern is being repeated in the hundreds of small towns which have received refugees). Economic realities often lie near the heart of racial tension. What has pushed Seadrift to the foreground is the shooting of a Texan fisherman - the first murder Seadrift had known - by a Vietnamese; this has confirmed the feeling held by many of the locals that it is the Vietnamese, as Vietnamese, who constitute 'the problem'.

America's experience in Vietnam only makes things worse; the mother of the murdered fisherman reflected this when she said that her son had been spared the draft and the war, only for the U.S. goverment to pay the fare to America of this Vietnamese murderer. The fact that this is grief talking doesn't diminish its contribution to ill-feeling in the town.

At the meetings called to discuss the difficulties a tearful Vietnamese girls statement (and what else could she say?) that there is good and bad in all races sank like a stone amid all the muttering about the shooting, about over-fishing, about lack of effort on the part of the Vietnamese to assimilate, and unsavoury talk about isolating the Vietnamese in a camp "where we could teach them our ways."

If suffering could be weighed and balanced, it might be possible to say, with a clear conscience, to the people of Seadrift: the distress these refugees have known bears no comparison to the unease which their commercial competition brought you, and it is wrong to turn their industriousness as individuals - and the crime of a misfit - into a perceived threat from their race. But of course suffering isn't like that, and no one but the crass could boast a conscience that clear.

In Seadrift mutual suspicion between strangers has been fed by the effects of competition for a limited resource, and the shooting has helped close minds on both sides; the natives say that they knew all along something like that would happen, and the Vietnamese will resign themselves to the pointlessness of trying to accomodate themselves to the natives. If the economic competition had come from American out-of-towners the acrimony would probably have been as intense; but race would not have been so readily available as a vehicle for blame; and mud almost invariably sticks to foreigners.

The chances of the basic grievance over fishing practices being resolved seems remote, particularly if the outstanding problem is that the Vietnamese indulge in the unfair competitive practice of working till they drop. As far as the education of the Vietnamese in order that they might approach their foreign hosts with patience, understanding and tact, is concerned, such lessons should at least be novel; in recent times they have not been taught well by others' example.

Cashin folks burnin' mad

To the Editor

At the beginning of this week the residents of Cashin [in Sylvan] were forewarned of the fact we were to have a fire drill on Wednesday, Sept. 26, evening. Around 8:13 an alarm went off. I reached for my things then realizing it was the alarm of McNamara, the building next door. OK, I figured in a few minutes it'd be our turn. The stereo had been shut off, I put my shoes on awaiting the sound of the alarm.

Sometime after 8:25 there was knocking on my door and someone yelling "Fire drill – Come on!". Fire drill I thought, funny I didn't hear an alarm. So I herded down the stairs with the other residents of Cashin, realizing that something was wrong. Why didn't I or my suitemates hear that alarm? Becoming more concerned I spoke with Keith Hoyle, Fire Marshall of the University. He said he knew of the problem. I then had to ask him what he intended to do about it. He said that one year ago a letter was sent to the Physical Plant office requesting an alarm or some device be installed so that the people in our end of the dorm could be alerted.

Later in checking with suites 206, 207, 406, 407, 506, 507, 706, 707, 806 and 807, it seemed pretty clear that people in the middle of Cashin cannot hear the fire alarm!

This happened obviously last year when many people slept through a drill!

Well, where is this device? In our housing contract under "University Responsibility" it states, "The University shall, within a reasonable time, exercize reasonable care to correct unsafe conditions in the residence halls." One year is Unreasonable! This is Unsafe! We've paid our bills and We want to hear this alarm!!!!

A. Fox and Concerned Cashin Residents

Let's shed some light

To the Editor

Have you heard the pitter-patter of little feet beneath your window lately? Well that's not the sound of children at play, that's the sound of women: frightened women running through the dark because they are terrified of what might happen to them in the pitch-black areas that plague this campus at night.

Women are attacked every night all over the country. This is a problem which, unfortunately, cannot be remedied immediately. Assaults can, however, be discouraged with adequate lighting; a rare thing at UMass.

It is time for the men and women of this University to unite and demand better lighting in residence areas and in the middle of campus. The excuse of "no funds" will no longer suffice. The women on this campus will need a better reason than that before they can stop feeling cheated out of their safety.

Melville Dorm Government and Southwest Assembly

Good job Donna Sullivan

To the Editor

I would like to compliment Ms. Donna Sullivan for producing an excellent story on sexual assault, which appeared in Tuesday's Collegian.

In the article, "Campus Assault; One Woman Tells Her Story"; a UMass transfer student shares her intense horrid account of sexual assault. This ugly experience is frequently unrevealed, yielding to many, scars of embarassment, guilt, disgust, and fear.

I think the victim, Ms. Alice Smith, deserves a lot of credit for her strength and candor in vocalizing her tale. Smith obviously has a lot of guts and perseverence, prominently displayed by her bringing the case to court. It is one thing to endure mental and physical injuries, but to prosecute, takes a lot of courage.

Sexual assault is a violent act among women, coming from all diversified backgrounds. All women should raise their consciousness levels and join together to combat this form of abuse. Caring people are needed to help one another become mentally and physically prepared to deal with this sad reality.

Women should battle together; to care about the other people living in this world. Smith and Sullivan demonstrated their concern, if everyone did their share, this environment would be a healthier place to live.

'Chapter Two' to play at FAC

by DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Neil Simon's comedy "Chapter Two" will appear at the Fine Arts Center concert hall, Thursday at 8 p.m., starring Dawn Wells, formerly the lovable country girl Mary-Ann from the long-running comedy series "Gilligan's Island."

Currently in its second Broadway hit season, Simon's 15th play is a romantic comedy, the account of a man's adjustment to the death of his wife, as well as to a new romance. The title refers to the second chapter in the life of a widower and a divorced woman.

"Chapter Two" is a semi-autobiographical account of the early weeks of the relationship between Simon and his second wife, actress Marsha Mason.

The hero of "Chapter Two" is novelist George Schnider, who has just returned from a long visit to Europe, where he was trying to come to grips with the recent death of his wife of 12 years. David Faulkner, who plays George, has extensive television credits, including featured appearances on "Kojak", "Ryan's Hope", "The Doctors", "The Guiding Light", and "Search for Tomorrow".

George's brother Leo, played by Donald Gantry, convinces him it is time to start seeing other women, and after a series of miserable blind dates, he meets a recently-divorced actress named Jennie Malone, played by Dawn Wells. It soon becomes obvious that George and Jennie are a remarriage made in heaven, but before the evening ends, they painfully discover that true love does not run smoothly, especially on a retread.

"Chapter Two" which takes place in New York, is a rumination of my two marriages, Simon said recently.

Leo (Donald Gantry) tries to convince his brother George (David Faulkner-seated) not to rush into a second marriage in a scene from Neil SImon's comedy, "Chapter Two," appearing at the Fine Arts Center concert hall Thursday at 8 p.m.

Rape task force sets meeting for tomorrow

A Rape Task Force meeting is scheduled for tomorrow at noon in Campus Center room 165.

The proposed meeting will include updates of involvement in issues of personal violence summary reports from related task forces, and the status of current projects. For more information call Sgt. Mary Dumas at 5-2134.

Ship search rights upheld

WASHINGTON [AP] —The Supreme Court yesterday refused to hear a pair of appeals seeking to limit Coast Guard authority to search ships suspected of carrying illegal drugs.

The justices turned down separate appeals that sought to raise these legal questions:

—Can Coast Guard officers detain, board and search a vessel in the waters of a foreign nation?

—Can U.S. courts consider charges against persons arrested after their vessel is stopped and searched contrary to international treaty?

The first case stemmed from the Sept. 22, 1976 arrest of four men aboard the sailboat NAHOA in Haitian waters.

Officers aboard the Coast Guard cutter Dauntless had been tipped that the sailboat would be carrying contraband,

College Papers stars Lafler's Aluminum Foil

College Papers, a new quarterly magazine aimed at college students and published by Rolling Stone, goes on sale nationally today.

The 116-page first edition features Gilda Radner on the cover and includes stories on Bruce Springsteen, women's basketball, campus beer-drinking and science fiction.

Included in the "newsfront" section is "Future Funnies," a comic strip by Steve Lafler, UMass senior and author of "Aluminum Foil," a Collegian cartoon. Amherst College junior Rand Cooper interviewed John Irving, author of "The World According to Garp," in the publication's book section.

Also in the news section are articles on the raising of the drinking age in several states including Massachusetts, and students involved in anti-nuke groups and demonstrations.

The "notebook" section, which publishes college writers, artists and photographers, is a first in the magazine industry according to a press release. The statement also mentions that College Papers' editorial staff is composed primarily of college students and recent college graduates.

The magazine is printed on newsprint with a slick color cover, and has 65 pages of advertising. The sale price is $1.50.

Senate pushes House to return week early

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Senate overwhelmingly passed an emergency measure yesterday designed to keep the government fully functioning and to revoke a 12.9 percent pay raise for congressmen and top-level federal employees.

The approval, on a 77-9 vote, put new pressure on the House to return from its week-long vacation so that congressional action can be completed.

However, there was no assurance the bill could be passed even if the House went back to work — an action House officials said would not happen until next week.

The House wants stronger language on federal funding of abortions than is in the Senate bill.

It also wants the 12.9 percent pay hike scaled back to 5.5 percent. But the Senate bill would cut it back to 5.5 percent for 22,000 top bureaucrats and eliminate any increase for congressmen and senators.

Nothing can be done about the 12.9 percent pay hike some 900 federal judges automatically received Monday because the Constitution prohibits reducing the salary of a sitting judge.

The bill would provide operating funds for some of the nation's biggest government agencies — including the Defense Department and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare — which technically ran out of money when the new fiscal year began at midnight Sunday. For now, the departments are getting by on money left over from the fiscal year that ended Sunday.

The House had attempted to write strict limitations on abortion funding into the an earlier version of the funding bill — limitations the Senate has rejected repeatedly. That, together with the pay raise and the House's decision to recess, prompted enraged senators to kill the earlier bill.

As a result, a new fiscal year began Monday with no decision by Congress on operating funds for major government departments — the Housing and Urban Development, Labor, Agriculture and Transportation departments in addition to Defense and HEW.

Census: Americans play '19 questions'

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Census Bureau has decided that it just doesn't need to know how many left-handed, American pet-owners snore.

When the Bureau takes its 20th national head count next April the statisticians will be striving to learn not just how many of you are out there, but what you're like and how you live.

There are some things, however, that won't be asked.

Special-interest groups ranging from the poor to the handicapped to American Indians each has a need for special information and a desire to get it in convenient form.

This means that in the decade it has spent preparing for the 1980 census, the bureau was under constant pressure to ask this or that question, get such and such a piece of information.

And the answers are of more than academic interest: millions of dollars in federal and other money for groups and municipalities depend on the count.

The Constitution requires a head count of the people, the added questions are a look at the characteristics of the population, explained bureau spokesman Henry Smith.

But, he added, "The questions have to have some relationship with an identifiable national interest. We don't ask your religion or who you sleep with or whether you have a pet."

More than 70 meetings were held across the country to solicit views on what 1980's questionnaire should ask, and these meetings, starting in 1974, led to several changes in the forms.

Ray Bancroft of the bureau reported that among the questions urged at these sessions, but rejected, included whether a person is left-handed, whether you snore, whether you own pets or a horse, what type of leisure activities you engage in and your sexual preference.

Still, in each census year there are complaints that some questions are too personal. Bureau officials emphasize, however, that they are asked for statistical reasons and individual responses are kept completely confidential.

The 1980 census will ask 19 questions of every American, seven population questions and a dozen queries about housing. Bureau experts say it should take about 15 minutes to fill out the form.

One American in six — more in rural areas — will get a longer form that should take about 45 minutes to complete. It has an extra 20 housing and 26 personal questions.

The first question on all forms is simply the name of each person living in the household as of April 1, 1980.

Action during Saturday's field hockey game between UMass and the Vermont Catamounts. The Minutewomen downed the Cats 4-0 to remain undefeated. (Staff photo by Karen Libucha).

Stickers remain unbeaten

By LIZ STURM
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team continued its undefeated season by shutting out the University of Vermont 4-0 on the NOPE field last Saturday. The stickwomen completely dominated the first half scoring three goals to Vermont's zero. By the end of the first 35-minute half, UMass had 11 shots on goal to UVM's five.

The Minutewomen's sticks were smoking soon after the bully, signifying the start of the game, was taken. Laura O'Niel started the stickers off with her first goal early in the half. Laurel Walsh was next, tipping in a flick from team mate Judy Strong. Again Walsh scored, poking in a pass from Sue Caples in a scramble in front of the goal. This made the score 3-0 with only 13:30 minutes into the game.

The Minutewomen's pace slowed, scoring only once midway through the second half. All-American Laura O'Niel took a pass from Julie Hall on a penalty corner and confidently sliced it past the bewildered Catamount goalie and into the net.

Coach Pam Hixon was pleased with the outcome. "The first twenty-five minutes we were fantastic," Hixon added, the stickers had good goals and put a lot of pressure on Vermont. Overall everyone was strong and played well in the first half. It was in reference to the second half however, that she admitted, "We had our weak moments." The UMass defense began to lose their concentration and make mistakes but still managed to prevent their opponents from scoring, said Hixon.

Key players Judy Strong, Sue Caples, Laura O'Niel, Laurel Walsh and Pattie Bossio (despite a sprained knee from the Keene State game) were strong throughout the entire game.

Coach Hixon and the UMass stickers look forward to a good game against Mt. Holyoke away on Tuesday at 3 P.M. The Stickwomen defeated the Lyons last year 4-1 but face a new team and a new coach this season.

Golfers finish 2nd in Toski

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Despite leading by three shots after the first round of play, the UMass men's golf team finished second to Ramapo College of Bergen County, N.J. in the 27-team Toski Intercollegiate Invitational Tournament played Sunday and Monday at Hickory Ridge Country Club in South Amherst.

Ramapo, down by just three strokes after Sunday's action (301-304), fired an outstanding team total of 295 (best four scores of five golfers), and picked up 15 strokes on the Minutemen to win the tourney. Kevin Kennedy lead Ramapo, shooting an eight-over-par 147. Kennedy, however, finished third in the individual battle behind medalist Jim Hallet of Bryant College who shot a 145, and runnerup Jeff Page of Quinnipiac who shot a 146.

The rest of the top ten teams finished as follows: Central Connecticut 311-303-614, Rhode Island 322-300-622, Yale 317-314-631, Southern Connecticut 313-320-633, Connecticut 320-314-634, Salem St. 320-315-635, Bryant 322-315-637, and Dartmough 317-322-639.

Tony Kelley lead the Minutemen, shooting a three-over 73 the first round, and a five-over 75 the second to record a fine 148. Mark Duggan followed closely, shooting 73-79-152. Marty Hunt also shot a fine round, finishing with 79-76-155. Steve Midttun and Bob Gladchuck rounded out the squad, finishing with 76-81-157, and 84-80-164, respectively.

UMass coach Ed Vlach was naturally disappointed dropping into second place, but he was also impressed with Ramapo's outstanding second round score, (72-73-74-76-295).

This marks the end of the fall competitive golf season for the UMass linksters. Vlach and the entire team are looking forward to the spring season which gets underway in mid-April.

Booters rout Maine, 4-1

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Senior forward Wayne Moran scored a hat trick and Tony Dias added his fifth goal in four games as the Minutemen routed Maine 4-1 in Orono on Saturday.

The UMass win evens the booter's record at 2-0-2 and enabled the squad to remain as one of the unbeaten teams in New England.

Moran, who spent most of last summer on crutches with pulled ligaments in his leg, equaled his goal scoring output of 1978 when he took a cross pass from Gregg Draudt and beat Maine goalie Tom Stocken at 19:00 of the second half.

Sophomore Tony Dias again figured in the Minuteman scoring. Dias scored his fifth goal of the season early in the second half with the assist going to Fritz Pike. Dias is the only Minuteman to score in every game this season.

Moran netted his first goal with what he termed "lucky" circumstances when his attempted cross pass bounced off a Maine fullback into the net at 22:00 of the first half. Maine quickly answered with a tally of their own when the Bears' Bruce Houston beat UMass goalie Mark Marilla at 23:00.

Moran got his second unassisted goal of the day when he cut off a pass from Maine goalie Stocken to a fullback and went in virtually untouched at 41:30 for the game winner.

"I had a shaky year last year," Moran said in reference to his 1978 totals of three goals and two assists. The Magnolia, N.J. native started working out one month prior to the season opener.

The Minutemen now face the toughest part of this season with two big home games this week against Harvard and Vermont. Harvard lost a close game to top-ranked UConn this weekend, 2-1, while Vermont at 2-0-3 snuck by Boston University, 1-0, at Burlington to virtually end BU's NCAA Tournament hopes. UMass is still very much in contention, and this week could make them or break them.

"It's the Sportlite Show, starring Johnny Parson. Johnny's guest columnist today is that Shah of prediction, the man with all the insight, Franny the Greek. Tonight Franny will give us his views on some of the more important upcoming sporting events, as well as answer many of the burning questions on the sports pages today...And now, heeeeeere's The Geek."

(Music. Applause. Geek brings typewriter out on stage, waves to audience, smiles, bows, walks over to desk, sits down, begins typing. Audience watches monitor.)

Could Bozo the Clown take the Rifleman in a twelve-round bout at Madison Square Garden. This issue was brought to light recently when Bozo challenged the former basketball player, claiming he was tired of the T.V. cowboy's short clown jokes.

Obviously The Rifleman has the height and reach advantage over the kiddies' favorite, but the fight would be held on Bozo's home turf where his ratings were the highest. Also in the clown's favor is the fact that he has that fake nose which, when lined with lead, is a formidable guard against injury. Not only that, sources tell me that Bozo has been known to keep a little supply of cocaine in his phony schnoz, which he uses as a quick pick-me-up in the later rounds. Apparently Bozo doesn't toot his nose just to make the kids happy. It is not known at this time whether McCain would protest this tactic.

Lucas stated publically that he was not afraid of "the short clown" and he and his manager, Jacque Cousteau, would be available to set a fight date any time after December (when the water freezes).

Others may disagree, but I have to go with the Rifleman in three. I think the clown will be able to keep Lucus laughing through the first two rounds, but after three rounds McCain will have had enough time to gain his composure, load his gun and ... Blam! Blam! Blam! It's move over Clarabell.

In other sports news, rumor has it that Henry Finkel, the one-time Boston Celtics center who retired several years ago, is trying to make a comeback with the Celtics as a guard. Coach Bill Fitch said he is interested in the seven-foot, two-inch, guard, but noted that Finkel would have to learn to control his dribbling both on and off the court before the coach could consider him seriously.

Fitch also said the Celtics president, Red Aurbach, was in the process of making a deal to help solve the team's backcourt woes, but the trademaster would have to clear it with the league commissioner before making final arrangements. Fitch would not elaborate further.

My sources tell me Aurbach is willing to trade his entire backcourt, along with future draft choices and cash, to the various NBA teams if those teams will in return allow the Celtics to start their offense at half court every game. Fitch believes this could work for the C's because forward Cedric Maxwell is capable of dribbling the ball to the newly instituted three-point line. From there he could hand it to Larry Bird, "and everything will just be hunky dorey."

In a similar light, the Boston Bruins have acquired the rights to figure skater Dorothy Hamill, who has stated she will not renew her contract with the Ice Follies at year's end. Bruins' management said it was not sure the former Olympic star would be able to make next year's squad, but guaranteed Hamill a one-year contract in the front office regardless. Hamill said she would give it her best shot. Tickets to the Bruins' 1980 training camp go on sale tomorrow.

Join Johnny tomorrow when he'll discuss Bjorn Borg's name, Howard Cosell's incredible birth, and Senator Edward Kennedy's challenge of Pope John Paul II to a popularity contest in Ireland.

Concrete airplanes

A new sports novelty store opened recently at that architectural abortion (the Polyester mall) on Rt. 9 catering to the fantasies of every pseudo—and quasi—athlete ever to steal an Eddie Bressoud bubblegum card from the neighborhood nerd.

Yes, you too can lay claim to feats of jockdom by simply purchasing an (official major leaguel Carlos Lopez poster, a Bobby Murcer batting glove (Cubs model), a J.R. Richard jersey (size 278) or a Don Zimmer brain-scan (ooo).

Speaking of which, get out your Zimmer baseball cards (yes, his head really is shaped like that) and pretend that you are manager of the Sox. Think. Pretend. Not easy, huh? Especially not when your head is full of balloon juice. Yell "hey, hey," or "nice play son," even though the regular season is over by now.

Pretend you are Mike Torrez, the A.L.'s most prominent hard-boiled pitcher and a .500 soda drinker at best. Or pretend that you are, perhaps, Rick Bosetti, a Blue Jay who once mistook center-field for what many Philistines mistake sinks for at Mt. Holyoke parties.

Pretend that you are Julio Cruz. Heity Cruz. Cirillio Cruz. Victor Cruz. Pablo Cruz. Carribean Cruz. Cruz missle. Their father. Their mother, God forbid.

Pretend that you are Jim Rice. Thanks, Corrine.

Pretend that you are Bob Montgomery and look like cro-magnon man. Or that you are Ted Sizemore, a real concrete airplane. Better yet, pretend that you are Pete "Meathead" Rose. Have a pre-frontal lobotomy, and wonder why you will sit it out for another October. Duh?

Drain you cerebellum and make-believe that you are Bowie Kuhn. Wonder what you'd do if they ever write Bombo Rivera onto the All-Star team, or Bill Lee draws your bath water. And what would you do if you were (drum-roll, please) Rafael Landestoy, the Bombo Rivera of the National League.

Pretend that you've been drafted by the Oakland A's—well better skin that one.

Enough baseball. Like to be the Jets' QB Richard Todd, a jockola who still thinks he's in high school. Just think, you could get another chance to ask out the cheerleaders. Or pretend that you are the Detroit Pistons and wear uniforms that look like Captain Lightening Bolt. Maybe you could be Boom-Boom Geofrion, new coach of the Canadiens. You could be a basket case in less than four months.

Or try being the Los Angeles Rams, the DC-10 of the NFL.

Hey, try being any team from Western New England College. You are always WNEC in the box score, so people think you are a radio station. It confuses channel 40 sportscaster Jack (Blowfish) O'Neill to no end. Or pretend that you are the channel 22 sports department. "Thank ya John Quill, for that stunning weather forecast... Big news from the Chicopee Comp. J.V. team today...", says Rollie Jacobs on a day when Lynn and Rice are traded, Yaz retires, and the Sox are sold to Sheik Muzra-El-O'Connor.

Why not pretend that you are that big football field in the swamp that UMass always plays its home games in? Our library may be a Garbonza Bean but Grateful Dead Stadium is the only sports park around that changes color when it rains. Tell that to any idiot who tries to badmouth our fine institution of higher learning.

Last, and certainly not least, pretend that you are Jack Caniff, wandering around Orr Rink looking for his hockey team. Ditto for Jack Leaman.

Okay, put away your bubblegum cards, throw the "property of" shirt in the moldy wash, and exit the R dimention. You are back in the real world now, kid, and Sgt. X wants to see your driver's license for that beer you've got druzzling down your chest. "Bug off, officer, I'm Reggie Jackson."

Minutemen wind up fourth in EAA track tournament

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday the UMass men's cross country team traveled to take on the Eastern eight teams in the Eastern Athletic Association meet at Villanova University. UMass finished with an overall score of 82 points to capture fourth place.

Hosting Villanova was easily the victor of the meet with overall points adding up, Villanova 23, Rutgers 52, West Virginia 74, and UMass 82, followed by Pitt, Georgetown, St. Bonaventure, and Dusquesne. Senior captian Rick Walls finished first for the Minutemen, twelfth overall, with a time of 27:12. Sophomore Paul Beaulieu finished right behind Walls to take thirteenth place coming in at 27:17.

Also placing for UMass were junior Mike Doiron (17), Paul Kirkey (18) and Kevin Molteni (22). Villanova's Amos Korir won the five mile event with a time of 25:49.

"We ran aggressively," said Walls. "This is our first really good effort of the season," he added. I thought it was a complete turnaround from our meet with Harvard and Providence," said harrier coach Ken O'Brien. "We ran upfront, we had seven people in the top twelve spots going into the first mile and a half," he said. "We really took the bull by the horns. I thought we could finish third behind Villanova and Rutgers. I knew we couldn't beat Villanova and we probably couldn't beat Rutgers but after that the spots were wide open. As a group we finished very closely."

This Saturday the Minutemen travel to Franklin Park to take on Northeatern and the University of Rhode Island. "Going into the season there are six really close teams, Harvard, Yale, Boston University, Northeastern, Providence and UMass," said O'Brien. "This will be our first chance to see Northeastern, and if we can improve this week like we did last week, I think we could beat them."

Women spikers hit the road

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team begins a lengthy road trip tonight when they face Northeastern University at Boston.

Winners of the past five matches (the latest victim being Boston College last Tuesday night), the Minutewomen will try to win their sixth win in a row against a squad UMass defeated last year at NOPE gym in a long (over two hours) and closely played match.

UMass coach Elaine Marasco expressed optimism for her team's performance against Northeastern and the Minutewomen's next opponent, Springfield College. "They should be good matches," she said, "especially Springfield College. UMass is getting better all the time; our offense -- especially our serve and passing -- have been very effective. Everyone on the squad's working hard, and the results are showing themselves in the matches."

After tonight's match and Saturday's contest against Springfield, UMass will be away for eleven straight matches (most matches will feature a tri-match setup at a certain school). Amoung the teams UMass will visit are Eastern Nazerene, MIT, New Haven, Central Connecticut, and the University of Connecticut.

Darryl Williams Shooting Commemorates Pope's Visit

By Tony Crayton

The "Blessed Long Weekend" referred to by the Collegian front page began Friday with the barbarous shooting of a 17 year old black football player from Jamaica Plain High School. The incident was reported on the front page of the Boston Globe in a city long known for racial oppression. The youth, Darryl Williams is not expected to live after a .22 caliber rifle shot entered the back of his neck. He is said by Boston City Hospital spokesman John Rosetti to have suffered a "severe neurological disorder. He is not responding..."

The shot was fired as Williams and fellow teammates gathered in the end zone during halftime. It occurred in Charlestown, at a scrimmage game between Jamaica Plain High and Charlestown High. All games in the city were called off for the weekend.

Of course the Boston Police claim that it is not racially motivated. Of course they have no suspects. I say of course because the Boston Police have murdered not less than 8 Black men while unarmed and with impunity in the past ten years. Charlestown's good citizenry has been in the forefront with South Boston's marshals in terrorizing, brutializing, and jailing Blacks over bussing.

Darryl Williams is among a long line of Blacks who have been beaten, bricked, brutalized, and fire bombed for untold times because white politicians decided not to support our neighborhood schools but rather claim us to be intellectually inferior and thus only improved by close proximity with those with white skin!

In 1951, a petition was presented to the UN charging the United States with Genocide. The Great Paul Robeson presented the copies to the Secretary General of the UN in New York. December 9,1948 marked the time that the UN established Artical II defining genocide as "a) killing members of the group; b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; c, deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; forcibly transferring children of the group to another group."

If statistics were compiled on the number of Blacks murdered or injured by cops, Klans, and C.I.A. since that important document the similarities would be staggering. We charged genocide then and still do now. We charge genocide and will bring that charge before the UN. We ask all individuals and organizationa to assist in building a local Black Human Rights coalition and or Un. Mobilization Committee. There will be a massive march for Human Rights on B. lack Solidarity Day Nov. 5, 1979. Remember Darryl Williams; DON'T FORGET Clifford Glover; Malcom's Martin's, and Fred's murders are still on our minds. Genocide against non-white people in America is real and happening. Don't wait till it hits you to care.

We,re On The Move For Human Rights

(Part Two)
By Chaka Zulu

Gross Human Rights violations in the Black Community must be seen for what they are, the historical methods of maintaining and advancing "white supremacy", the forced maintenance African Americans into a position of cheap, marginal labor and over cheated consumers with no resourse to the legal instruments of the state for effective redressing of our greivanees.

It is most essential to understand that there is an unseperable relation between the extreme economic depression in the Black community and the sharpest expressions of human rights violations. In an article written by economist Micheal Riech entitled "The Economics of Racism", he states "The rate of unemployment among Blacks is usually twice as high as among Whites. Layoffs and recessions hit Blacks with twice the impact they hit Whites, since Blacks are the 'last hired, first fired.' The average Black to White workers incomes follows the business cycle closely, buffering White workers from some of the impact of the recession...Blacks pay highter rents for inferior housing, higher prices in ghetto stores, higher insurance premiums, higher interest rates in banks and lending companies, travel longer distances at greater expense, to their jobs, suffer from inferior garbage collection and loss access to public recreational facilities, and are assesed at higher property tax when they own housing. Beyond this Blacks are further harassed by police, the courts and the prison."

More important is that since Blacks bear the major brunt of the economic crisis, they will be the first to react. African Americans are the country's formost contradiction. The part that America likes to keep hidden in the closet. In a country that offers freedom and justice for all, where is the freedom and justice for the Black man. In such a rich and powerful country which promises equal economic opportunity for all, where is the equal opportunity for the Black man? If there was any real equality there would be no need to legislate equality; there would be no need for affirmative action...which itself is undergoing reconsideration. Where is the respect for the human rights of the Black man in North America? Indeed. The developing campaign take this issue to the United Nations is the struggle to demand this report.

The national Black human rights campaign is a true struggle for democracy. It is coming at a time to comfort increasing political repression in the United States, and when many western nations are considering their brands of "'democracy" unworkable. The Basic premise of the campaign is that all should have a say in governing their lives and the economic policies that determine the quality of their lives. Everyone has a right to equal respect regardless of race, sex or income that everyone has a right to equitable distribution of income and benfits from the wealth they participate in creating, and freedon from all forms of assaults on national democratic (civil and political) rights. In conclusion I just say this developing movement cannot be called radical or militant because it embodies what everyone wants out of life, and, principles that any intelligent person can understand.

Everyone that can possibly go should get together from U. Mass and the other five colleges, to attend the rally on November 5, in front of the United Nations. Do not let the peacefulness of the area and the seeming smiling faces of your classmates put you to sleep. Many atrocities have been committed against African-Americans and other people of color in the valley with full knowledge of the authorities, and possibly their sanction. Unity between all of us, regaurdless of your organization or personal persuation is the only means to assure ourselves a place in this world. The five college area is no exception.

Jackie McLean

Despite playing with an injured jaw, alto saxophonist Jackie McLean and his Quartet gave an outstanding performance for a full house at the Campus Center Auditorium this past Saturday.

McLean is recognized universally as one of the giants of the alto-saxophone. He is presently teaching at the University of Hartford and is chairman of the Afro-Am musical department.

The McLean concert, was the first in a series of four concerts to be presented by the Duke Ellington musical series. The Duke Ellington musical series was started this summer to give on going support to Black Classical music and its roots.

According to Tony Crayton, director of the office of Third World affairs, the series was named not only as an honor to Duke Ellington but to support the Campaign to Combat Racism and the efforts to name the Fine Arts Center in Duke Ellington's memory. The renaming of the Fine Arts and Library buildings are a part of a campaign to combat racism begun last year.

According to Crayton despite being an institution of higher learning, the University of Massachusetts does not have a single building or monument named after a single Third World person, despite the tremendous contributions made by neople of Asian, African and Latin American descent. Naming the Fine Arts Center after Duke Ellington is designed to combat what is called racism in the enviroment he said.

NEW WORLD CENTER

The New World Center, located in Baker Dorm is in its 6th year of operation

"The New World Center was opened to give Third World students in the central area an opportunity to do activities for the entire community" said Earl Dyer, the co-ordinator.

"We have in the past brought up such people as Queen Mother Moore, Akbar Muhammed and other speakers involved with the struggle of Third World people" he said.

The center is funded by the Central Area council and is appropriated a budget of $500."

"We spent over $1500 on programs last year. We intitially start with an allotment of $500 with a guarantee to get additional money from the Central Area Council if we need it" Dyer said.

"Right now we are having problems with McIntyre House and area director Joe Batista who is trying to cut back on the payroll budget of all the centers. This is going to affect the center because we want to be able to have more people to work at the center and nobody works for free" he said.

"There had been suggestions that we jo in with the Orchard Hill Third World Center by the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) president and followed up by Joe Batista. I would like to work with the Orchard Hill Center, but I am against the merger because that would be one less Third World center to worry about and that would be a giant step in the ultimate goal of closing down all the Third World Centers on campus" he said.

The center is presently looking for another co-ordinator. "Joe Batista made accusations to some area center about not hiring under the guidelines of the equal opportunity search. For the New World people and since the interests of the center is to make programs geared for the Third World Community, a non-third world person would not be adequate for the job" Dyer said.

According to Dyer, the job of co-coordinator for the center involves attending the weekly meetings of the Central Area Government, setting up programs that prepare the budget and doing the paperwork for the activities the center sponsors.

For your information Ruth Green, we don,t appreciate your interest

Recently, Ruth Green, an employee under Vice Chancellor fro Student Affairs Dennis "Madman" Madson, sent a memo to Senate Speaker David Barenberg informing him of a North Carolina court decision.

It was nice to see that Ms. Green, sent the memo to David Barenberg, who as Speaker of the Senate, would undoubtedly be interested in the court's decision since he is in charge of the Senate. However we question why she did not send the memo to Tony Crayton of the Office of Third Worl d Affairs who undoubtedly would have also been interested.Apparently Ruth Green felt that the Office of Third World Affairs would not be interested and did not send a copy of the information.

Is this how she represents the office of Dennis Madson?, It was a clearly underhanded manuver similar to the administration's tactics on student run businesses.

We would like to inform you Ms. Green that divide and conquer will not work in the Student Senate.

In the future concern yourself with other aspects of student affairs and not court activities. Have you nothing better to do?

By the way, for our information, why don't you send a letter to the Office of Third World Affairs stating whether the Seta Rampersad transcript is in the possesion of the University Archives. For your information we know it was your responsibility to obtain the transcript.

We will be checking with Mr. Crayton to see if you have sent word on the transcript.

OPEN LETTER TO RUTH GREEN

By Tony Crayton

For your information the court decision on the Race and Sex Quotas in the Uzzell V. Friday case (591 F. 2d 997) that you thought Speaker Dave Barenburg "might be interested" in has no relevance to the Third World caucus in the S.G.A. on this campus. Of course if you were so concerned you might have thought it only fair to forward your 9-10-79 memo to my office as well, rather than slip a "for your information" hint behind our backs. Such actions fail to inspire our confidence in Whitmore's credibility towards the Third World Community.

For your information the court rulings were based on a system or representation in the campus Governing Council of the University of North Carolina that have nothing to compare in particulars to our system here. The court declared that the permeating defect in the organization of C.G.C., the governing council, is the imposition of an artificial racial structure upon this elective body that bars non-minority students from eligibility for appointment to the council. "The artificial racial structure" refered to was in the C.G.C. constitutions articles One, section 1D, in which the C.G.C. required at least two councillors to be of a minority race and "if the election does not satisfy this contingency, then the president of the council shall make appointments from the students generally to fulfill this requisite. The complainants' Lawrence Uzzell and Robert Lane Arrington (both white) charged that such a system did not allow whites to similarly be appointed.

The second issue the court decided upon was the judicial branch or the governing bodies Honor court. "Abbreviated this latter provision stipulates that an accused, on request is entitled to have four of the seven judges of the court of his or race of sex" (Judicial Governance for the University of North Carolina Art IV section E(2)(e)(2))

The courts reasoned that: (1) regulation in question seeks to provide "protective representation," its effect is to establish a racial classification, as it relies exclusively on race to preclude non-minority students from enjoying opportunities and benefits available to others; (2) appellants are ineligible for appointment to the council because they are not of a minority race; (3) the presence of one or more unelected members on the Council dilute the representative character of the legislative body.

It further reasoned that on the matter of the Honor Court "such a recourse to race would be a preposterous defiance of the Fourteenth amendment and the Civil Right Acts."

For your information the Undergraduate Student Senate at UMass has a representative system that utilizes no such artificial racial structures." Nor does it bar white students from the opportunity to be appointed by a representative body (nor any indivdual office holder) within these respective areas.

Furthermore the Third World Caucus is of an Ethno-political composition including Spanish-speaking members (i.e. Hispanic) and Asian persons who in the commonly noted, yet grossly unscientific notions of racial classifications by social scientists are Caucasians. Their classification asThird World/s based on their ethnic association with underdeveloped non-European nations and cultures. They come from multi-racial and multi-cultured backgrounds that override the consideration of their supposed racial classification.

With these facts in mind it would be undisputable to state that the Uzell Vs.Friday case has no bearing on the system we have here at UMass.

I must reiterate my intense disdain over such back-door attacks on the integrity of the Third World Students and the S.G.A. in this regard. The passing of such materials, which are clearly designed to undermine and further polarize the race relations in the valley, is regretable and detestable. Please cease from such unwarranted interference in our affairs.

THIRD WORLD CAUCUS

The following people were elected to the Third World Caucus of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

With the coming of a new year there are a lot of issues which will be a great concern to the UMass student body in general and Third World students in particular.

We at Nummo would like to congratulate these people on their election and would like to remind these people on the importance of the Third World Caucus in the Senate. There is no room to for half-stepping, missing meetings on C.P. time. There is a lot of work to be done, that must get done.

It is therefore imperative that you of the Third World Caucus make those Senate meetings and guard our interests. The eyes of the community are on you and we will be checking on you.

LA PERSPECTIVA HISPANA EN EL PERIODISMO ESTUDIANTIL DE UMASS

Por: Jose G. Trejo.

La nueva sección "Asuntos Latinoamericanos" del suplemento de "NUMMO NEWS", fue organizada con el proposito de continuar con la obra priodistica y estudiantil que tenía a cargo el ya desaparecido periodico hispano llamado "EL ECO LATINO".

El Eco Latino era la voz hispana en esta región del oeste de Massachusetts. Su publicación aunque era bastante irregular, se hacía con entusiasmo y cooperación. Se publicaban 1000 ejemplares cada mes, cada dos meses, y ha veces tardaba mucho mas en salir a circulación, pero siempre, el periodico era esperado y bien recibido en la comunidad. Los temas que se publicaban, eran de todo tipo; políticos, económicos, sociales, culturales, y otros artículos que eran puramente informativos. Asi pues, cada vez que El Eco Latino salia a circulación, 1000 ejemplares se distribuían en toda la comarca, con temas candentes que interesaban a los lectores de habla hispana. El contenido del periódico variaba según la cooperación de otros estudiantes y de personas relacionadas con la comunidad y que tambien contribuian con articulos y boletines de información general. Pero siempre era la misma voz de tradiciones hispanas que hacia eco en todo el valle del pionero.

Ahora El Eco Latino ha desaparecido por falta de presupuesto. La organización estudiantil hispana "AHORA" fue recortada en su presupuesto por el senado estudiantil, y a consecuencia, El Eco Latino dejó de existir en el año escolar 77-78, y con ello toda la labor periodistica de los estudiantes hispanos.

Sin embargo, concientes de la gran importancia de que la comunidad hispana continúe presentando la perspectiva periodística que inicio EL Eco Latino, nosotros hemos logrado obtener algunos fondos del Senado Graduado y con ello estamos trabajando en esta seccion de "Asuntos Latinoamericanos" en "NUMMO NEWS". Al mismo tiempo estamos pidiendo la cooperacion y el apoyo de aquellos estudiantes de habla hispana que se interesen en aprender y trabajar en el campo del periodismo estudiantil. Les sugerimos que atiendan a las juntas semanales que celebra "NUMMO NEWS" todos los martes a las 7:30 P.M.en "New Africa House". Allí planeamos los articulos y temas que publicaremos la siguiente semana, luego durante los sabados en la mañana nos reunimos en los talleres graficos del "Collegian", donde los artículos son escritos en máquinas computadoras que automaticamente acomodan los artículos en columnas para hacer la composicion de las paginas, para ser impresas. Aqui mismo tambien sacamos fotografías y reproducimos cualquier tipo de impresión para complementar los artículos con fotos y grabados pertinentes al tema.

Deben saber ustedes que los equipos gráficos que usamos aqui, son de lo mejor en todo el oeste del estado, por lo que es una verdadera oportunidad, tener la experiencia de trabajar con este equipo tan sofisticado, y al mismo tiempo contribuir con el periodismo tercermundista. Por lo tanto exhortamos a aquellos estudiantes concientes que deseen aprender y superarse educativamente con esta noble actividad extracurricular, que se unan a las filas de "NUMMO NEWS" en la seccion de "Latinamerican Affairs"

Al mismo tiempo y concretamente, le pedimos a las organizaciones como; AHORA, EL PROGRAMA BILINGUE COLEGIAL, EL DEPARTAMENTO DE ESPAÑOL, EL PROGRAMA BILINGUE DE LA ESCUELA DE EDUCACION, EL PROGRAMA DEL ESTUDIANTE MINORITARIO DE INGENIERIA, LA OFICINA DE RECLUTAMIENTO DE ESTUDIANTES MINORITAROS PARA LA ESCUELA GRADUADA,...ETC. Es decir a todos los organismos que tengan alguna relación con temas de interes para los hispanos, que nos hágan el favor de enviarnos todo tipo de infurmacion; oportunidades de trabajo, cursos, tutores, talleres educativos, películas y eventos sociales,..etc. En fin que nos informen de sus actividades y servicios como tambien anuncios que deseen publicar en esta seccion.

Es mucho muy importante que unamos todos nuestros esfuerzos en esta gran labor periodistica de perspectiva hispana y así poder continuar con la tarea informativa que El Eco Latino inicio anos atras.

El Salvador

Troops fire on crowd

El Salvadorean froops opened fire on a group of antigovernment demonstrators in downtown San Salvador Sept. 14, killing three people and wounding 21.

The demonstration of more than 1000 people was organized by the Popular Revolutionary Bloc to demand the resignation of President Carlos Humberto Romero. Police first tried to break it up using tear gas. Then plainclothes police started shooting, followed by sharpshooters firing from the top of a government building.

The bloody march followed an incident in which government troops killed two teachers and a high school student in San Salvador Sept. 13. The Popular Revolutionary Bloc announced plans for a 3-mile funeral march for the teachers Sept. 15. Fearing mass popular demonstrations against its repressive rule, the government abruptly cancelled plans for independence day celebrations Sept. 15.

Peru

Teachers' strike continues

The confrontation between the Peruvian government and tens of thousands of striking teachers and their supporters intensified last week. In Lima, many strikers clashed with riot police in the streets, while others occupied several embassies to dramatize their demands. Meanwhile, 50 left-wing political leaders continued a hunger stike in support of the teachers.

The teachers, members of the militant, communist-led union called Sutep, have been on strike since June 4. They are seeking wage increases and recognition of their union's right to represent all teachers. Their struggle is a major challenge to the military government's harsh austerity program. This, together with inflation, has caused workers' real wages to fall to two-thirds of what they were in 1975.

The left has unified behind the strike. Among the hunger strikers are Trotskyist peasant leader Hugo Blanco and Jorte del Prado, head of the revisionist Peruvian Communist Party.

TO END OUR 'WAR' AGAINST THE CUBANS

To the Editor:

The American military presence in Guantanamo is a violation of Cuba's territorial integrity. Cuba has repeatedly asked for the immediate withdrawal of American military personnel from its territory, but we stubbornly insist upon our right to defend our own interests. Yet American interests may be better served by respecting the national autonomy of our neighbors than by simply bullying them into accepting our demands.

For the past 20 years the United States has waged a war of aggression against Cuba. We have invaded it, tried (a number of times) to assassinate its prime minister, attempted to sabotage its crops by spraying the sugar cane fields with poison and imposed a brutal blockage designed to strangulate its economy.

I would not blame the Cubans for their anger and apprehensiveness at the suggestion that "in the name of peace" the United States would like Soviet troops to leave the island.

If it is peace that we want to pursue, then friendship-not anger-is what must be cultivated with the Cubans. What better way to begin than by withdrawing our military personnel from their country•

Chile

Pinochet digs in

At a ceremony marking the sixth anniversary of the bloody overthrow of Salvador Allende's Popular Unity government, Gen. Auguste Pinochet last week reaffirmed his commitment to prolonged military rule. He set the stage for a gradual transition to a "new institutionality"—permanent authoritarian rule legitimized by a new constitution.

Nevertheless, resistance to the junta continues to mount. On Sept. 15 several thousand Chileans gathered at a church in Santiago to condemn the reversal of a government promise to return the bodies of 15 "disappeared" prisoners. The bodies were discovered in abandoned lime kilns at Lonquen last summer, and the spot has since become a pilgrimage site.

In his anniversary speech, meanwhile, Pinochet rejected the call by Christian Democratic leader Eduardo Frei for a more rapid return to democracy. Even Frei, however, made it clear that his party's vision of democracy was a "restricted democracy."

Pinochet also ruled out popular elections in the forseeable future. He contended that the people would be given an alternative by being allowed to vote in a plebiscite on the new constitution. Observers are sure, however, that the plebiscite will be rigged.

RESISTANCE TO BOYCOTT VOTE

The popular resistance movement has vowed to boycott such a vote. Even the Christian Democrats have challenged the legitimacy of such a ballot, since all voting lists were destroyed soon after the military coup.

The Christian Democrats have initiated a "Commission of 24" to prepare a critical study of the junta's proposed new constitution. But the resistance forces argue that such "loyal" opposition only legitimizes the junta's efforts to write its authoritarian patterns of rule into law.

The relatives and supporters of disappeared political prisoners, meanwhile, ended their 10-day hunger strike Sept. 13 when the junta promised to return the bodies of the 15 prisoners discovered at Lonquen. But as the relatives were preparing a funeral, they discovered that the junta had lied and had simply buried the 15 in common graves, without the knowledge of the relatives.

The Group of Relatives of Disappeared Prisoners meanwhile continues to protest the release of police officers whom the government has charged with killing the Lonquen prisoners. The accused police received amnesty instead.

In a related development, the relatives of teacher Federico Alvarez Santibanez, tortured to death last month by the junta's security police, continued to bring charges through the courts. Their lawyers charge that rapid legal intervention could have saved Alvarez' life and that the courts' inaction makes them accomplices to the crime.

THE PAST BETWEEN MEXICO AND THE U.S. (Part 1)

The Other Side of the Coin.

To the memory of the Mexican who shot at, and hit, the American soldier who was raising the Stars and Stripes on the flag pole in front of Mexico's National Palace, September 13, 1847. \Dedication to the book LAS INVASIONES NORTHEAMERICANAS EN MEXICO, by Gastoin Garcia Cantu.

By Philip Russell.

In the 1820's most of Mexico's foreign trade was with Britain, the world's leading commerical empire in Latin America, the United States was concentrating on territorial expansion. Even before Mexican independence Spanish Ambassador in Washington wrote to the viceroy in Mexico stating that the United States "has propsed nothing less than fixing its border along the Rio Grande to the 31st parallel and from there on a straight line to the Pacific."

Early American attempts to expand at the expense of Mexico were of little consqeuence. In 1825 the first American ambassador to Mexico, Joel Poinsett, unsuccessfully attempted to buy Texas, California, New Coahuila. In 1827 and 1829 he again made offers to buy various parts of Mexico. Finally Poinsett's involvement with Mexico's internal affairs and his persistent attempts to buy Mexican territory resulted in the Mexican government requesting his recall.

Territorial expansion into Mexico began in Texas. Prior to 1820 there was little settlement in Texas north and east of San Antonio. A traveler there wrote that "from Bejar (San Antonio) to Nacogdoches there are only bears, coyotes, deer, and owls, whose song is in keeping with the lugubriousness of the area. As the American frontier Texas, just as they had made forays into Florida to pave the way for its acquisition from Spain in 1819.

The basis for permanent Anglo settlement in Texas was laid in 1820 when Moses Austin received permission to colonize Texas with two hundred families. After Moses 1822 to renew the permission for colonization from the newly-independent government.

Settlers were required to swear allegiance to the Mexican government. As their numbers increased it became apparent that they had little in common with the distant government in Mexico City. In an attempt to stem the tide of settlers, the Mexican government withdrew the right of the settlers, to keep slaves in Texas. When that failed to slow the flow of colonists, all new settlement was bannedin 1830. Nevertheless settlers continued to arrive illegally and by 1833 some 3000 colonists had arrive despite the ban. The Mexican government, itself beset with constant internal strife, was having difficulty governing the settlers in Texas. This resulted in friction, especially when the Mexican government tried to collect import duties on goods shipped from the US to Texas.

Several factors led to the rupture of peaceful relations between the Mexican government and the settlers in Texas. The settlers demanded the right to own slaves, for news settlers to be admitted, for the free importation of institutions such as trial by jury. Finally there was the question of race.

At the close of the summer of 1835 the Texans saw themselves in danger of becoming the alien subjects of a people to whom they deliberately believed themselves to be morally, intellectually and politically superior. The racial feeling, indeed, underlay and colored Texas-Mexican relations from the establishment of the first Anglo-American colony in 1821.

Given this setting it is hardly surprising that open hostility broke out between Anglo settlers and the Mexican government. On September 19, 1835, Stephen F. Austin declared, "War is our only recourse. There is no other remedy. The colonist soon formed an army and attacked Mexican detachments stationed in Texas. The following March the colonists formally declared themselves to be an indepent republic free from Mexico.

The Mexican government, by its colonization laws, invited and induced the Anglo American polulation of Texas to colonize its wilderness and under pledged faith of a written constitution, that they should continue to enjoy that constitutional liberty and republican government to which they had been habituated in the land of their birth, the United States of American.

It hath sacrificed our welfare to the state of Coahuila by which our interests have been continually depressed through a jealous and partial course of legislation, carried on at a far distant seat of government, by a hostile majority, in an unknown tongue, and this too, notwithstanding we have petitioned in the humblest terms for the establishment of a separate state government, and have,in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution, resented to the general congress a republican constitution, which was, without just cause, contemptously rejected.

Seeing that Mexico was on the verge of losing Texas, Santa Anna marched north to Texas to reestablish authority. In San Antonio he found some 1800 Texans barricade in an old mission called the Alamo. Santa Anna laid siege to the Amano for thirteen days. After inflicting heavy casualties on the Mexicans, the Texans finally were captured. Santa Anna had the handful of survivors executed. Somewhat tarnishing the Anglo image of dedicated freedom-fighters in the Alamo was the presence of slave traders and murderers fleeing justice in the US. Two-thirds of those defending the Alamo were recent arrivals in Texas who had come spoiling for a fight. Only half a dozen had been in Texas for over six years. Since settlement had been banned from 1830 to 1834, a large portion of the Alamo's defenders were, to use the surrent term, illegal aliens.

Once the Alamo had been taken, Santa Anna marched eastward. He easily defeated another Texas force at Goliad, and three hundred Texans were shot after their surrender there. Santa Anna pursued the Texas forces to the banks of the San Jacinto River, near the present site of Houston. Assuming that no attack was imminent, Santa Anna permitted his 1100 troops to take a siesta on the afternoon of April 19,1836. He was so confident that little attention was paid to security.

During the siesta the 1000-man Texas army attacked and routed the Mexicans. Repeating the violence inflicted on the Anglos at the Alamo and Goliad, Mexican prisoners "were clubbed and stabbed, became methodical. The Texas riflemen knelt and poured fire into the packed, jostling ranks." When the shooting was over the Mexican force was defeated, Santa Anna was captured, and some 630 Mexicans and 2 Texans had been killed.

The Texans' victory in the war was due to their familiarity with the terrain, a more politically unified population, and the numerical majority of Anglos. In 1834, of the 27,000 population of Texas, 20,000 were estimated to be Anglos and their slaves. The Mexican population in Texas was divided as whetherr to support independence or continued Mexican rule. Santa Anna had an extremely long supply line, and had marched from Central Mexico, across deserts, arriving in Texas with soldiers weak and sick from the march. Many of his soldiers were Mayan Indian conscripts who spoke no Spanish and had little interest in the struggle which had enveloped them. Another major factor in the Texas victory was the large amount of money, men, and supplies which poured into Texas from the US during the war.

The captured Santa Anna ordered other Mexican forces in Texas to withdraw and signed a treaty granting independence to Texas so that he would be freed. In October 1836 Sam Houston was elected president of the independent Republic of Texas. For the next nine years Texas existed as an independent nation, even though the legality of Santa Anna's giving Texas away was not recognized by the Mexican government. During this period there was strong sentiment in the US not only to annex Texas, but to acquire much if not all of the territory of Mexico. This desire t push US boundaries outward was known as Manifest Destiny, a combination of the feeling of racial,cultural, and religious superiority, and a sense that America was the most civilized country in the world, with the duty to extend its benefits to the rest of the human race. This feeling was by no means unanimous, as this statement by Henry David Thoreau indicates:

Those favoring an expansionist war with Mexico are hundreds of thousands of merchants and farmer, more interested in commerce and agriculture, than in humanity. They are prepared to be just neither with their slaves nor Mexico.

Another dissenter was the head of the US Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who responded to the general feeling that if we wanted nothern Mexico and especially the Port of San Francisco, then we should take it.

Isn't this the most remarkable thing in the world? We need San Francisco Bay. Why? Because it is the best port in the Pacific. Mr. President, I had the opportunity of being a criminal judge for a long time, but I never have heard a thief, accused of stealing a horse, say in his defense that he stole it because it was the best horse he could find.

In this jingoistic atmosphere Texas was annexed to the union in December 1845. The Mexican government stated that, regardless of the status of Texas, the border between Texas and the rest of Mexico was the Nueces River, not the Rio Grande some 150 miles to the south. President Polk, an avowed expansionist, ordered General Taylor to cross into the disputed area between the Nueces and the Rio Grande. Mexican troops then crossed the Rio Grande and captured a small American detachment on what they considered to be Mexican soil. They later fought Taylor's main force and were driven south of the Rio Grande. The first skirmish was used by President Polk as justification for a declaration of war.

General Kearny soon began to march down the Santa Fe, Trail from Ft. Leavenworth to Santa Fe, which he occupied in August 1346. He was accompanied by 414 wagons belonging to traders who literally couldn't wait to do business in New Mexico. The lack of resistance in New Mexico has led to the suggestion that the Mexican governor was bribed to let the Americans in. Resistance did flare up later and the first American governor of New Mexico was killed. However this didn't stop the American's westward thrust. Kearny continued west and occupied Los Angeles on January 10,1847. His way was paved by a dispute between the Mexican military cammander and governor in California, an Anglo uprising, and landings of marines at various points along the California coast.

A second campaign was designed, not to take territory, but to force the Mexican government to sign a treaty legitimizing US control over what is now the American Southwest. In order to carry out this campaign General Taylor marched south from Texas. He took Monterrey and Saltillo and on January 23, 1847, he broke the back of Mexican resistance at the Battle of Angostura, near Saltillo. Troops were also landed at Veracruz, which was captured by American forces in February 1847. The following the route of Cortes, American troops under General Winfield Scott marched to Mexico City, which was taken September 14, 1847.

Even after the declaration of war there was dissent in the US. Congressman Abraham Lincoln challenged Polk on the war saying,

Let him answer fully, fairly and candidly. Let him answer with facts and not with arguments...But if he can not or will not do this--if on any pretence or no pretence he shall refuse or omit it--them I shall be fully convinced of what I more than suspect already--that he is deeply conscious of being in the wrong...How like the half-insane mumblings of a fever dream is the whole war part of his late messages!

Ulysses S. Grant, and infantry lieutenant in the war, stated even if the annexation (of Texas) could be justified, the manner in which the subsequent war was forced on Mexico cannot.

The causes for the rapid Mexican defeat can be found in both the US and Mexico. The US was relatively united for the war while Mexico was sharply divided by the liberal conservative struggle. In fact the conservatives often felt more sympathy for the invading Americans than for the liberals whom they felt to be a threat to their privileges in central Mexico. The split in Mexico were so great that there were rebellions and jockeying for power at the very time American troops were marching from Veracruz to Mexico City. Yucatan even declared itself neutral in the struggle. Mexico had a popilation of seven million, many of whom were Indians with no stake in the outcome, compared to the US population of 17 million. American arms, especially its artillery, were better, a reflection of America's industrual development. Had there been a government capable of arousing mass support, the results would have been different. As it was, the defense of Mexico was left almost entirely in the hands of the preoessional army.

As a result of it defeat Mexico was forced to sign the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, ceding New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Neveda, California and part of Colorado to the US for $15 million. Thus Mexico lost half its land including the port of San Franciso, the use of Colorado Riverwater, and the rich agricultural lands and gold fields of California. A Mexican writer noted that the principal difference between the US and Ghengis Kahn was that the US attempted to disguise the spoils of war under the guise of international law.

After the war some 75,000 Mexicans found themselves under US control. Despite the provisions in the Treaty of Guadalup-Hidalgo providing for Mexicans in areas ceded to the US to eep their lands, ownership soom passed to American hands. Often taxes would be raised beyond the ability of their Mexican owners to pay, so land could be seized for tax delinquency and auctioned off to Americans. Suits challenging legality of land titles were filed in a deliberate attempt to bankrupt owners with legal fees. Crooked judges would consistently rule in favor of Angloes in land matters. Lynching and other acts of violence also served to reduce Mexican holdings.

The 1841 discovery of gold in California led to a rapid influx of Americans and to an increasingly rapid dispossession of Mexicans. As a result in 1849 the population of California was composed of 87,000 Anglos and 13,000 Mexicans. The feelings expressed by Mexican stranded in the US were remarkably similiar to the feelings of the conquered Aztecs quoted in the first chapter:

Our inheritance is turned to strangers--
Our houses to aliens
We have drunken out water for money--
Our wood is sold to us,
Our necks are under persecution--
We labor and have no rest.

SELL OUT IN ZIMBABWE

US Corporation Helps Pretoria Buy Muzorewa

Despite two official government reports in South Africa, and hundreds of column inches of newspaper copy throughout the Western world, the extent of the South African influence-buying scandal known as Muldergate, is still not known. The key South African slush-fund operator, Eschel Rhoodie, has been sitting in a French jail awaiting possible extradition to South Africa on charges of fraud and theft. To defend himself, Rhoodie has been letting out a small trickle of new information on the scandal leak bit by bit.

According to Rhoodie's newest revelations which were published recently in an interview in a Dutch magazine, the South Africans paid out considerable sums to bring Bishop Abel Muzorewa to power in Rhodesia and to maintain clout in the refurbished government in Salisbury. Rhoodie charges that the South Africans funneled $1 million to Muzorewa's party, the UANC, to be used during last spring's elections. An additional $475,000 also greased the palm of James Chikerema, Muzorewa's erstwhile right-hand man, who soon after the elections, bolted from the UANC to deprive Muzorewa of a majority in the Salisbury parliament.

US Corporation Implicated

Rhoodie has so far refused to divulge specifics about the $1 million payment to Muzorewa, but the South African press has suggested that it was officials of the American firm Allegheny Ludlum Industries, a major minerals dealer in southern Africa, that first suggested payments to Muzorewa. The company wanted a stable, pro-Western government in Rhodesia, and according to Rhoodie, Ludlum officials made it clear to the South Africans that they were willing to pay for it.

Rhoodie does say that an unidentified Ludlum official first approached Chikerema in Rhodesia and later introduced him to two South African businessmen, one of whom Rhoodie has identified as David Abramson, whose name has been mentioned in connection with several South African currency violations.

Rhoodie's unnamed Ludlum official has subsequently been identified. An early-August report in the Johannesburg Sunday Times says that the official is Ludlum vice president E.F. Andrews, a long-time friend of the South African government.

Both Rhoodie and General Hendrik van den Bergh, at that time head of the South African Bureau of State Security (BOSS), supported the original plan to bribe Chikerema. This involved a meeting in Johannesburg that was to be filmed and tape-recorded in order later to blackmail Chikerema. That operation never came off, according to Rhoodie, but the money was eventually paid through a deposit in a Swiss bank account from an unnamed American company acting as intermediary. Chikerema denies ever receiving any money from South Africa.

Incidentally, in his recent charges, Rhoodie indicates that there were serious clashes inside the South African government on tactics to be adopted towards neighboring African states. Rhoodie portrays the present prime minister of South Africa, P.W. Botha, as a man who, while defense minister in the mid-1970s, continually had to be restrained from sending arms and troops across African borders.

Botha organized the South African invasion of Angola in 1975, and Rhoodie says, in one other instance Botha arranged to smuggle arms to opponents of the Mozambican government of President Samora Machel. General van den Bergh is said to have found out about the planned arms shipment. Worried that the delivery of these weapons would shatter the behind the scenes negotiations then in progress between the Mozambique and Pretoria governments, van den Bergh allegedly had his agents sabotage the weaponry while it was in transit.

A short time later a cooperation agreement was reached between the two governments, South Africa agreeing to help repair Mozambican rail and harbor installations, facilities which are of considerable importance to South Africa for its imports and exports.

According to Rhoodie, BOSS agents also foiled another of Botha's plans. Botha allegedly had plans to airlift some 500 soldiers to Rhodesia to help back Ian Smith's government. At the same time Prime Minister Vorster was assuring the world that there was no South African military involvement in Rhodesia.

Informed of Botha's plans by van den Bergh, Vorster is said to have ordered the airlift plan scuttled. □

Swapping Energy

South Africa is working hard to guarantee itself access to new technology being developed by US scientist which may reduce the cost of turning coal into oil. Western technology has helped make apartheid almost self-sufficient in weapons production. The same thing may be happening with energy.

by David McGloin

With the advent of gas lines in the United States in May, Congress and the administration have launched crash programs to develop synthetic fuels from coal that are dangerous and ill-conceived. They are likely to be costly to the environment, to the taxpayer, and to US political credibility in Africa. The Carter administration is quietly promoting closer collaboration between South Africa and major US corporations that will be a boon for apartheid South Africa's political fortunes.

South Africa, which is oil-poor but coal-rich, has been producing oil from coal since 1955. Production was on a small scale until 1973, when all OPEC members except Iran placed an embargo on oil to South Africa. Since then, South Africa has actively sought to expand alternatives to imported oil. Following the Iran oil cut-off in early 1979, South Africa has been forced to pay up to $40 per barrel of oil on the world spot market. The oil squeeze and the threat of United Nations sanctions have caused South Africa to look for ways to increase its energy self-sufficiency. One answer is to make oil from coal.

Overall expenditure on SASOL—the state-owned South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation project to transform coal to oil—will reach $6.7 billion by 1983. SASOL supplies less than 10 percent of South Africa's oil needs today, but by 1983, Pretoria hopes the oil from coal process will satisfy 30-50 percent of its requirements.

On April 25, 1979, the Department of Energy announced that it had obtained State Department clearance to offer to buy the SASOL I data bank from any private corporation that could arrange a deal with the South African parastatal corporation. The Department of Energy was unwilling to buy the data directly because it did not want to be involved in extensive negotiations with South African authorities. It has also refused to disclose any specifics of its offer, but, in April the Johannesburg Star reported that the decision is "likely to earn SASOL millions of rands in license fees for its various processes." The data bank which has been accumulated over the last twenty years of operations, consists of SASOL's collection of data on its fine tuning of the Fisher-Tropsch, coal-to-oil process.

US Department of Energy willingness to deal even indirectly with the South Africans was widely heralded in South Africa and by some business interests in the United States. An April 25 Rand Daily Mail article declared, "The United States dramatically brushed aside scruples yesterday and decided to allow American firms to seek vitally needed oil-from-coal technology from South Africa." On April 28, the Johannesburg Star ran the headline, "World Wants SASOL Processes."

Pretoria's spokesmen were soon insisting that South African know-how could make a valuable contribution to the West. Said Minister of Finance Owen Horwood, "Many overseas countries were interested in South Africa's SASOL projects and were asking themselves why they had not thought of doing the same thing." A South African journalist wrote an editorial-page column on the importance of the SASOL project for the US in the Wall Street Journal on July 23, and Representative Moorhead of Pittsburgh who had lobbied for the Department of Energy decision claimed that it was "the most encouraging news the American people had had in weeks." Moorhead probably sensed the political bounty of being out front in the rush to save the US consumer the long wait in the gas lines. In addition Moorhead's district borders on large coal reserves and is also the headquarters of Allegheny Ludlum Steel, a corporation whose management has been an active proponent of continued business ties with South Africa.

South Africa and its advocates are naturally delighted with the favorable publicity for SASOL. It helps them build a picture of US dependency on South Africa for resources and even technology—the reverse of the more common (and accurate) view of the US-South Africa relationship.

Old Technology

The SASOL contribution is not as significant as Moorhead or the South Africans contend. SASOL technology is relatively simple. It was developed in the early 1900's by German scientists. The method, which was developed by Lurgi, a subsidiary of Germany's Metall Gesellschaft, is an indirect one which turns coal into gas and then into oil. According to a US Department of Energy 1977 fact sheet, "That coal can be used in this way (to supplement our supplies of oil) is of no doubt. Whether it will be is not so much a question of technology as of economics."

South Africa has made SASOL economically viable by forcing every gasoline service station to carry SASOL products equivalent in value to 10 percent of its overall sales. This means that there is a substantial forced subsidy paid by the consumer or by the gasoline dealer. The gasoline dealer must pay for the 10 percent SASOL products whether they are sold or not.

Nigeria Changes to Civilian Government

James Lewis, Jr.

Nigeria is changing from a military government to a civilian government for the first time in thirteen years. The government is scheduled to make the transition October 1, 1979, yesterday.

Alhaji Shehu Shagri, 55, leader of the National Party of Nigeria, won the presidential elections, placed first August 11, 1979 and should have entered office yesterday.

Nigeria has been under military rule since 1966, when the country went through a series of social upheavals. The Biafran Civil War of Nigeria began May 30, 1967. The war lasted until January 12, 1970 and the country has remained under military rule since. In 1975 a bloodless coop ousted Head of State Lt. Col. Yakubu Gowan and Brig. Gen. Murtala Muhammed came to power until February, 1976, when he was killed in another coop attempt.

Under the leadership of Mr. Muhammed the foundation was laid for the present domestic and international policies for development of the country. Mr. Muhammed banned many of the nations imports and started many new programs of industrial, educational, and agricultural importance. Mr. Muhammed promised to return the country to civil rule. After the death of Mr. Muhummed, Lt. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo proceeded to continue the programs of Mr. Muhammed and his promise to return the government to civilian rule.

Nigeria was a British colony until October 1, 1960, when it recieved its independence.

There will be problems facing Mr. Shagari.

The country has problems of ethnic diversity. There are 252 distinct languages 368 dialects. The country is 25 percent literate the official language being English.

The worst problem Nigeria will have to deal with is population. The recent official estimate of the population of Nigeria is 100 plus million people. The official population estimate for population in Nigeria in 1978 was 80 million, and the official estimate for 1977 was sometimes from 66 million to 70 million.

The country has enormous potential. Nigeria has vast farm land and agriculture has always been the most important single activity in the Nigerian economy. Eighty percent of the total working population in engaged in producing yams, cassava, llangat, plantains, rice, beans, sugar cane and citus fruits for food and cocoa, groundnuts, rubber, cotton and timber for export.

In minerals, gold, uranium, iron ore has been found. Nigeria has the worlds' largest marble mine.

Their most profitable resource is oil. Nigeria presently exports 2.43 million barrels per day of oil, 32 percent of it goes to the United States, 42 percent of the business is contracted by Mobil Oil Corp. Nigeria Ltd. Due to the oil crisis situation, the oil exports increased from 1.47 million barrels per day, and the present revenue since the Iranian revolution is estimated at $12 billion annualy. Nigeria has 18 billion barrels of proven oil reserves. Nigeria is fifth in the world in exporting oil, a member of the Organization of Oil Exporting Nations (OPEC), and oil accounts for well over 90 percent of Nigeria's export earnings.

Nigeria's GNP is estimated to be over 30 billion and Nigeria is the second largest supplier of oil to the United States.

MUZOREWA CHARGED WITH REPRESSION

LONDON (AN) There is "a new reality" in Zimbabwe—Rhodesia, Bishop Abel Muzorewa said in opening remarks at the London conference on Rhodesia. But according to a report released last week by the International Defense and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, the old reality of thousands of political prisoners prevails, undermining the bishop's claim that majority rule and independence has arrived under his regime.

Released as the Patriotic Front and the Muzorewa delegation are disputing the scope of the London talks, the report notes that Muzorewa's United African National Council has "inherited virtually intact the entire machinery of political repression built up and enforced over the years by the Rhodesian Front." The IDAF report names 1,503 persons currently serving prison sentences for political offenses, some jailed since the mid 1960. It lists 196 others detained indefinitely without charges or trial for political offenses, and it names 152 persons sentenced to death on political grounds.

The 1,851 total is an increase from the 1839 counted when IDAF published a similar report for circulation at the 1976 Geneva conference. The report adds: "Hundreds of people have disappeared following their arrests by the police or other security forces, so their present whereabouts and status are in doubt. In addition, several thousand people are curently detained without charge under the martial law regulations now enforced over most of the country."

IDAF believes the evidence "points to the conclusion" that "there are more political prisoners in Rhodesia than ever before."

In 1976 Bishop Muzorewa sat flanked by two empty chairs in the Palace of Nations in Geneva as he objected to "a system that allowed detention and restriction without trial." The two vacant seats had been intended for Inos Nkala, the Bishop's UANC acting deputy secretary, who was arrested by Rhodesian police that spring, and Dr. Edson Sithole, who was kidnapped by men believed to be with the Rhodesian special branch.

Muzorewa demanded in Geneva the release of all political prisoners, the revocation of all death sentences, a halt to political trials, and the lifting of the state of emergency "together with all restrictive regulations now in force." Despite the Bishop's subsequent rise to the position of prime minister, however, Nkala is still in detention and has not been seen since 1978. Sithole remains missing, many presume him dead.

TOGO REPRIEVE

The ten persons sentenced to death by a Togolese court for treason have been pardoned by President Eyadema, the man they sought to overthrow in October 1977.

The Togolese leader was out of the country when the sentences were meted out in late August, and he asked that executions be stayed until his return. In the interim several of the condemned men issued pleas for mercy, and one of them, Emmanuel de Souza, revealed the location of an arms cache. Days later Eyadema came home and announced a pardon for those facing the death penalty.

The plotters stood convicted of hiring foreign mercenaries for the purpose of replacing Eyadema with opposition leader Gilchrist Olympio, son of former President Sylvanus Olympio. Gilchrist lives in exile in Paris and was convicted in absentia. He has denied any involvement in the plot.

EGYPT

President Anwar Sadat announced the conclusion of an arms deal with People's Republic of China in June whereby Egypt provided China with a Soviet-built MiG 23 fighter aircraft in partial payment for up to 80 Chinese-built MiG fighters.

Experts believe that the Chinese have been anxious to obtain the Soviet-built plane to aid in its own aircraft manufacture capabilities. Egypt had 23 of the aircraft, but all were grounded following the Soviet arms embargo on Egypt in 1974 and the resulting lack of spare parts.

Egypt is believed to have plans to use the planes at an airbase south of Cairo to allow its MiG-21 fleet to be deployed closer to the Libyan border.

The acquisition of the Chinese planes is part of an Egyptian plan to diversify its arms sources, after Arab reaction to the peace treaty signed with Israel cut off some major supplies. It is now unlikely that Saudi Arabia will follow through on it plan to provide Egypt with U.S.-built F-5E fighters. And the Cairo-based Arab Organization for Industrialization, an arms producing industry, was liquidated by the withdrawal of Saudi Arabia, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates.

But Egyptian Defense Minister Kamal Hassan Ali said that the arms industry in Cairo will continue to be developed under a new name, the Egyptian Organization for Industrialization. The industry will be heavily dependent upon three British companies-Westland Aircraft, Rolls Royce and British Aerospace-and one U.S. company, American Motors, to produce Lynx helicopters, Swingfire anti-tank missiles and jeeps.

Meanwhile the Egyptian government has requested $18.5 billion from the world's main industrialized countries to offset the effects of the Arab boycott over the peace treaty, without which there may be "delays in the progress of peace."

Neto buried in Angola

Angolan President Agostinho Neto was buried in Luanda Sept. 17. Before the funeral, held at the Palace of the People, the revolutionary leader's body was carried through the streets of the capital, where hundreds of thousands of grieving Angolans had gathered.

Until his sudden death from cancer Sept. 10 at the age of 56, Neto had been president of the country and of the MPLA Workers' Party.

A carriage pulled Neto's stone and glass coffin through the streets of Luanda, trailed by four military trucks filled with red and white flowers. Hundreds of thousands of Angolans followed the funeral procession on foot as it wound through the streets.

Angola has announced a 45-day period of official mourning. When the mourning period ends, the MPLA will organize elections for a new president.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

It was announced Saturday evening 8:00 pm. that the presidential dictator of Equatorial Guinea has been executed. He stood trial Monday, and is responsible for the death of thousands of citizens.

LIBYA NABS WAR CARGO Officials at the Libyan port of Benghazi have seized a shipment of American-made military equipment bound for Lebanon on the U.S.-owned vessel Prucilla U.

Before permitting the ship to sail on to Beirut, the Libyans confiscated four armored personnel carriers that were being delivered to the Lebanese government. Authorities in Benghazi said that the vehicles represented "articles of war" and that Libyan law prohibited such shipments.

RENEWED SUPPORT FOR ERITREAN GUERRILLAS The Eritreans for Liberation in North America (EFLNA), which last year withdrew support for the leadership of the guerrilla groups fighting for the independence of the territory, has this year reversed its stand. Its resolution last year, which denounced the guerrilla leadership as "capitulationist" for failing to adopt a strong enough line against the Soviet Union, is now described as "eroneous." After the 1978 EFLNA action, support in the U.S. for the Eritrean guerrillas was taken up by a new group, the Democratic Eritreans for Liberation.

NORFOLK SHIPS REFUGEE SUPPLIES Some 77,987 pounds of used clothing, shoes and school supplies are on their way from Norfolk, Virginia, to Zimbabwean refugees in Mozambique, the result of the work of the ZANU (Zimbabwe African National Union) Support Committee of Norfolk and related groups in the eastern United States. Through the efforts of International Longshoremen's Association Local 1248, the Farrell Lines shipping company was persuaded to donate over three-fourths of the freight charges, the balance being supplied by a $16,000 grant from the UN High Commission on Refugees. The shipment is three times the total sent in earlier consignments in 1976 and 1977.

LONDON, Sept. 24 — In a significant concession, Zimbabwe Rhodesia's guerrillas formally agreed today to guarantee the country's white minority 20 percent of the seats in Parliament under a new constitution.

The Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance, which has been fighting the black-led Government of Prime Minister Abel T. Muzorewa, made the concession "under protest," as the constitutional conference being held here under British sponsorship went into its third week.

Under terms of the compromise, the white minority, which comprises 3 percent of the population, would be assured of 24 seats in a new 120-member parliament, 15 of which would be elected by an all-white electorate. Under the present constitution, the white minority is assured 28 of the 100 seats in the existing Salisbury Parliament and holds a veto power over any constitutional amendments.

Walter Rodney on Trial in Guyana

Walter Rodney, author of How Europe Underdeveloped Africa and a leading Africanist scholar, was arrested in Georgetown, Guyana, in mid-July, and although he is out on bail, a protracted series of court appearances is expected. Together with several colleagues in the opposition Working People's Alliance, with which he is associated, Rodney has been charged for responsibility for the July 11 burnings of several government buildings—the governing PNC party headquarters, the Ministry of National Mobilization, and the headquarters of the Guyana Sugar Company. The incidents took place approximately one week after the Working People's Alliance announced it would enter candidates in the forthcoming general election.

A group of scholars in the U.S., including historian Edward Alpers of UCLA, have begun a campaign to defend Rodney and the others. They present evidence that the accusations are part of a systematic campaign of repression against the WPA, a left-wing movement in which government opponents of both African and East Indian ancestry have joined forces. Rodney, who taught for some years at the University of Dar es Salaam, has been barred from teaching in Guyana.

Bank Loans to South Africa, 1972-1978, a study released this May by the UN Centre Against Apartheid, documents $5.5 billion of bank loans to South Africa and corporations operating there. US institutions accounted for $2.8 billion of this total. In all, 382 banks from 22 countries were found to be involved in such lending.

US banks heavily involved in lending to South Africa include Citibank, Manufacturers Hanover, and Bank of America. Beate Klein, director of the project, pointed out that because of difficulties in documenting loans to South Africa, these figures are conservative estimates of the actual credit flow from Western banks to South Africa.

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 25 (AP) — South Africa granted union rights to the nation's black majority today, including the two large worker categories that had been excluded under a similar directive in the spring.

Fanie Botha, Minister of Labor, announced the decision that will reverse a 50-year policy denying union rights to blacks.

The effect of the Government's decision is to allow the black workers' unions the right to negotiate under the country's industrial conciliation law. Because the unions have had no legal status, they have been unable to represent their workers in talks with management, and activities such as strikes or work slowdowns have been illegal.

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 28 (Reuters) — Prime Minister P. W. Botha has offered to consider changing the South African laws barring sex or marriage across the color line.

His statement startled politicians and churchmen today. The Immorality Act and the Mixed Marriages Act are widely regarded as pillars of the apartheid policy of separation of the races, and Mr. Botha is bound to face stiff opposition to changes in them from a powerful right-wing faction in the Government that has vowed to block any measures encouraging racial mixing.

"If we can improve the Immorality Act," he said, "not only in connection with people of different races but in all areas, I will be amenable to the suggestion."

More than 10,000 people are estimated to have been convicted under the Immorality Act since 1950. Policemen acting on tips from neighbors stage regular raids on mixed couples, forcing their way into bedrooms to obtain evidence. Dozens of couples are convicted annually, and many are sentenced to jail terms.

LECTURE ON DRESS

Northampton, MA - Stella Mary Newton, authority on the history of dress, will give a public lecture on the "Implications of Social Class in the Dress in Hogarth's Paintings" Tuesday, October 2, at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall at Smith College.

Mrs. Newton, who started her career as a set designer, designed the first productions of T.S. Eliot's "The Rock," Sadler's Wells, 1934; „ Murder in the Cathedral,"Canterbury Cathedral and later in London; and Family Reunion," Mercury Theatre, London.

A specialist in the history and philosophy of dress of the Italian Renaissance, Mrs. Newron served London's National Gallery as advisor on dress in painting from 1952 until 1960. In 1965, she established the department for the study of the history of dress at London University's Courtauld Institute of Art. On her retirement from Courtauld she was awarded the OBE for her contribution to the study of dress.

Her present interests include ethnic dress which she studies on the travels in Eastern Europe.

While at Smith, Mrs. Newton will give an open seminar on Wednesday, October 3, at 4:15 p.m. in Wright Hall Common Room entitled "1340-1365, Research into European Fashion based on Chronicles, Inventories, Poems, and Works of Art," and a gallery talk at 1 p.m. Thursday, October 4, at the Smith Museum of Art concerning indentities of several paintings in Smith collection.

Mrs. Newton's visit to Smith is supported by the college's Elizabeth Cutter Morrow Foundation for Lectures.

ATTENTION: ALL CCEBS STUDENTS

The CCEBS Career and Graduate Component is organizing a Fall tour to Worcester Medical School for CCEBS students. The tour is tentatively scheduled for Tuesday, October 23. UMass transportation will be provided and participants are uged to report promptly at 8:00a.m. in front of New Africa House.

Interested students should call 545-0031 ext. 24 or come to Room 209, New Africa House, to sign up immediately.

UPCOMING MEETINGS

The Southern African Research Association (SARA) is holding its 4th annual conference October 4-6 at the Center of Adult Education, University of Maryland, College Park, Maryland. Initiated by a group of African scholars from southern Africa, SARA publishes th Journal of Southern African Affairs. The conference theme this year is "Emerging Southern Africa: Development and Nation-Building." It includes panels on a variety of topics, from traditional culture to regional integration. For more information: SARA, 4133 Art Sociology Building, University of Maryland, College Park, MD 20742. Phone (301) 454-5937)8.

"What's the State of the Race?" is the topic of a conference called for October 12-14 by the Pan Afrikan Secretariat of North America. Topics for discussion include political, economic and cultural issues and cover a geographical range from Africa to the Americas. MS victim struggles to keep normal life

By LEIGH ANNE VARNEY
Collegian Staff

Clad in blue jeans, t-shirt, and pony tails and smiling brightly, she looks like any other college student. The books, coffee and hi-liter on the table complete the scenario and the stereo turned on softly indicates a night of intensive studying ahead.

So much for appearances.

In reality, at 24, she is not your typical college student. She has multiple sclerosis, MS, the "mysterious crippler of young adults," which still has no cure.

Striking men and women between the ages of 20 and 40, MS is a disease which attacks the central nervous system. The disease manifests itself in different ways depending on the degree of nerve impulse destruction. Resultant symptoms which are not present in all cases can range from paralysis and bladder and bowel problems to extreme weakness and speech and hearing difficulties.

In technical terms, this neurological disease destroys the myelin sheathing in numerous patches which are replaced by scar tissue. The scar tissue interrupts and distorts the flow of nerve impulses and thus creates the crippling effects mentioned above.

Many people mistakenly confuse MS, a non-hereditary disease, with Muscular Dystrophy, a largely hereditary disease, but there is no connection between the two. Muscular Dystrophy is a muscular disease which attacks during childhood.

She was diagnosed as an MS patient in December of 1978. She was glad the doctors had finally pinpointed her sickness but the MS diagnosis opened up a frightening world with new problems to deal with and adjust to. "You're up and down all the time," she said.

She had been life-guarding one summer, when she first experienced double vision and pins-and-needle sensations up and down her spne. After months of tests at hospitals, nothing had been definitely diagnosed.

"First they said it was one thing, then another," the Connecticut native said. MS produces all kinds of strange and similiar symptoms, she explained.

Nearly two frustrating years elapsed before it was determined that MS was the cause of her problems.

"It is a relief to know what it is," she said. "For so long I just didn't know what was wrong with me."

It is not uncommon for the MS patient to undergo such a long period of testing and diagnoses, since MS varies tremendously from patient to patient in its symptoms, severity and course.

Often, patients experience long periods of feeling perfectly fine (these are known as remissions) which only serve to further the difficulty doctors encounter in trying to determine what is actually wrong.

However, MS patients also experience exacerbations, or periods of severe attack. "You don't know what's going to happen next," she said, "so you don't know what to do with yourself."

After she learned she had MS, she experienced a period of depression and bitter emotions. "I had been so active all the time," she said, "I just couldn't understand, why me? Why me?"

Koffler: UMass needs higher state funding

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Speaking at a public hearing on the University's fiscal 1981 budget request here yesterday, Amherst Chancellor Henry Koffler charged UMass "has been underfunded from the start" and called current funding conflicts "a very disturbing situation."

Koffler told Massachusetts Education Secretary Charles Johnson the state should have a public education institution as good as those of other states, and added that recent administration foul-ups are "no way to run a major operation."

In his request for increased financial aid for the University, Koffler said, "We are dealing with 15-20 percent more students than ten years ago but we have essentially less money today than ever before."

Koffler said the engineering, business administration, journalism and accounting departments are over enrolled.

Unfortunately, students who should be getting these classes are not getting them," he said.

Koffler pointed out that the University is sponding 12 percent less than in 1974, and called for a $40,000 increase in financial aid assistance, a $36,000 increase in health services, $50,000 increases for both the public safety and new student programs, and a $100,000 increase in sanitation and landscaping improving.

Koffler, emphasizing the importance of increased financial aid, said "Over 34 percent of the students who enter the University drop out before graduation." He also said it was important the "minorities be taken care of" while they are at the University.

Student Government Co-President Rich LaVoice, who also spoke at the meeting said there are many ways the University can improve. He called for the replacement of obsolete teaching equipment, the filling of faculty vacancies which would alleviate involuntary course drops, and increased financial aid for students.

Raid policy limits Greeks to 'safe, healthy behavior'

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

While UMass Greeks claim raiding each others' houses promotes "fun and social activity through healthy and safe behavior," raids on two sororities last week by unknown assailants resulted in vandalism and harrassment.

Alpha Chi Omega of 38 Nutting Ave. and Iota Gamma Upsilon of 406 North Pleasant St. were raided last week. The women of both houses said they were unable to identify the raiding party.

It was reported by one sorority member that women were thrown into the shovers, and a door was removed from its hinges. It was also reported that fire extinguishers were misused, resulting in water damage.

Raids conducted in the true Greek spirit encourage social gatherings, and as an example the Greeks cited an occasion earlier this semester when Sigma Kappa sorority raided Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity early in the morning. The sorority women cooked breakfast for the fraternity, in a friendly sociable atmosphere.

According to Kurt Kruegar, assistant to the Greek Area Director, "The raid policy puts limits as to what can and can not be done during a raid. The raids provide an opportunity for members of one house to get to know the members of another."

If a raid is damaging to any house or individual, the president of the raided house must contact the house responsible for the damage. According to the raid policy, the house instigating the raid must leave a clue to its identity.

When negotiations are unsuccessful, the case can be brought before the Judiciary Board of the Interfraternity or Panhellenic Council. In the case of a fraternity-sorority raid, a joint IFC-Panhellenic Judiciary Board would convene.

The Judiciary Boards of each area are staffed with no more than one member from each house.

Pope warns of arms build-up

UNITED NATIONS (AP) – Pope John Paul II warned the U.N. General Assembly yesterday that the build-up of world armaments, especially by the major powers, threatens the "common extermination" of future peoples.

The pope, speaking before representatives of 152 nations, also assailed suppressions of human rights - civil and religious - and the "frightful disparities" between the rich few and the destitute many of the world.

When the pope arrived at the United Nations yesterday, demonstrators and protesters were scarce.

Three Mile water still collects

WASHINGTON (AP) – Six months after the Three Mile Island accident, nuclear regulators still do not know how to dispose of a million gallons of contaminated water, the Senate Nuclear Regulation Subcomittee investigators reported yesterday.

The radioactive water, which is building up at a rate of some 1,500 gallons a day, "continues to be a matter of concern," said a report submitted to the subcommittee.

Boston violence discussed; 3 plead innocent in shooting

BOSTON (AP) – While three white youths charged with shooting a 15-year-old black footballer pleaded innocent, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and other state political figures met to discuss racial violence yesterday.

In the closed meeting with White at Jamaica Plain High School were members of the Boston School Committee, as well as House Speaker Thomas W. McGee and area religious figures, according to radio station WEEI.

Darryl Williams, 15, of Jamaica Plain High School, is paralyzed as a result of being shot in the neck Friday during a half-time huddle with the Charlestown High School team in the city's Charlestown section.

Pleading innocent in Charlestown District Court to charges of assault and battery with a gun were Stephen M. McGonagle, 17, Joseph A. Nardone, 17, and a 16-year-old juvenile whose name was not released. All live in Charlestown, and were arrested Sunday in connection with the shooting.

Investigators said at the time they had no concrete evidence the incident was racially motivated.

Nardone was released on $10,000 bail and McGonagle on $15,000 bail. The juvenile was released on $1,000 bail. Oct. 15 court appearances were scheduled for Nardone and McGonagle, and the juvenile is to appear Oct. 19.

Williams, who was visited by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy Monday and mentioned in public prayers during the Boston Common Mass celebrated by Pope John Paul II, was listed in critical condition at Boston City Hospital yesterday.

DNA definition asked of concerned town residents

By STEVEN SEMPLE
Collegian Staff

A member of the Amherst Board of Health last night asked a Town Hall audience of concerned citizens for "suggestions and support" regarding a newly-worded article that would redefine DNA research restrictions at UMass and Amherst College.

Dr. Robert Gage, a former UMass vice chancellor of student affairs and currently a public health professor, addressed the group at Amherst Town Hall in order to obtain information that would help him to decide whether the National Health Institute of Health's 1978 guidelines should be included in the article instead of the stricter 1976 guidelines.

The article, no. 19 on the Oct. 15 town meeting warrant, previously called for the use of the 1976 guidelines.

Opposition to the change came from microbiologist Paul Newlin, a member of the Coalition for Responsible Genetic Research, who was concerned that the new guidelines might not be strict enough. He cited new information by microbiologist and author Stuart Newman that indicates some strains of DNA produced in the labs could be "contagious and hazardous" to humans.

The change was supported by UMass physics professor Arthur Quinton. Quinton said that the restrictions could always be changed later if deemed necessary.

Most of the people at the meeting were members of last year's Amherst Recombinant DNA Research Committee. That committee, set up by the Amherst Board of Selectmen, was dissolved before the last town meeting but could be re-established if the article does not pass.

DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is the material that carries chromosomes necessary for hereditary information to be shaped.

Recombinant DNA research is the process by which genes of organisms that do not combine together in nature are combined in a laboratory situation. Scientists promoting DNA research claim that benefits are possible including new and faster ways of producing antibiotics and great advances in cancer research.

The same group of professors and citizens will meet again next Tuesday, to prepare the DNA restriction article for presentation at the Oct. 15 town meeting.

Graduate senate wants fee increased for '81

By CHARLES RIOS
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate voted 15-3 last night to recommend that the UMass administration and the Board of Trustees increase the annual graduate student fee by $2. If the increase is approved, the fee would be raised from $43 to $45 during the 1981 academic year.

The Senate's finance committee reviewed the need for an increase, and according to committee Chairman Gary Cridler-Smith, the increase is necessary "to offset the decrease in enrollment so we can budget the same amount of money to each department (as is budgeted this year)."

Smith also indicated the budget would have to be cut if the increase were not approved. There is no money on reserve in the current budget and the money must come from somewhere, he pointed out.

The committee estimated graduate student enrollment would decrease from the current estimated figure of 2,900 to 2,800 for the 1981 academic year. The steady decline of enrollment since 1978, when enrollment was 3,241 led the committee to their decreased enrollment estimations.

The money from graduate student fees is used to fund many campus organizations, said senate staffer Don Ross, including the Transit office, the legal Services Office and the University Child Care Service. Any additional money is directed to academic departments with members in the senate.

According to Senate Administrative Assistant Jasmine Dali, the fee increase recommendation stands a good chance of being approved by both the administration and the trustees.

In other business, the senate elected Frank Vaughan, a senator representing the zoology department, to the transportation committee. The senate also re-elected Fran Ferry to the parking appeals board.

Nuke steam escapes

RED WING, Minn. (AP) – Radioactive steam may have escaped from Northern States Power Co.'s nuclear generating plant near Red Wing yesterday, an NSP spokesman said.

The spokesman said radioactive steam may have escaped from a ruptured tube on one of the plant's generators.

Ed Watzl, in charge of security and radiation procedure at the Prairie Island plant, said the break was a small one and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission was not immediately notified of the incident.

Workers were taking a reading of radioactive levels near the plant yesterday afternoon, said the spokesman.

NSP has twin 520-megawatt nuclear generating plants at Prairie Island.

Black Ministers speak out against shooting

BOSTON (AP) — Black religious leaders yesterday demanded action from state and city officials to ease Boston's racial tensions, blamed for the paralyzing shooting of a black football player on Friday.

At an unusual gathering of political power, Massachusetts House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, Mayor Kevin H. White, mayoral candidate and state Sen. Joseph F. Timilty, members of the city council and the school committee met with three black ministers at the Jamaica Plain High School Tuesday morning.

The Rev. Donald Lister challenged the officials to sign a statement denouncing a climate of racial hostility in the city, which has become notorious for racial violence since court-ordered busing began in 1974.

The Rev. Michael Haynes called on Cardinal Humberto Medeiros to speak out against the city's racism, one day after Pope John Paul II spoke out against racial hatred in his Boston Common Mass.

"Silence is simply endorsing wha. has gone on and it's going to get worse," said Coleman.

Three young white males were arraigned Tuesday morning in Charlestown District Court on charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon stemming from the Friday shooting of Darryl Williams, a black Jamaica Plain High School football player.

The shooting occurred while Williams was in a halftime huddle in the end zone on a Charlestown field.

Darryl, 15, remained in critical condition and paralyzed from the neck down at Boston City Hospital.

Pleading innocent to the charges were Stephen M. McGonagle, 17; Joseph A. Nardone, 17; and a 16-year-old juvenile whose name was not released, all of Charlestown.

McGonagle, who was also charged with illegal possession of a gun, was released on $1,500 bail, Nardone on $1,000 and the juvenile on personal recognizance.

Judge James J. Dolan continued the juvenile's case to Oct. 19, and the two other cases to Oct. 15, according to assistant clerk Edward Manley.

At the meeting, White assured the angry black ministers that minorities will move free, walk, play and live in any section they choose in Boston and that anyone standing in their way will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

News Briefs

Self-help socialism

A new concept in community living in Guyana that could become a model for the rest of the Third World is described in the independent Times of Zambia (June 14) by Mohamed Hamaludin of the Gemini News Service. Hamaludin writes "The houses are being constructed primarily through the self-helf effort of the prospective owners, under a scheme in which Government employees are allowed leave with full pay to work on the construction of their homes. They are required to spend their normal eight-hour working day on the building site, as well as another four hours each day in unpaid work, and they are expected also to help in community efforts to build roads and parks." Prime Minister Forbes Burham is the leading proponent, in what may be called "cooperative socialism." In fact, his country's offical name is the Cooperative Republic of Guyana.

Presidential modesty

Dr. Kenneth David Kaunda, President of Zambia, resisted overtures from his followers to become President-for-Life of the small Africa republic. "I sincerely appreciate what my fellow men are saying." He further stated, "But those who come after me may also want to be made Life Presidents because the first one was Life President. How do I know they would have the same concern for the poeple as I believe I have?...I might preoccupy myself with the importance of preserving my position instead of serving people." (Zambia Daily Mail, Lusaka).

Cultural center gets funding

After weeks of debate the Third World Cultural Center (Orchard Hill) was finally allocated the money needed to support the various programs planned. Members of the Center who have been attending a series of OHAG meetings were relieved that the monotony had finally ended, even though they received less than one half of what they needed.

Some members stated that "at first we were lost in the meetings" due to a lack of the knowledge about the rules and procedures, but after working hard to attain this knowledge the only problem they faced was the attempt of an unknown person to invalidate the meeting. However, the attempt was defeated and the members of the Center were content to know they could finally plan their programs.

Cancellation protested

By Karen Thomas
Black Affairs Staff

Sugar and Spice, an intramural track team, vowed to protest against the cancellation of the shot-put event yesterday.

"I feel that if we had the shot-put event, we would have won the meet," said Liz Skelton, team manager. Sugar and Spice came in second with 44 points, while the Pumas won with 47 points.

Ms. Fina, an official at the intramural office said that when they arrived at the meet the shot-put was not there. She said attempts were made to find one, but when one was not found the event was cancelled. According to her any team has the right to make a formal complaint against this. "When the written protest comes, we'll handle it from there," she said.

Sugar and Spice won first place in 55.8 for the 440 relay. Liz Skelton ran first, followed by Vukank Magabane, Dian John and Wilma Tynes. Liz Skelton won the mile in 6:11.2 and placed second in the long jump (5'1"). Terri Duarte placed third in the long jump at 4'11", and won the l00 in 12.4 while Thenia Cooper placed sixth in 14.2. Dian John placed second in the hurdles at 19.6. In the softball throw Daurise Victory placed fourth. Wilma Tynes won the 220 in 29.8 and Crystal Banks came in sixth in 37.9. In the 440, Daurise Victory placed third in 1:79.3 and Vukani Magubane fourth in 1:20. Kelly Butler came in fourth in the 2 mile.

Editorial/Opinion

Verbal abuse needless crap

Karen Angeline

Recently, in this newspaper, there has been discussion of violent physical actions against the women of the university.

There are some actions which have gone undiscussed, and are probably the most pervasive. These are the acts of "verbal violence" which constitute the subjection of any person to an implied sexual assault, insinuating remarks about behavior or physical attributes, insistent "pick-up" attempts, harrassment on the job, or general obscene references.

This is not a discussion of an enjoyable acknowledgement of mutual attraction. Verbal violence affects more women than physical rape, yet goes unprotested and unreported. It is often seen as a "normal" part of social behavior; something that has to or should be tolerated. However, verbal abuses contribute to the environment of fear that causes many women to believe that they should restrict their activities, especially after dark, or if they travel alone.

One of the problems with verbal offenses is that neither the victims nor the perpetrators know that they are illegal. Being less drastic than a rape or beating, they are seen as "too small to worry about." By law, one can be assaulted without any physical contact. The definition of assault implies "threat." Any intent to dehumanize, or do harm emotionally as well as physically, constitutes a threat. Anyone who is "accosted" has been the receiver of "offensive and disorderly language, annoying to a person of the opposite sex." Also, there exists the right to use a public facility without being involuntarily subjected to obscenity. Further, someone who is overly insistent on "picking you up" does not have to be tolerated. These actions are misdemeanors. Should you choose to prosecute, there must be a positive identification of the offender, but prosecution in cases of verbal abuse is rare. If identification is not made immediately, the case is even more difficult to prove. However, there is some protection from the law. An individual disturbing the peace, or found drunken and disorderly, can be arrested. There are "cease and desist" orders for individuals who disrupt the rights of others. Whether or not you seek prosecution, these incidents should be reported to the University Police. Their knowledge of the situation could speed the development of prosecution.

Another problem of verbal abuse is the conscious or unconscious attitude that women are "fair game" as potential "victims." Several clothing advertisements and record covers help create this false impression. Often women are depicted in scenes where physical violence is suggested, but more often, the implication is that the individual in the photograph desire to be forced into submission. An exaggerated, unrealistic sexuality is supported. What is frightening about these images is that they are masqueraded as being "all in fun", or part of an enlightened acceptance of different facets of sexuality. However, the attitude of dominance and submission is a symptom of deeper, "unenlightened" hostility.

UMass psychologist Alice Eagle explains that this could be part of the refusal to accept women as their social positions change. She also suggests an inability to balance gender roles. Further, the increased tendency to disassociate sex and love can cause some men to view women only at the carnal level. Ms. Eagly also explained that verbal abuse could cause emotional injury. Depending on the extent of violence implied, or the frequency of episodes, a woman's ability to "relate" to non-threatening men could be damaged.

The less violent, more common insinuations serve as a "status reminder" that the woman addressed is viewed as someone who should be dominated.

Verbal abuse is a deep social problem, and it has more than one solution. It helps to be informed of rights and protections. However, it will not be solved by law alone. Once an act of verebal abuse has started, it is difficult to be protected from it. Therefore, these acts must be prevented.

Part of preventing abuse involves the choices one makes. Examine yours. Are you "fair game?" Is the clothing you choose appropriate for the situation you will be in? Are your shoes protecting or endangering you? What are you trying to express with your clothes? Think about the way advertising that promotes women as "victims" affects you. We all know about the sterotype of women as airheads, but the more dangerous, "She Wants It" stereotype develops without protest.

It is unrealistic to solely accuse men for this.

Women bear equal responsibility for images they project, or allow to be projected.

Sexual harassment is not a compliment. If you don't se it as such, let it be known. Women must protect their right to freedom, not only from physical assault, but from verbal violence as well.

The slick companies

James Lewis

The $360 billion U.S. oil industry actually never suffered an oil crisis, but U.S. consumers did. Former Energy Secretary James R. Schelsinger's prediction back on February 7, 1979, to the Senate Energy Committee that the Iran shutdown would reduce oil imports by 500,000 barrels per day, never happened.

According to Patrick Tyler and Jonathan Neumann August 29, 1979, of the Washington Post, pg. one, "While American motorists were waiting in gasoline lines earlier this year, U.S. oil firms were importing nine percent more crude oil than they did in 1978.

"A detailed examination of oil increases for the first six months of 1979 were: Gulf Oil Corp. up 23.5 percent, Mobile Oil Corp. up 17.9 percent, Exxon USA up 15.5 percent, Ashland Oil up 19.6 percent.

"The import records are filed monthly by each oil company with the Department of Energy."

How did they do it? Quoting Tyler and Neumann again, "Even as imports increased steadily in the first half of 1979, oil companies cut gasoline supplies to service stations by as much as 15 percent. The resulting tight market led to a 59 percent increase in the price of gasoline.

"The records show that just after Iran stopped oil production on December 26, the U.S. oil companies sharply increased their crude oil imports from other nations, i.e. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Nigeria, Algeria and Venezuela.

"Indeed, just as Iran concluded its first full month of shutdowns in January, Exxon was setting it's record for a single month's imports—26.6 barrels."

What's even more ridiculous are the oil company profits for the first six months of 1979, during the "oil crisis" months of 1979. The oil companies of the United States of America had the largest profits ever in history. Profits of the 23 biggest US oil firms totaled 5.47 billion, and a profit rise of 66 percent over last year.

The Wall Street Journal (WSJ) listed a series of front page briefs at the latter part of July. Mobile Corp. profits climbed 38 percent and Standard Oil of Cal. had a 61 percent increase, WSJ, July 26, 1979, p. one. Gulf Oil posted profit increases of 65 percent for the second quarter, and 60 percent for the half. Standard Oil had profit gains of 70 percent for the quarter and 131 percent for the half, WSJ, July 25, 1979, p. one.

Time magazine August 6, 1979 lists the percentages and the dollar gains in profit on page 64. Texaco's earnings leaped by 132 percent to $365 million. Exxon up 20 percent to $830 million, Mobil up 38 percent to $404 million, Socal up 61 percent to $412 million and Gulf up 65 percent to $291 million.

It's also interesting to note the many oil tankers crashing into each other, being set to fire, or just spilling out off the U.S. coast, the Atlantic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, and the Persian Gulf.

What's even more outrageous is the "Tilt Rule" by Douglas G. Robinson, Deputy Secretary of U.S. Dept of Energy. The "Tilt Rule", adopted March 1, 1979, allowed the oil companies to raise their price an extra $9 billion.

And even crazier is another $5 billion US oil companies are guilty of ripping off, which will take the US government 15 years to collect.

The final nutcracker is that oil prices are still going up. John H. Lichtblau, executive director of the New York-based Petroleum Industry Research Foundation (PIRINC), says gasoline prices conceivably could reach $1.50 a gallon in 1980. The article is from the Christian Science Monitor, by Ward Morehouse III, September 19, 1979.

This is why the article is called "The Great Oil Rip-Off."

UMass jazz quintet pervades Plumbley's

By DOUG GESLER
Collegian Staff

Concentric circles of blue and orange light reflected from overhead, bend off the rim into the dark mouth of the trumpet, like a wash of watercolor. The line of notes recedes and then pushes out again after the final chord change. There is a moment of recognition between the players just before the two saxaphones slip back into the melody to play the original chorus ending the piece.

It is Wednesday night at Plumbleys, an occasion which has become a pleasant ritual for those who know of this unadvertised music special. Tentatively hired early last spring, the Jake Epstein-Rob Faulkner jazz quintet have since solidified their position at the restaurant, promising a continuation of the event for some time to come.

They are an extremely talented group whose love and dedication to their music makes itself quite obvious in the high level of concentration always present. Most of the music is improvised, giving each performance a singular quality, while actual improvisation seems fairly and freely distributed among all. And with the number of visiting musicians (at least one a week), the dynamic level of the music remains high.

The band has remained fairly constant in personnel, except for a change in drummer, since its formulation nearly a year ago. One of the two founders, Jake Epstein (piano, alto sax) presently teaches courses in Afro-Am and Jazz at the University. He is also involved in the Jazz Workshop here. Past experience has included early work in an Army stage band, followed by positions with drummer Clifford Jarvis, Widespread Degression and The Platters.

Rob Faulkner (trumpet, flugelhorn), the other leader in the quintet, began with a classical education in music. From a music scholarship which started him through USC, he went on to do doctorate work in Sociology at UCLA. He now teaches sociology at UMass. Since coming to Amherst he has played in The Houseband (of Lazy River days), and with Andy Jaffe in the group Light in the Night.

The soprano saxophone is played by Dr. Fred Tillis, whose role in music at the University has been quite influential. A music professor, he is also the founder of the University Jazz Workshop, and as special assistant to the provost for the arts is pre-eminent in bringing in such jazz artists as Jackie McLean, Billy Taylor and Slide Hampton. More important are the spinoffs of these visits, the clinics, the workshops, and other related activities, often involving children.

The band's current drummer, John Ramsay, appears to have stabilized the group's percussion section. After a long stay with the jazz group Real Tears a few years ago, Ramsay spent time on and off in Miami and played with a number of people including Mike Gillis and The Platters, at a time not coincident with Epstein's. He returned here to study further under Alan Dawson, who has taught such artists as Tony Williams.

Until last week, Avery Sharpe played double bass. He will be leaving this position to tour with sax player and UMass teacher Archie Schepp. Sharpe has previously worked with Schepp, along with such others as Symnia McCord and Majeed Greenlee. Replacing Sharpe in the quintet will be Sal Macchia, a music theory teacher and double-bass instructor at the University.

Some musicians who have played with the quintet include Bruce Sklar (piano), Steve Braude (piano), Gary Kendig (drums), and Doug Forziati (trumpet).

get the most out of your college years

We're looking for a few good college men and women, with enough back-bone to grab responsibility, enough pride to be Marine officers. Prove to us you have what it takes to become a marine corps officer through the platoon leaders "PLC" program, the primary college officer program of the Marine Corps.

PLC has no-on-campus drills or grroming standards. PLC allows you to experience Marine training with no obligation. PLC's can receive $100 monthly, for you to three years. PLC is the only commissioning program which provides pay credit for "in time service" during college. PLC guarantees pilot training for those that qualify.

THE FEW THE PROUD THE MARINES

She couldn't clean her apartment in Puffton Village without feeling completely exhausted. Yet, mentally she found the exhaustion hard to accept.

"I'm like a bike chain with no grease," she said.

She decided to contact the National Multiple Sclerosis Society in Springfield and learned of monthly meetings held at the Boy's Club in Springfield, designed especially for MS patients.

She emphasized how uplifting and necessary the meetings have been to her adjustment with the disease. "It was great meeting others who had experienced and were experiencing the same things," she said.

She also received counseling from the UMass infirmary and has joined the Valley Health Plan. It is difficult to find an insurance company that will cover MS patients because of the chronic duration of the disease. However, the Valley Health Plan located at 441 West St. in South Amherst is very receptive and helpful, she said.

She works at First National Bank of Amherst now, hoping to put away some savings and resume courses at UMass later.

Ecstatic over her first full-time job, she described her life as definitely on the upswing.

"I die at 3 o'clock," she said, "but its worth it. At least I know there is a chance I could get better if money for research continues."

Life for her goes on. Each day, new theories are proposed as possible cures for MS. These range from a viral infection to diet to the most recent suspicion that dogs with distemper can cause MS in humans. Such research is imperative to find the cure.

Around campus

A Tuesday is a Tuesday... classes follow normal plans

A representative from the UMass scheduling office yesterday said next Tuesday's class schedule has not been changed to a Monday schedule.

Susan Sawyer said a number of calendars containing incorrect scheduling information are circulating around campus. She said there has been no move to make up the Monday class lost by this week's spur-of-the-moment holiday or Columbus Day.

Man nabbed in chicken theft, Amherst police continue search

Amherst Police were kept busy in North Amherst near Townhouse Apartments Sunday night and Monday with several reports of thefts.

In an incident at Watroba's Market in North Amherst, three men left the store Monday evening with a stolen package of chicken. An employee went after them and was police said he was "pushed and punched" by the three, who then ran in the direction of Townhouse Apartments.

Store owner Chester Watroba also confronted the thieves further down the road, and was hit with an umbrella. They continued running and escaped.

One of the men was recognized and identified, and a show-cause hearing will be scheduled in Northampton.

Earlier Monday, a knapsack filled with riding equipment valued at $20 was stolen from the back of a truck parked at Townhouse Apartments. The truck's ignition was also tampered with, police said.

Later in the day a Dodge van was stolen from Brandywine Apartments' parking lot. The method of entry to the van, a forced window, was very similar to that used with the truck, police said. The van was discovered in Springfield about three hours later.

The thefts are under investigation by Amherst police.

Feminist group offers therapy for lesbians, compulsive eaters

A Lesbian Therapy Group is offered by CIRCA, a feminist therapy collective in Springfield, beginning Tuesday, Oct. 16 from 7 to 9 p.m., and continuing every Tuesday thereafter.

Group leaders Cheryl Muzio and Sylvia L. Rubin said the sessions will provide women with an opportunity to actively explore their patterns and cycles of relating to themselves and others.

CIRCA will also offer a therapy group for women dealing with compulsive eating Thursday 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. starting Oct. 18. According to group leaders Mary Aubrey and Linda Tumbarello, this program will provide an opportunity to explore alternatives to obsessions with food.

Pre-registration and a fee of $10 per session are required for both programs. For information and registration call 586-6471.

Faculty Senate committee seats open to undergraduates

Undergraduate student seats are now available on faculty senate committees which formulate University policy in many areas, ranging from academics to the budget to the campus physical plant. If you are interested in joining a committee, contact Co-President Brian Burke or Mary Henderson at the student senate or stop in the SCERA office in room 422 of the Student Union.

Forum scheduled tonight on 'Feeling on the Mid East'

A forum entitled "Exploring Our Feelings on the Middle East - A Support Group for Jews and Non-Jews" will be held tonight at 7:30 in CC 904-08. Donny Pearlstein, editor of the Boston-based Jewish student journal Genesis II, and Cheri Brown, who holds a masters degree in Political Psychology from UCLA, will run the discussion.

Gridders stop Crimson, 20-7

By Steve Zack
Collegian Staff

An estimated crowd of 15,000 disregarded the early Saturday morning drizzle and filed into Harvard Stadium to witness a football game which saw the visitors from Amherst down the Ivy Leaguers by a score of 20-7.

The UMass attack was paced by quarterback Mike McEvilly (12 for 18 passing, 251 yards), wide receiver Kevin O'Connor (6 receptions, 159 yards, 2 TD's), and tight end Marty Paglione (4 receptions, 67 yards).

The Minutemen opened the scoring at 14:49 of the first quarter when Sandro Vitiello booted a 22 yard field goal to put UMass up 3-0. The scoring play came as a result of an eleven play Minutemen drive that began on the UMass 43 yard line. Keying the drives were four Harvard penalties.

Harvard was dealt its severest blow of the day early in the second quarter when Crimson quarterback Burke St. John was sent out of the game with ligament damage in his left knee. "When you lose a quarterback like Burke St. John that's it," commented Harvard coach Joe Restic. "When you lose the quarterback you're looking for, it's tough."

At 7:45 of the second period, UMass' George Lewis recovered a Harvard fumble and 13 seconds later Mike McEvilly and Kevin O'Connor combined on a 54 yard pass play for a Minutemen touchdown. After the extra point, the score stood UMass 10 Harvard 0.

With just under two minutes remaining in the third quarter, the Minutemen had possession of the ball on their own 40 yard line. On the first play from scrimmage, McEvilly connected with tight end Marty Paglione for a 39 yard gain to the Harvard 21 yard line.

Three plays later McEvilly found his favorite target of the day, Kevin O'Connor and the latter completed a 16 yard play for his and UMass' second touchdown of the day. The extra point upped the score to UMass 17 Harvard 0.

Not satisfied with a seventeen point advantage, the Minutemen increased the score to 20-0 on a 43-yard field goal by Vitiello at the 5:20 mark of the fourth quarter.

Attempting to save face, if not the ball game, the Crimson began a march upfield following the UMass kickoff and three minutes and thirty-one seconds, 10 plays, and 73 yards later, halfback Paul Connors completed an option pass to split end Rich Harner and Harvard was on the scoreboard. Following the extra point, it was UMass 20 Harvard 7.

"We're a big play team now. We thought we lost it when we lost (Dennis) Dent," said UMass coach Bob Pickett after the victory. "We thought we could hit on the long ones after seeing the Columbia film (Columbia vs. Harvard). They looked like they (the Harvard secondary) were crowding us," Pickett added.

This Saturday the gridders take on North Carolina Central University at Alumni Stadium beginning at 1:30.

Football thoughts

Head coach Bob Pickett calls it a "big play team." UMass tight end Marty Paglioni calls it a "varied offense" with new found confidence. A lot of the fans who were at the game say the Harvard secondary was suspect.

Which of these, I ask of you, is the correct description of how the UMass football team managed to thump the Harvard Crimson by a 20-7 score last Saturday?

The answer, of course, is all of the above. After a shaky start (the 35-7 opening day loss to Villanova) when it looked like the Minutemen couldn't do anything right, Bob Pickett's football team has reversed the tide of negative speculation with an aerial attack that left Harvard coach Joe Restic looking for excuses to explain his team's poor performance. After all, Ivy League schools aren't supposed to be beat by crummy ol' state schools, let alone be humiliated. Hell, they won't even come here to play us.

It certainly wasn't a poor performance by Harvard that resulted in the UMass win. It was an example of the honest to goodness type of effort that I believe can help the Minutemen to another playoff spot in Division 1AA.

Okay, let's look at some specifics. Like Pickett told the press after the game, UMass was a "big play" team.

"I thought we lost that capacity with Dennis Dent," furthered Pickett. I'll have to concur with the second year mentor. A 54 yard touchdown pass from Mike McEvilly to Kevin O'Connor on the very next play after a fumble recovery is what I'd call a "big play".

Another factor along this line is confidence. I talked with senior tight end Marty Paglioni after Saturday's game and his key explanation was a new found confidence in the passing attack.

"Hey; when part of our offense is shut down like our running game was today, our passing attack has the confidence and ability to pick up the slack."

The part of the passing attack that Paglioni failed to mention was himself. The Dudley, Mass. native has played a key role in both UMass wins against Maine and Harvard.

Not to be forgotten is the scouting and strategy that the Minutemen employ. Pickett revealed after Saturday's game that he felt the Harvard secondary "crowded" a little on pass defense after seeing some film last week. Thus, UMass picked on the Harvard secondary to the tune of two Kevin O'Connor receptions for TD's.

So, I encourage the UMass football fan not to look at the miserable performance against Villanova as an indication as to what his/her football team can do.

Rather, I suggest we watch the next three home games and see just how damn good they are.

Unbeaten kickers meet Harvard

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's soccer team will be better able to judge just how good it is after facing the Harvard Crimson today at 3:30 behind Boyden.

The Minutemen haven't lost a game (2-0-2). They've proven they can score (11 goals) and prevent opponents from scoring (4 against), but coach Russ Kidd still isn't sure how good his team really is.

"We really don't know how good we are at this point," Kidd said, but based on the team's performance against a tough Southern Connecticut squad, "I think we're pretty good."

UMass opened the season on a shaky note, settling for a 2-2 tie against Bridgeport University, then followed that with a 1-1 tie versus So. Conn. The Minutemen offense started to click in the third game of the season with a 4-0 win over Williams College and continued strong into the 4-1 trouncing of Maine on Saturday.

But So. Conn., 3-0-1, ranked fourth in New England, is the only club UMass has played that is rated among the top 15 in the region. UMass is ranked fifth in the latest coaches poll.

Coach Kidd feels Harvard will prove tough against UMass because the Crimson gave second ranked University of Connecticut a good run.

"UConn just got by Harvard 2-1 Saturday," Kidd said. "To stay with UConn they've got to have something."

Harvard (1-2-0) beat Wesleyan College 1-0 for it's lone victory and fell to Columbia University 4-1 before meeting UConn. Alberto Villar scored the goal against Columbia; Mauro Keller Sarmiento tallied against Wesleyan; and Mike Smith was the only gun against UConn. Harvard is not mentioned in the N.E. coaches poll.

Minuteman Tony Dias continued to demonstrate his scoring prowess when he scored his fifth goal of the season against Maine. Wayne Moran scored a hat trick in that game.

After the Maine contest, UMass plays host to Vermont on Saturday. The Catamounts, 3-0-3, are ranked third in New England and are the cream of the crop in the Yankee conference.

"If we get by this one (against Harvard) we have a big showdown at the end of the week," Kidd said. "Big week for us."

Netwomen drop two

By DAVE SIVRET
Collegian Staff

After pounding Central Conn. by the score of 9-0 on Friday and evening their record at 1-1 the women's tennis team spent the week preparing for 2 of the 3 toughest matches they would play all year, those being Mt. Holyoke and Tufts. Unfortunately they dropped both matches their season's record now stands at 1-3.

Against Central Conn. it was simply the case of Goliath beating David. The Minutewomen were simply the far better team and it was very evident in the final score.

Against Mt. Holyoke, a team that had won 28 straight matches, it was a case of lack of concentration that led to the downfall of the Umies. In almost all of the matches the women from UMass were in the lead or tied in the late stages of their matches but were unable to hold on and win their matches. The final score was 6-3 Mt. Holyoke. "We were just unable to keep up our intensity throughout a whole match. We were in the position to win this match but just lost it", said a frustrated coach John Beal.

On Friday the squad travelled to Medford to take on the women from Tufts in what they knew would be a tough battle. What happened was that they ran into a brick wall and were soundly defeated by a team that coach Beal described as "From what I have seen the best and deepest team in the New England area." Up until this match the women from Tufts had not even lost a set in the 4 other matches they have played.

The Umies were only able to take two sets at Tufts and both of these were won by #1 player Barbara Mills. She played an extremely fine match in which she defeated a previously unbeaten Ellen Jacobs. Barbara, who is only a soph., battled the nationally ranked Jacobs for two and a half hours before putting the match away by the score of 6-4, 6-7, 6-0.

Tornado: Large Conn. stretch wrecked, storm does little damage here

By NORM WHITEHURST
Collegian Staff

UMass and the Amherst area yesterday suffered minor damage after a bizzare storm—the source of a tornado which severly hit Connecticut—ripped through the area. Over 1.4 inches of rain were dumped in the hour long storm, according to a WHMP report last night.

A physical plant official here said no damage has yet been reported although several walkways had been flooded out.

The tunnel under Massachusetts Avenue was flooded with about two to three inches of water forcing students to walk along the rocky sides. Branches and leaves were strewn across the campus and the campus pond was flooded. UMass sororities and fraternities reported no damages.

Amherst, Belchertown, and Northampton police departments reported minor flooding of streets and low-lying land. Sunderland reported more damage, with uprooted trees and heavy low-lying flooding.

The major property damage was the destruction of a forty year old barn owned by Andrew Dzenis of Sunderland. The barn, located off Hadley Road, was rebuilt in 1939 after being destroyed by a hurricane in 1938. It was thrown last night onto Celessa Crossraod. There were no injuries.

Today's forecast calls for a quieter day with cloudy skies and a chance of showers, temperatures in the 60's and maybe 70's.

Connecticut, however, was not so lucky.

One person was killed and at least 81 injured as a tornado struck without warning yesterday afternoon, flattening buildings and flipping dozens of trucks and airplanes.

Gov. Ella Grasso cleared an 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew in Windsor and Windsor Locks. She also called in 200 National Guard troops because of a "grave concern" about security in damaged areas after nightfall.

"I was absolutely horrified. I had never seen that kind of damage. You only see it on television; and here it is happening to my neighbors," Grasso said in an interview at the Windsor Locks police station, where a command post had been set up.

The tornado hit shortly before 3 p.m., leaving a five mile path of destruction up Route 75 from the Poquonock section of Windsor to the Bradley Air Museum. The museum's collection of historical and rare planes was left a mass of twisted wreckage.

Book transferral funding questioned

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - UMass Chancellor Henry C. Koffler, speaking here yesterday, said the transferral of books from the library tower into Goodell will not be paid for from the Library's Acquisition Fund, as Vice-Chancellor of Finance and Budget George Beatty reported two weeks ago.

The acquisition fund is allocated to purchase books and not move them, as has been the case recently, Undergraduate Student Senate President Brian Burk said last night. At a meeting of the Faculty Senate two weeks ago, Vice-Chancellor of Budget and Finance George Beatty said the cost of transferring library materials would be paid for out of the acquisition fund. "The money had to come from somewhere," he said.

Speaking to the University of Massachusett's Board of Trustee's, Koffler told Student Senate Co-President Rich LaVoice the money used to pay transferral costs "would not come from the acquisition fund." Koffler also said he would "seek other avenues of revenue" but added the university would "use other funds" to pay library bills.

Koffler said the administration was "still awaiting responses" from engineering test results conducted by the Bureau of Building Contractors, which negotiated building contracts for the library. No legal action will be taken until the tests are complete, UMass Trustee Haskell Kassler said, although trustee's now are looking into possible court action.

University President David Knapp, also present at the meeting, said he was "pleased" with results stemming from a recent meeting with Massachusett's Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti concerning the library. Knapp cited "useful discussion" with the Attorney General, but would comment no further, "until the situation is looked into more in depth."

Also, Chancellor Koffler called for the trustees to aid in "getting to know the students." Koffler said he would like to "make the students feel like they belong" to the university. "With the exception of the library disaster, I found the campus to be in better condition than most people think," he said.

Van Morrisson brought his act to the Cage last night, see the review on page 13.

SCERA budget saved from cuts

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate Committee approved an amendment last night to exempt the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy, SCERA, from an automatic across the board budget cut of 12 percent to all RSO groups.

The decision, which passed 33 to 27, caused heated debate between Trustee Rich LaVoice, co-president of the Senate, and senators representing SCERA.

The proposal to exempt SCERA was made by Bari Njiri, a senator working for SCERA, and supported by Tony Crayton, Director of the office of Third World Affairs.

One hundred and twenty-seven thousand dollars must be cut from RSO groups to liquidate the deficit. The proposed cut from SCERA would have amounted to $6,000.

The controversy centered on a lack of funds to support a program approved by the senate in February. According to Crayton, on February 8, 1979, the Student Senate unanimously endorsed a program called the Campaign to Fight Racism. Crayton said the program began in the summer, with the position filled by Marea Wexler, but the position was never continued into the fall. "There was no money to continue this position," he said. Maria Wexler is now working on a volunteer basis for SCERA.

Wexler said "Racism is institutional in this country. It's imbedded in our social fabric. If we had the resources that we need at our disposal there would be an entire staff of full time workers trying to address racism on this campus."

Wexler also said $6,000 is a minor investment in a program that seeks to combat racism on this campus. "It's pennies really," she said.

Crayton said the program is not costing people money but racism is costing people their lives.

"If you exempt SCERA it forces all the other groups to eat proportionally more money," LaVoice said. Brian Burke, Student Government co-president said "SCERA should have incorporated into their budget the position to combat racism. It wasn't budgeted for the whole year."

"Everyone has to pay for SCERA now," said LaVoice.

Court to review rape coverage

BOSTON (AP) — The sticky question of press coverage of rape cases involving minors comes up this week in the state Supreme Court.

"I think the principle involved is as fundamental as any that this court or any other court has faced in a long time," says attorney James F. McHugh, who will argue that Boston Globe reporters were unjustly excluded from a recent rape trial in Norfolk Superior Court.

Arguments are scheduled for today, but officials say the case could be postponed to tomorrow.

At the heart of the dispute are two fundamental rights protected by the United States Constitution — freedom of the press and the right to privacy — in this case, of rape victims.

State to sell cancer hospital

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The King administration asked the Legislature yesterday for a free hand to negotiate the sale of the half-empty Pondville state cancer hospital.

Human Services Secretary Charles F. Mahoney, speaking before the Health Care Committee, urged the panel not to attach various conditions to the sale, saying such action would tend to "depress the sale price." However, he pledged to make the proposed changeover at the hospital as smooth as possible because he might need legislative support for "tough measures" at other state institutions.

Murder suspect denies guilt

LUDLOW, Mass. (AP) — A Ludlow woman pleaded innocent yesterday to a charge that she shot her brother to death on Tuesday, court officials said.

Linda B. Phelps, 37, denied the murder charge in Palmer District Court and was committed to Northampton State Hospital for 20 days' observation, officials said. Judge Robert Moran continued her case until Oct. 22.

Police reported they found the body of her brother, Frederick R. Brown, 42, in the kitchen of the Phelps home when they responded to a call Tuesday morning that there had been a shooting.

Rare turtles may get protection

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP)— Town officials predict strong opposition to a federal plan banning all development of a 7,000-acre patch of Plymouth to protect endangered turtles.

Scientists say the red-bellied turtles live nowhere else on earth except in the 10 or 11 ponds between Massachusetts 3 and the Miles Standish State Forest in Plymouth, according to the Boston Herald American.

Officials warn demonstrators injuries possible at Seabrook

By DAVID WYSOCKI
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — A lack of training among demonstrators and dangerous terrain increase the possibility of injuries and police confrontations at a planned occupation of the Seabrook nuclear plant site this weekend, New Hampshire officials warned yesterday.

"It is not going to be a nice place to be," said Attorney General Thomas Rath.

But Gov. Hugh Gallen and Rath said the police and the courts will be ready.

"We will do what is necessary in reaction to what we are confronted with," Rath said, repeating the state's intention to enforce the law and protect the property of Public Service of New Hampshire, builders of the plant.

Literature being distributed by the Coalition for Direct Action at Seabrook, which is organizing the demonstration, promotes a dangerous situation, he said.

The group is telling demonstrators "to do all that is possible to frustrate the arrest procedure," Rath said.

"This creates the risk of personal injury, not from anything the police might do, but rather from the threat that the construction site presents," he said, calling the site the "roughest of the rough."

"I don't care if you are walking across that site, it is a very dangerous place to be, and if you are part of a large group of people ... the potential exists to get hurt.

"I'm not crazy about being there myself," he said.

The coalition has said it expects thousands of demonstrators, too many for police to handle, to occupy the site and not leave until construction is stopped. The $2.6 billion coastal plant, 40 miles north of Boston, is scheduled to be partially operational by 1983.

Without specifying state plans, Gallen and Rath said they expected more than 250 police officers at the site. The National Guard will be training in the area and considered "on standby" for use at the plant site if needed, Gallen said.

Boston black students walk out

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press

BOSTON — Hundreds of black high school students staged a classroom walkout yesterday to join a City Hall protest meeting over the football field shooting of a black athlete.

"We are here to protect the children," said the Rev. James Bretta, a member of the Boston Archdiocese's Center for Human Justice. "We say to those who sought public office to do it and do it now."

The demonstration at City Hall Plaza, organized by the Citywide Parents' Advisory Council, came five days after Darryl Williams, 15, was struck in the neck by a sniper's bullet while he stood on a football field in Charlestown.

Williams was listed in critical condition at Boston City Hospital on Wednesday, paralyzed from the neck down. Three Charlestown youths were arrested in the shooting, pleaded innocent in Charlestown District Court; and were released, two on bail and one on personal recognizance.

One demonstrator held a sign reading: "If you can protect the pope, you can protect black students." The pope visited Boston on Monday.

Meanwhile, at an emergency school committee meeting held yesterday, members voted for additional seecurity at high school athletic events, including police-escorted team buses when needed and expanded availability of emergency medical assistance.

Many of the students who left classes to attend the hour-long demonstration were angry that the suspects were free.

"Everybody knows that if it was us, it wouldn't be no $1,000 bail," said Stacey Valentine, a 17-year-old English High student. "We're not going to be violent. We're going to show them that we're black, that we're proud, that we're educated, that we're angry.

"We care about Darryl."

The only confrontation with police standing by came at the end of the demonstration, when a number of students tried to enter City Hall to talk with Mayor Kevin White and were blocked by about a dozen police.

False alarms not just equipment's fault

By PHILIP TURESKY
Collegian Staff

Despite the presence of a new self-activating fire alarm systems in many dormitories, false fire alarms continue to be a major problem on campus, according to UMass Fire Marshall Keith Hoyle.

He said there have been 70 alarm activations since the start of the semester. About 30 of these, he said, have been intentional false alarms from old "pull" stations.

Thirty have been unintentional of accidental malfunctions from a new type alarm installed in 10 of the 41 dormitories on campus. He said only three of the alarms were for legitimate reasons; fires of the "trash can" variety.

The new alarms, the start of a 5-year plan to renovate the entire system, feature self-activating smoke and heat detectors. The automation of the system has failed to reduce the number of mechanical and malicious false alarms, however, and Hoyle said the current figure is higher than it was last year at this time.

Hoyle said many of the new alarms have proven to be over sensitive.

In one incident at Webster dorm the charcoal smoke from a barbecue was blown into the building and activated the alarm, he said. In separate cases, a burning bagel and dinner have activated alarms.

While there are flaws in the new system which Hoyle said electricians are presently working to correct, he said he believes the new system will require "a break-in period of a few weeks just as a new car would."

Robert L. Campbell, director of Residential resource Management which maintains the dorms and is overseeing the installation of the new alarms, is not sure how long it will take to repair the alarms. He said they have already cost the university some $250,000 in parts and labor.

He said that the company which manufactured and installed the alarms, Simplex Co. of Gardner, Mass., would charge the University additionally to repair or replace alarms damaged by student abuse.

In addition to malfunctions, there have also been incidents of intentional and malicious activation of both old and new alarms.

In John Adams a new alarm went off when hit by a thrown beer bottle, and several went off in James during a rampage there by several students last weekend.

The Amherst Fire Department, which answers University alarms and also runs the town ambulance service, usually has a crew of 5 to 6 crew members on at any one time, according to Dept. Chief John Doherty.

"Any fire department," said Doherty, "has a certain amount of resources. Needless calls deplete those resources while other emergencies might be occurring."

Doherty said that it would take an average of 4 minutes to summon additional off-duty crew members by radio dispatch; precious time to be spared during a fire or illness.

Hoyle said last Friday night, a fire truck answering a false alarm was hit by an automobile and crew members detained from answering an ambulance request.

Women's groups organize against rape and violence

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

In a meeting of the UMass Rape Task Force yesterday, Sergeant Mary Dumas of the UMass Police Department said there are many women's groups working to decrease the number of rapes and violent crimes that occur in the area, but there is no united front.

"There is no one voice coming to the administration. With a voice, it would make it easier for people to understand the issues," Dumas said.

Dumas met with women from the SCERA women's issues team, health educators from the UMass Health Center, and various facilitators from Everywomen's center affiliated programs. The Rape Task Force grew out of the counselor advocacy program of the Everywomen's center in 1972.

The results of various university based surveys, including the SCERA lighting survey, were discussed. The lighting survey resulted from the Chancellors Committee on Violence Against Women. "The Vice-Chancellor has approved the report, but we're still here waiting for improvements (in lighting) to be made," Dumas said.

Dumas said there are presently students in the hospital who were hit crossing University Drive. "I felt sorry for the people who hit them also," Dumas said. "If you went out in the streets you couldn't see anybody. We are given every excuse as to why the lighting cannot be improved. Some of the improvements are bulbs that need changing."

She also said General Electric is sponsoring a lecture by Sheriff Joe Higgans, October 12, to address the lighting issue. The focus should not only be on campus; alot of students live in near-by communities, Dumas said.

While the SCERA lighting survey determined that various campus areas range from poorly lit to total darkness, improved lighting alone is not the answer to rape, according to Dumas. "I get very nervous at the concept that improved lighting can end rape," she said.

Health educator Joann Gravell said, "Many rapes are acquaintance rapes. They are not the type that happen from walking down a dark street or by a dark dormitory."

Gravell said rape is misunderstood because information usually available works to erase myths, or quote statistics, but does not address crime prevention.

Attendees agreed that an information booklet is needed to aid the police, health center educators and rape counselors. They stressed the importance of educating the community on rape prevention and response to a victim of rape, harassment, or violence. Current booklets on the subject are outdated or out of print, Dumas said. There is also a need for a list of related organizations and the services they provide, she said.

Addressing issues of third world women, Task Force spokesperson Suman Bohm emphasized the need to deal with issues of repression.

'Swampy' Brooks bathroom waits 3 semesters for repairman

By MARY ZARRILLI
Collegian Staff

In spite of requests for repairs made last February, plumbing and ventilation on the second floor of Brooks Dormitory, in the Central Residential Area, un- [illegible] rday remained out of order, according to resi- [illegible] illip Sartanowicz.

Sa[illegible]icz, a three-semester resident of the second floor, last night said the dorm had only two working toilets and one working sink. According to the Health and Safety Codes for the dormitories, there should be at least one toilet and one sink per every eight residents, he said.

Sartanowicz said conditions were so bad, the bathroom was called "The Swamp" by floor residents. He said an overflowing toilet resulted in about an inch of water on the floor most of the time. He said although the plumbing is now repaired, there is still black mold growing on the ceiling, chipping paint hanging over shower stalls and a sink ripped out of the wall.

"They responded pretty well so far; I hope they come back and finish the job," Sartanowicz said.

Don Pelkey, the Area Management coordinator of Central and Orchard Hill, said requests were put in last February for the repairs. He said there is a tremendous workload for the physical plant.

"It is like squeezing a balloon, if you squeeze it too hard in one place, it will pop," he said.

Brooks is scheduled to be renovated sometime between the fall of 1980 and spring of 1981. Some second floor residents say they feel the dorm's proposed renovation has halted University repairs.

Pelkey said although no major repairs such as putting in new carpets will be done before the dorm is renovated, "anything for the safety, health and welfare of the students should be taken care of."

The renovation of Brooks will cost the state roughly $750,000, Pelkey said.

Collins supports Ted

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, will endorse Senator Edward M. Kennedy for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States, a Collins spokesman said yesterday. A formal announcement is expected tomorrow, after Collins confers further with people from the Kennedy campaigns in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Jon Hite, a legislative aide to Collins, said, "Jim supports Senator Kennedy and feels he would be the best person to lead this nation for the next four years. He supports his entrance in the race and will work for his nomination and election."

Collins met yesterday at the State House with Dennis Kanin of the New Hampshire-based "Democrats for Change." They discussed the write-in effort for Kennedy in that state and plans for the Massachusetts and New Hampshire 1980 presidential primaries, Hite said.

Hite added Collins' involvement is more "exploratory" than specific at this point, but that the representative would like to provide an "avenue of access" for Amherst area people who want to work for Kennedy. He cited the significance of student involvement in the presidential candidacies of Eugene McC[illegible]hy and Robert Kennedy in 1968 and Senator George McGovern's campaign in 1972.

Women's center offers help for many women's problems

Everywoman's Center this semester offers several programs and services to interested women.

Personal counseling is available for individuals, couples, and families. Counseling for Black, Hispanic, and lesbian women is offered by members of those groups.

The Task Force on Violence Against Women provides Support, counseling, and advocacy to victims of rape, battering, and other forms of violence. Single-parents with low incomes are supported in efforts to enter or return to school by the Poor Woman's Task Force. Special admissions, financial aid workshops, and information sharing on welfare rights, day care, housing, and legal services aid poor students.

The Third World Advocate provides counseling and helps Third World women find appropriate channels to gain access to information and services they need.

Each program offers workshops, skills development courses and cultural programs through educational alternatives which begin at the end of October.

Women seeking information or wishing to register for programs should contact Everywoman's Center at 5-0883 before October 20.

Support for assaulted women offered at Everywoman's Center

Support groups for women who were sexually assaulted or abused as children will meet Wednesdays, 6 to 8 p.m., for ten weeks starting October 10, at Everywoman's Center, Wilder Hall.

Meetings are free and discussions are confidential. Group facilitator, Holly Wheeler, can be contacted at 5-0883 or 256-0364.

Committee plans demonstration

An end to the U.S. blockade against Cuba, the renewal of diplomatic relations between both countries, and U.S. withdrawal from the Guantanamo naval base will be the key demands brought to the United Nations by U.S. labor, political, religious and community leaders at a demonstration Friday, October 5, from 2 to 6 p.m., at 42nd St. and First Avenue.

The Ad Hoc Committee to Break the Blockade called for the demonstration in response to mounting pressure from various groups in the U.S. to end the economic sanctions imposed against Cuba twenty years ago. The Committee's call followed reports that President Fidel Castro is expected to speak at the United Nations as president of the host country of the 6th Summitt Meeting of the Non-Aligned Countries Movement.

University Gallery offers varied contemporary art

By MITZI KOHNFELDER
Collegian Staff

It's quiet. It's a place to think. Amidst the turmoil of the zoo, it's relieving—a bit of culture. The University Gallery, in the Fine Arts Center, offers a daily array of contemporary artwork for free viewing.

Currently, the gallery is featuring selections from the works of three artists, including photography and examples of modern furniture.

Mark Van der Marck, whose exibit "Extentions" lasts from Sept. 15 to Oct. 28, combines sketching with photography to create optical illusions in otherwise commonplace structures.

Ralph Steiner, a distinguished American photographer and filmmaker, includes cityscapes, formal portraits and studies in light and shadow in his "Retrospective Exhibition," which ends Oct. 14. Steiner focuses on billboards, posters and window signs which beckon the city dweller to vote or consume.

And Charles Eames, originally trained as an architect, has contributed much to practical concepts of furniture design and to furniture as an artform. On display in the gallery are many examples of chairs which Eames said he designed to be functionally light, mobile and comfortable—yet still pleasing to the eye. Eames also produced many films on science, mathematics, the universe, time and toys, some of which may be viewed at the Gallery at noon and 3 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday.

Exhibitions may be viewed during the Gallery's open hours: Tuesday, 11:30-8:00 p.m.; Wednesday-Friday, 11:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m.; and Saturday and Sunday, 2:00 p.m.-5:00 p.m.

APO — the first service oriented fraternity

By JO ANNE BUTLER
Collegian Staff

Alpha Phi Omega is one fraternity that requires more than the mention of the word "Friday" to start a party. APO, unlike other campus Greek organizations, does charity work to fund its parties, APO President Rick Goldstein said.

"We work for the party," Goldstein said.

Beginning nationally in 1925, and introduced to UMass in 1952, APO now has 600 chapters, the largest Greek letter organization in the country. But unlike many fraternities, it is an independent self-funded organization.

Founded on the principles of Boy Scouts of America, APO's purpose is to develop leadership, promote friendship and provide community service. With a membership of 16 active brothers and seven pledges, the services APO provides to the UMass community including building and maintaining campus rideboards and compiling the freshmen register, a photo listing of incoming freshmen.

APO's 18th annual Las Vegas Night, a charity fund-raising event, will be held Homecoming weekend, Saturday, Oct. 20th. One of the highlights of the evening is the royalty contest, in which a king and queen are elected from campus organization-sponsored candidates. Proceeds from the event will benefit charities such as the Northampton Red Cross, Cystic Fibrosis and the Retina Foundation of Boston, Goldstein said.

Goldstein described APO as not being "a cliquey group," and said anyone is eligible to join. "Although we do not live in a house, because it takes away from the service, there is still a great sense of brotherhood."

APO meets the first three Mondays of each month at 7:30 p.m. in the campus center.

No-nukers respond: We are not 'terrorists'

It's time that the supporters of the October 6, Seabrook Occupation are heard from. As the date draws closer and support increases, so has the press coverge. Unfortunately, but not unexpectedly, these articles are often misleading or incomplete.

The "coverage" has declared us to be anti-nuke terrorists spoiling for a fight. It's been printed that we are a splinter group. As UMass students participating in and/or supporting this action we would like to clarify some of the points that are being raised.

First and foremost our goal as stated in the handbook is "not to provoke a fight nor is it to be arrested". "Our aim is to non-violently enter the Seabrook nuclear site, and to prevent construction by staying there. Our strength lies in our numbers, in the depth of understanding of every participating affinity group of our goals and possible strategies, and in our committment to refrain from any acts of violence."

Every person going to Seabrook has to receive non-violent training. In these sessions we build solidarity towards a common non-violent view of the action.

To get on the site participants will have to climb over or take down a 10 foot fence surrounding the site. This will not be the random act of a crazed crowd. It will be a highly disciplined, and organized act without mayhem. We then plan to camp on the site. If there is a "wall of police" preventing access to the site we will not try to go through them.

The Attorney General of New Hampshire has stated that the action is "a real horse of a different color. It's just not going to be the joyous celebration of a group sharing the same philosophy that we've seen in the past, not because of police, but because of the tone of the organizers themselves."

It's enlightening as to the Attorney General's motives when we note that the politicians have cried "terrorists" and "bloodbath" before every single occupation or rally at Seabrook. We feel that the Attorney General's statement is an attempt to slander the anti-nuke movement and scare people away from supporting the action.

In contrast to this kind of talk, even the Seacoast Alliance in New Hampshire (which has not been involved in October 6 activity) has stated:

Rumours have circulated that long time anti-nuclear activists in the Seacoast area have made statements that participants in the Oct. 6 action intend to break windows, use Molotov cocktails and weapons. Such allegations are a total lie and create an atmosphere of fear, hysteria and mistrust.

The Seacoast concluded their statement by saying that if violence did occur, it would be done to discredit the anti-nuke movement and would be directed by "the interests that control the nuclear industry".

We are writing this editorial to try and clarify what is going on. It is written in a hopeful spirit that our non-violent occupation will put an end to the financially troubled plant at Seabrook. We are also hopeful that we can help bring about a world that is not threatened by the grave dangers of nuclear power (and weapons).

Support is growing. Preparation sessions are held three times daily in Boston with attendance ranging from 60-100 people (2000 have already been trained in Boston). Campuses throughout New England are gathering and drawing many new people into the movement. The list of members and endorsers of the Coalition for Direct Action at Seabrook has grown to include 82 anti-nuke/alternative energy groups across the country. More than 100 students from UMass Amherst are occupying, with others involved in active support work.

Townspeople and farmers of the Seabrook area do support the occupation as planned. A major area group actively working toward the occupation is the Local Alliance of Seabrook. Their efforts have included gathering supplies, marking trails, reinforcing bridges we will be using, leafletting police and State Troopers, and individuals donating private land for our use. The people of Seabrook have voted twice against the nuke. They are still actively involved in stopping it.

Is student-run gov't sinking?

Whitmore vs. students

Skirmishes are going on between the Student Government and the Administration. That's nothing new, you say. Yes, but these skirmishes have a different quality about them. They involve some very fundamental questions for students.

The front line for the Administration is: Vice Chancellor Madson and Dean of Students William Field, with the Director of the Registered Student Organization office,

Charles Bagli

Bobby Daniels playing an ambiguous role. On the other side is independent student structures and the institutional power of students on the campus.

The opening shot in this series came last spring with an attempt by Dean Field to dismantle the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) money. The lifeline of all student government services and operations is the SATF, and student control of the SATF. Field's plan was to separate out all the different programs funded by SATF and separate out all their fundings to independent accounts. This plan effectively makes it easier for the Administration to control which programs get funded and/or to place some of them up for optional (as opposed to mandatory) funding. However, Field's plan to take the power out of the hands of students was defeated, at least temporarily, last spring.

That was a minor setback for the Administration. During this past summer Dean Field went for the jugular. The post for the Director of the Registered Student Organization (RSO) office was open. It is through this important office that the Student Senates' $1 1/2 million SATF money flows. A search committee for the job was established. Yet by the end of the summer the search committee was unable to find a sufficiently compliant administrator, so the committee was subsequently scrapped. Then Vice Chancellor Madson appointed Dean Field to an additional job—the Director of RSO.

The resultant uproar over the totalitarian process produced a "compromise" in the name of Bobby Daniels. At one of Daniels' first staff meetings words like "trust", "brotherhood" and "harmony" filled the air. With that kind of talk many people began to breathe a sigh of relief. It appeared that the Administration's front line, Madson and Field, had been dealt another defeat.

Then the memos came flying out of Bobby Daniels' office. He wanted to make "some major internal changes in the (RSO's) support services". These changes included restricting the Union Program Council (UPC) from negotiating contracts without Daniels signature six weeks prior to the event. Now, UPC has done some tremendous concerts without Daniels help. Demanding these kind of restrictions in the music industry means a decline in the quality and diversity of UPC concerts.

Another point of attack was the student run co-op system. Daniels' memo declared no cash advances could be made by RSO, against prospective income. Cash must be on hand at the time that funds are committed. This has the potential of putting some co-ops out of business since much of their funds are tied up in inventory or items on the shelf which cannot be counted as "cash on hand".

Since Daniels memo was issued, September 11, many of these policy changes have been greatly modified. These incidents though, add up to a pattern and a very sharp struggle over who is going to set RSO policy and therefore control the money; the Administration or the students.

For the time being Bobby Daniels has verbally acknowledged that students set the policy for the RSO office. However, Daniels appears to be in the middle of a squeeze play between students and the Administration. Dean Field has expressed his feeling that the Student Government should get back to "bread and butter issues". Fighting tuition increases, for the "G" Core-Human Awareness courses, and against Governor King's drinking age, all of which the Student Government did, is not what Field is talking about.

His "bread and butter issues" are parties and films!

Field and Madson are banking on student dissatisfaction with some SGA practices and SGA individuals so that they have a free hand in chipping and blasting away at everything good the SGA has accomplished in the last decade. This is a very dangerous situation involving more than just personalities.

It involves the very concept of student power and independence.

Vice Chancellor Madson and Dean of Students Field have got the SGA tied up in endless and petty meetings concerning "policy changes". Whether they go through or not is inmaterial because they effectively cause the SGA to chase around after them preventing the SGA from accomplishing anything.

The Student Government is about to fall into a red tape abyss. We are all walking on a razor edge and the Administration wants to push us into the abyss so deep we won't be able to climb out.

Bloody sales ridiculous

To the Editor

For some people, there is a great deal of controversy over selling one's blood rather than donating it. It's an interesting issue from a futuristic perspective; will this increase monetary value on other parts of humans, and life in general? The Red Cross and other blood banks have a difficult time getting donations and there are frequent, severe shortages. The payment for blood donations is a necessary maneuver to get public action.

If already we are refusing to share such a vital element of life, where will our acute selfishness lead to? It doesn't seem too far out to imagine that insurance companies will one day offer additional bonuses for survivors of organ or lifetime blood donors. If this occurs, every part of the body will be itemized and valued, dead or alive. In realistic and unselfish terms, donation of one's organs upon death can be seen as a token of gratitude for life; likewise, donation of one's blood can be interpreted as a human duty to help maintain life. Scientific advancements are useless in the face of voluntary waste and a severe lack of human cooperation.

Why sell or waste what we have never even paid for in the first place?

Name withheld upon request

(Ed. note: The Massachusetts House defeated a bill which would have legalized commercial blood banks last week by an overwhelming margin.)

Be careful nuke folks

To the Editor

To those who plan to occupy Seabrook:

We would like to commend you for your courageous dedication to the anti-nuclear cause. We would, however, like to caution you against the possibility of violence which may occur at the Seabrook nuclear power plant site. All involved should keep in mind that peaceful means will best serve the interests of the cause and your own safety.

Pull on it ya fool

To the Editor

I wish to extend congratulations to those responsible for the pulling of various alarms this past week. How these intelligent individuals overcome the complexities of the alarm is nearly beyond comprehension.

The epitome of intelligence is indeed at work as this paragon of wisdom approaches the red box with the white bar bearing "pull down" on it. He is alert to his surroundings and, sensing the right moment, seizes this bar and magnificently—pulls it down!

Keep up the good work.

I'm a man, my friend is a woman.

I'm not afraid to walk alone at night. My friend is.

When I smile at someone of the opposite sex they don't think I'm offering myself, teasing them or "asking for it." When my friend does, they do.

I've never been accused of being a traitor by proponents for my rights for expressing less than radical views. My friend has.

Flatulating cars driven by hulking drunkards have never slowed down as they pass to try to pick me up. They have to my friend.

I don't have to worry about getting pregnant or deal with myself and my conscience after an abortion. My friend does.

I could get drafted, my friend can't, not yet.

Society doesn't expect me to shave my body hair. Society makes my friend feel she should.

I liked the plans for landscaping the campus. My friend saw the plans as creating more havens for rapists and wondered why there was money for landscaping and no money for lighting.

I've never been spoken to in a condescending way by some one of the opposite sex. My friend has.

I don't live in a world dominated by the opposite sex. My friend does.

I'm pretty confident that I'm able to do just about anything I set my mind to. My friend isn't so sure.

My parents were very unrestrictive in bringing me up. If they'd had a daughter things would have been different. My friend's parents were different.

I've never consciously done less than my best. My friend has, she feels ashamed when she out does a man.

I've never been taken out to dinner and been expected to "pay" for it later. My friend has.

I don't expect ulterior motives when a woman is friendly. My friend has trained herself to when a man acts friendly towards her.

It is hard for me to understand rape. It's hard for my friend also.

I've been encouraged to excell in athletics. My friend has been told she's acting like a man if she tries the same.

I'm not overly concerned with my appearance. My friend thinks she is getting fat.

I feel I should be dominant. My friend can't help acting submissive at times.

My professors don't think I'm trying to pick them up when I talk to them after class. My friend has had professors that have.

I'm not afraid of getting raped. My friend is and I'm afraid for her.

Radiation & the sun

Columnist finds John Birchers and others burned by sunshine

Jackson Katz

I was anti-nuke. I was planning on going to Seabrook, you know, and I wore a NO NUKE button and all the rest. But the other night, I went to the Fonda—Hayden thing, and as I was leaving, all psyched for solar power, I ran into a guy carrying a sign saying GO NUKES, and I decided to stop and talk to him.

Well, I'm sure glad I did talk to him, because the things he said made me change my mind. He made me realize that I was against the wrong thing! Nuclear power is safe and efficient. Solar power is what must be stopped!

He pointed out a number of things that I had never thought about. Like for instance, how no one's ever been killed by nuclear power plants, but thousands of people have gotten skin cancer and bad sunburns from the sun. He pointed out to me how dangerous it is to tamper with something as potentially dangerous as the sun, when we don't know enough about it. If you think that radiation from a meltdown at Seabrook would be bad, what about all that radiation from the sun? I mean, the sun's a hell of a lot bigger than the Seabrook nuke!

And I also ran into a John Birch Society member, who explained to me that no one is really against nuclear power, that the whole anti-nuke movement is run by communists on direct order from Moscow. How come I didn't know that?

The Bircher, a fine outstanding member of his community, also assured me that the nuclear industry is more concerned with the people of this country and their needs more than they are with profits.

I didn't even know until he told me that the Three Mile Island accident was an act of sabotage by Hollywood communists, including Jane Fonda, to promote the sales of her movie, "The China Syndrome"—the proceeds of which go directly to fund communist efforts to oppress the unsuspecting citizens of this great nation.

Boy, am I glad I talked to these guys. I might have gone to Seabrook this weekend, making a damn fool out of myself protesting the wrong thing. But, I've learned. I'm already a member of STIFF, (Students Together In Fighting for Fission) a campus-based version of the Mortar Shell Alliance, a coalition of anti-solar groups in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Our purpose is to educate the public about the dangers of solar power, and push for the quick development of nuclear plants and weapons.

You know, everybody that's anti-nuke or isn't sure should come to one of our teach-ins. I'm sure you'll learn a lot. The leaders of our movement are real smart guys, scientists and nuclear physicists and stuff. They'll show you that solar power is dangerous and that nuclear power is the way to go.

Oh yeah, there's one more thing. I said I would tell everybody about our next planned action. We got the idea from the anti-nukers, of all people!

We decided that we have to do something drastic to stop the menace of solar power. We have to go right to the source of this thing, and shut it down.

Get this, we're going to occupy the sun!

And if you're thinkng how in the world we are gonna do that, don't worry. Like I told you, these pro-nuclear guys are real smart. They've got everything worked out.

To pick an Attorney General

Scott Sherman

After reading the article in Thursday's Collegian about the Senate activities on Wednesday Sept.26, I feel compelled to put forth the facts as I remember them surrounding last semester's Student Attorney General Search Committee and the ensuing controversy over the alleged unanimous vote of the Search Committee making Julie Robertson the Committee's "favorite" choice for the new Student Attorney General.

I am currently a judge for the UMass Judiciary and was a member of the Search Committee.

The job of the Search Committee was to first screen the candidates' applications to determine whom we felt had enough merit to warrant an interview. The next step was the interview process. During this procedure we asked all of the applicants the same questions in order to obtain a method of fairly evaluating the candidates with respect to each other so that we could pick the three candidates whom we felt would be the best Student Attorney General for UMass.

This unranked list (and I emphasize the word UNRANKED) was submitted to the co-Presidents who would then pick one of the three recommended candidates.

Let me reiterate that we submitted a list of three unranked candidates. To choose the "Top Three" people, we decided a simple polling system would do. The top three vote getters would be put on the list in alphabetical order. However, the voting was no reflection on which individual should become the next Attorney General. It was only a method of picking three final candidates for the Presidents to decide upon.

When we finished our voting we had Ann Bolger and Craig Sherwood as two of our three finalists; and another woman, though not Julie Robertson, as a third candidate. At this point one of the Committee members voiced an opinion that it would be a shame to exclude Julie Robertson's name due to her relatively good showing. (I believe she was originally number four out of eight interviewed.)

After some discussion, it appeared that everyone felt that either Ann or Craig would get the job so that it wouldn't hurt to include Julie's name in the top three. It was at this point that Julie received her unanimous vote.

We unanimously agreed to include her name in the top three.

From this point the list of the three candidates went to co-Presidents Brian Burke and Rich LaVoice for their consideration. They in turn met with all three candidates to decide on the person they felt would be the best Student Attorney General. They picked Ann Bolger.

As I have said throughout this letter, the three names we submitted came unranked and with no endorsement other than the fact that any of the three could do a good job as Student Attorney General. Contrary to Rich Tuttle's opinion, as reported in the Collegian, we were not supposed to provide the Senate with reasons for voting for Ann Bolger. That was not our job.

I hope this finally sets the record straight as to the events surrounding the first Search Committee and the subsequent recommendation of Ann Bolger to the Student Senate. It seems to me that all the accounts I have read of so far were full of second of third hand news, and as a Committee member I can probably give a more accurate account of the events contained herein.

Black students receive committee support

By VICTORIA JONES
Collegian Staff

UMass hosts one of the finest academic support programs of it's kind in the country, according to Dr. Carol J. Carter, Director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students.

The committee is an organization designed to aid minority and low income students, both academically and socially.

Dr. Carter stated that in 1966 only .69 percent of all black students in New England were enrolled in higher education classes. In 1968, there were 125 black students attending UMass, and it was during this time that a group of concerned faculty and staff got together and initiated CCEBS, she said.

It began as an academic program analagous to others at the University, but involved students said they believe it has become something much more. CCEBS caters to Black, Asian-American, Hispanic and low-income students.

Acceptance into the program requires that students prove interest and determination in improving their world, Carter said. In return they receive personal guidance and a chance to channel their talents into productive areas.

A full time academic advisor and many teaching assistants and tutors are available for each graduating class. The staff members know the students (there are presently just under 500 students in the program) and therefore can assist them on an individual level.

In addition to the academic-personal counseling and tutorial services, career-graduate assistance is offered. A career day is held once a year, with tours of business and graduate schools. Students are guided from freshman year until they are employed, providing a complete educational experience.

The program's success rate is high, and 60 percent of all the Black-minority freshmen who enter UMass graduate there, a figure slightly higher than that of the general University. Dr. Carter said these students are not only involved in academics, they are encouraged to join student organizations, and become an integral part of campus life.

Students are the biggest advocate of CCEBS.

Students interviewed said they sincerely believe it is a good program that helps them academically. They said it gives a sense of self worth, and that advisors are well aware of what's going on in the University.

The staff, said Dr. Carter, is knowledgable about rules and requirements standard department heads would not be aware of. Generally, students said they feel the program gives them a sense of security about academics. The Dr. Shirley G. DuBois Library in the New Africa House, which contains many course textbooks, is also available for the CCEBS students.

The CCEBS board of directors, composed of University faculty, students and staff make the policies for the continuation of the program. Funding comes from the office of Academic Affairs and the Undergraduate Student Senate.

CCEBS is one of 16 minority programs available on campus. Anyone interested in learning more about CCEBS can reach them through their office, second floor, New Africa House.

Ragged Cambodian forces face defeat

EDITOR'S NOTE: The remnants of toppled Premier Pol Pot's forces are fighting a desperate guerrilla war against the Vietnam-backed regime that took over the capital of Cambodia in January. An AP correspondent crossed into a corner of Cambodia for this report.

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press

TAKONG KRAO HILLS, Cambodia — Shivering with malaria and weak from hunger, tens of thousands of Pol Pot Cambodians appear to be facing defeat as the monsoon rains recede and Vietnamese forces advance in western Cambodia.

A glimpse of life in an area still controlled by the toppled regime of Premier Pol Pot and talks with recent refugees reveal hunger, disease, savagery and iron discipline even as the movement may be preparing its last stand. It makes no concessions to those under its control.

This goes on despite a recent Pol Pot declaration promising many freedoms to those who join a united front against the Vietnamese and the Hanoibacked government in Phnom Penh. The present Heng Samrin's regime was established after invading Vietnamese and dissident Cambodians took over the capital last Jan. 7 and drove out Pol Pot and his forces.

Crossing the Thai border this week into a Pol Pot camp, reporters found a "hospital" for female soldiers filled with young girls suffering from malaria. They said two or three in their camp died of the disease each day.

There was no medicine in sight, water was drunk right from a muddy stream, and the only food was thin soup and shreds of vegetables.

Men and women in tattered black clothes and traditional checkered scarves moved silently about their tasks. A few young soldiers armed with AK47 rifles looked at the visitors sullenly on first encounter. They explained everything in terms of "angka" — "organization on high" — the shadowy Pol Pot leadership which ruled the country for four years but still remains unknown to the average Cambodian.

Farther to the south, along the Thai-Cambodian border, refugees who recently fled from Pol Pot control said large numbers of civilians had been herded into a jungle area, sleeping on the rain-soaked ground and existing chiefly on roots, leaves and bamboo shoots. The penalty for attempted escape was to be beaten to death with staves "in order to save bullets," they said.

"Malaria and starvation have probably killed off more of the Pol Pot people than the Vietnamese army," one Western diplomat said.

Some analysts said the condition of Pol Pot's soldiers is probably better than that of the civilians and that must be considered in assessing guerrilla strength.

Graduating Engineers

You've learned a lot in school. Now it's time to put your knowledge to work. You want that work to be interesting and challenging. And to lead you to a rewarding career.

You'll find that kind of work experience at Sperry Flight Systems, a leader in the development and manufacture of high technology systems and instrumentation for the aircraft and space industry.

We're looking for BS and MS graduates in Electrical, Electronic, Mechanical and Aeronautical/Aerospace Engineering. Your work assignments may involve:

Product design
Research & development
Control systems
Electronic design
Design analysis

You've also learned, though, that all work and no play makes a dull engineer. You'll be glad to know that we offer more than just exciting work and good pay. Employment at Sperry also means you'll benefit from the attractive lifestyle and year-round recreational activities that come with our Phoenix location.

We'll be on campus October 17

Talk to us while we're on campus. We'd like for you to know about our attractive compensation and complete benefits program, and for you to have more details about the sophisticated work you can be doing. Contact your campus Placement Office to arrange to see us.

Van rocks the cage

'Twas a marvelous night for a moondance

By TOM ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

An enthusiastic crowd of over 3000 filled Curry Hicks Cage last night for the first UMass appearance by one of the most enduring performers in rock history—Van Morrison. Both those who came for his recent material and those who had followed him from his early days with the Irish group "Them" were not disappointed, as his repertroire encompassed all phases of his long career.

After a rousing opening set by "Fat Chance", and a short set-up wait, the crowd's reception for Morrison was warm and joyous. His set of nearly twenty songs featured many of the titles from his most recent release, Into The Music, including "Full Force Gale," "It's all in the Game' and "Troubador." "Troubador" was very warmly received, and was assisted greatly by an unusually large backing group of nine musicians.

At several points in the show, the presence of a violin, horn and saxophone amidst the more standard guitars and piano leant a new twist to some of his older songs. Most notably, the two "Them" classics sounded very different from when they were first recorded in the early 1960's. The usual screams of recognition which usually greet "Here Comes the Night" did not appear until Morrison actually began singing the title line in the chorus. "Gloria," one of the encores, turned into somewhat of a gospel number, more reminiscent of Patti Smith's version than the original.

For the most part, the remainder of the older material contained few surprises. The material from Morrison's 1978 album Wavelength was warmly received, as were tunes from such best-selling albums as Moondance and Tupelo Honey. One of the biggest surprises was "Moondance," in which Van turned an entire chorus over to backing vocalist Katie Kissoon.

Another somewhat unusual treat was the amount of time Morrison spent in front of a guitar. While he has played less and less guitar over the years, last night he contributed his musical as well as vocal talents to over half of the songs. On the other half, however, his classic mesmerising swaying with the microphone stand was clearly visible.

There were several encouraging signs that Morrison's fans are keeping up with the times, and not merely demanding the same old though great, songs. Many of the songs from Into the Music were greeted with some cries of delight, and the applause for "Troubador" in particular indicated that the new album is either selling well, getting local airplay, or both.

Advisors approve restrained reaction to troops

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military

WASHINGTON — Many people believe generals and admirals always urge blunt military responses to end a diplomatic impasse, but sources say U.S. defense officials concurred with the modest measures adopted to deal with the Soviet troops in Cuba.

From a military standpoint, the moves announced by President Carter essentially preserve the "status quo" in Cuba — the status of the Soviet troops will not change. Pentagon sources said this situation was endorsed by Carter's military advisers.

The sources would only discuss the decision-making on condition that they not be identified by name.

"Clearly, this was not the kind of situation where you'd think of using force," said one member of the small group who helped put together a reported 30 possible military, economic and diplomatic options for Carter's consideration.

While this adviser would not discuss specific options, he indicated that on the military side they involved largely a set of demonstrations and exercises that would point up U.S. capacity to marshal its military might.

For now, Carter is avoiding any response that might trigger a harsh Soviet reaction. Thus, the closest thing to a show of force is a Marine landing exercise scheduled for mid-month at the U.S. naval base in Cuba's Guantanamo Bay.

"That's something we used to do annually," said a civilian official. He made it clear he regards the exercise as no big deal and expects no reaction other than rhetorical bluster from the Cubans and Russians.

The 1,600 to 1,800 U.S. Marines are to be pulled out of Guantanamo after about four weeks.

In his speech Monday night, Carter repeated Soviet assurances that the Russian unit of 2,000 to 3,000 men "will not be a threat to the U.S.

WHAT A DAY!

After 15 interviews with various companies, I finally found MITRE. And after 15 interviews I definitely knew what I was looking for when I saw it.

I had to have breathing room. A place that would turn me loose and let me work on different kinds of projects. On the other hand, I had to know I'd be able to turn to other people for advice and backup. And I definitely wanted a steady growth situation.

With the MITRE people, I knew right away I'd found it all.

At any given time, they have some 75 or so funded, significant programs involving several hundred separate projects and tasks. And because they're Technical Advisors to the Air Force's Electronic Systems Division in Command, Control and Communications (C^3), they design and develop some of the world's most advanced information systems.

Still, MITRE handles every assignment as if it were the only one. Because they have to come up with the right solution every time. That's their product.

The best of MITRE to me is that they'll let me move from project to project if I want, or get deeply involved in a longer-range one. There's always something waiting for me.

I'm glad it took 15 interviews to get to MITRE. Now when I say I chose them, I know exactly what I'm talking about.

Stickwomen upend Mt. Holyoke; now 4-0

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

A new defensive strategy and goals by Laura O'Neil (2), Judy Strong and freshman Chris Coughlin proved too much for a Division II Mount Holyoke team last Tuesday. The score read 4-2 UMass and the win raised the stickwomens record to a perfect 4-0. The JV team, under Tami Gannon, beat Mt. Holyoke 1-0 and raised their record to 2-0.

Playing on a muddy field made the early goings difficult for the UMies. Mount Holyoke, under the guidance of Polli Keener, was perhaps seeking to avenge last years 4-1 loss at UMass.

At the seventeen minute mark of the first half Mt. Holyoke's Wendi Mohr shocked the favored Minutewomen and lead briefly, 1-0.

All-American senior forward Judy Strong brought the Mt. Holyoke squad back to reality eight minutes later. Strong scored off a pass from the other All-American Laura O'Neil to tie the game at 1-1 going into the pivotal second half. The stickwomen came out pressuring Holyoke and O'Neil scored on a penalty stroke 3 minutes onto the half, UMass 2, Mt. Holyoke 1.

However, coach Hixon was trying out a new defense Tuesday afternoon. Changing from a basic zone defense 24 hours earlier to a man-to-man caused some problems on defense. Mount Holyoke provided the stickwomen with their real score with their first real scare of the season and tied the game up at 2-2 one minute after O'Neil's goal.

Freshman Chris Coughlin, having a good season under any standards, popped one past Mt. Holyoke goalie Sullivan off a wild scramble in front of the net. UMass 3, Holyoke 2.

"We took twenty two penalty shots to their four and I would say we dominated play overall," said Hixon. The stickwomen enjoyed a thirty to seven shot advantage.

O'Neil scored her second goal minutes later (unassisted), lifting a beautiful shot over the now confused Mt. Holyoke goalie.

Hixon experimented and made some changes defensively. She said she was pleased with the mid-field play and felt that "the offense in the circle could have been tighter." The radical change was playing man to man defense.

"We only had a chance to practice this indoors and we made some mistakes this first game. It (man to man) does have some possibilities," surmised Hixon. The coach lauded defenseman Carol Duffy, midfielder Suzy Caples and Sue Cryder. "She moved to left halfback and played well."

The game was scary for awhile and Hixon said, "They are a good team, well coached. Truthfully, we did not play one of our better games."

The irony of this match was that it was the first comeback of the year for UMass. "It is good to know we can come from behind and respond to pressure."

Indeed it is. For the type of hockey the UMies are displaying other teams had best take note. In four games the team has scored nineteen goals and allowed but four. These are exceptional field hockey figures. The team travels to Cortland, New York and Colgate Friday and Saturday. Two more wins and that Coaches poll at the beginning of the season (predicting a sixth national ranking) will look prophetic.

Celtics cut David Thompson

BOSTON (AP) — Forward David Thompson, a 6-foot-8 former Greater Boston schoolboy and Florida State star, was cut for the second year in a row Wednesday by the Boston Celtics.

Thompson, originally signed by the San Diego Clippers as a fifth-round draft pick last year, played in the Western League in the 1978-79 season after failing in a tryout with the Celtics.

Former Bruin becomes coach

BOSTON (AP) — Dave Forbes, a former forward with the Boston Bruins, was named yesterday player-assistant coach with the Binghamton Dusters, the National Hockey League club's affiliate in the American Hockey League.

General Manager Harry Sinden of the Bruins also announced that 10 players had been assigned to Binghamton. They were goalies Jim Stewart and Marco Baron; forwards Craig MacTavish, Brian MacGregor, Rick Dorman, Gary Burns and Randy McGregor, and defensemen Brad Knelson, Graeme Nicolson and Doug Butler.

Boston Arena sold to NU

By DICK BRAUDE
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Boston Arena, said to be the oldest covered ice hockey rink in the United States, will be purchased by Northeastern University for $250,000 and a pledge to welcome other schools and the public to the aging facility.

University President Kenneth G. Ryder said Wednesday that Northeastern will spend $1 million on renovations to the rundown facility that is steeped in sports and polical tradition.

First opened in 1912, and once a home to the National Hockey League's Boston Bruins and the Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association, the Arena has been leased for one dollar a year by Northeastern from the Metropolitan District Commission since December 1977.

Ryder called the ramshackle facility "an essential part of the community and city life."

Formerly a home for pro and amateur boxing, and the site of political rallies, the Arena also was the Bruins' home until Boston Garden opened 50 years ago. The Celtics played at the facility until 1952.

Construction of the arena began in 1909. Seven years after it opened, the facility burned down. It was reopened in 1921. The MDC eventually took over operations from the city but boarded the arena up in 1977, saying the 6,000-seat building cost too much to operate.

Northeastern has spent some $150,000 a year on maintenance since then, with much of the work done by student volunteers.

"The new paint stops where the students couldn't reach without scaffolding," Ryder said at a news conference at one end of the ice rink.

§Also sharing the ice time with Northeastern will be Boston public schools, Boston State College, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Bunker Hill Community College and high school teams from the suburbs, where financial cuts have forced the closing of many ice rinks.

§Community groups, including those in the adjacent predominantly black neighborhoods, have been promised 250 hours of public skating each year.

Pats' Johnson out for year

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Veteran running back Andy Johnson of the New England Patriots was declared sidelined for the season yesterday because of a left knee injury suffered against the Packers in Green Bay Monday night.

A club spokesman said that an orthoscope examination disclosed that Johnson has a torn medial collateral ligament in the knee.

Johnson will undergo surgery Saturday and then be placed on the NFL's injured reserve list. He missed the entire 1977 season because of right knee surgery, but came back last year and gained 675 yards in 147 carries.

Horace Ivory, who has been on the injured reserve list since suffering ankle and knee injuries against Pittsburgh in the season opener Sept. 3, will replace Johnson in the starting lineup for Sunday's meeting with the Detroit Lions at Schaefer Stadium.

Frank Papsadore

The Boston jinx

For the benefit of all you New England sports fans out there, I'm going to stop rooting for the Boston sports teams.

Did you ever get the feeling that you were a jinx, a bad omen, or just a Boston sports fan? Well, it seems to me that we are an overwhelming group. We are a stable of black cats crossing the path to a Boston championship. I'm depressed.

The best way to describe Boston sports is, to coin a phrase, "Always a bridesmaid, never a bride." These Boston teams seem to continue year after year, to stimulate the greatest sports town in the world, only to leave us sobbing at season's end, as a child, begging for Lassie to come home.

But we persist continually to jinx our teams. Our beloved Bruins gave us a taste of champagne from Sir Stanley's cup in the early 70's and now leave us yearning for more. The Bruins are surely the most exciting hockey team around, but that eluding championship deadens their vitality like novacaine to a sore tooth. I still cheered them on, however, unknowingly dooming the puck to elude their stick, their shots to elude the opposing net, and the Stanley Cup to elude their locker rooms. So, as a service to you fans, this year I promise to root for Colorado.

Now the Celtics. I never followed basketball when I was younger. The first time when I saw my high school basketball team was when they lost the championship. But due to this lack of interest in basketball, I never had a chance to enjoy the Celtic's golden years. So for the past two years I've rooted for the fighting Irish of Boston Garden, and I'm really sorry about that. But this year, I'm gonna cheer for New Orleans and I predict the Celtics will actually have a four-game winning streak. I'm sorry but that's the best I can do.

Which brings us to football. The Patriots have never won a national championship in the history of their franchise. But, every season since Jim Plunkett got his walking papers, I braved blizzards, gale force winds, and an incredible Monday night fiasco where I suffered two facial lacerations in an "incident" that will remain anonymous. But seriously folks, the Pats have been close the past few years but they're still not smoking the proverbial cigar, and it's all my fault. It's my fault in believing in them. I did the same thing with the UMass football team last year. I was damn proud of them when they made it to the playoffs last year, but I jinxed them. Sorry guys. I started again this year with the Pats. They had a great start and then, like clockwork, they were embarrassed by Green Bay. So in an effort to salvage the rest of the season, if it's at all possible, I've become a Buccaneers fan. (Play them in the card this week.)

And now last, but certainly not least, the mighty Red Flops, I mean Sox. What better example of the September blues can there be? I tried to save their season by switching to a Houston fan in August, and then to a Montreal fan in September (yea, Bill Lee!), but it was to no avail. Therefore I feel that I am not totally responsible for the Red Sox. How could any one person be responsible for such a perennial outcome? Everything to be said about the Red Sox has been said in the past few weeks. But really, it's not their fault. Some of us, and you know who you are, must jump off the bandwagon. I mean, give these guys a break. I can see Fred Lynn about 17 or 18 years from now in the same boat as Carl Yastrezemski. He'd have done everything possible in baseball, except win a World Series.

But really, I think Boston is just an underdog at heart. We loom geographically in the shadow of New York as the big boy on the East Coast block. We're actually the unique sports fan that thrives on disappointment, who savors the agony of defeat, who still waits for Mike Torrez to win 20 games. Yes, Boston is the original underdog. Remember the spirit of 1776? That was the last time we won.

So don't fret, I was only kidding. We'll be basking in the dismal rays of depression for at least a few more years. Because Boston is my town, and it's teams will always be my teams. Sorry.

Pirates go two up on Reds

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

CINCINNATI —Slugger Dave Parker drove home Omar Moreno with a 10th-inning single and gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 3-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds in yesterday's second game of the National League championship series.

Moreno, who led the league with 77 stolen bases, opened the 10th with a single against reliever Doug Bair. Rather than risk the steal, the Pirates used a sacrifice by scrappy Tim Foli to advance Moreno to second.

It was Foli who earlier had doubled home a controversial run which gave Pittsburgh the 2-1 lead it nursed into the ninth.

With Moreno dancing off second, Bair worked to the dangerous Parker. The left-handed slugger ripped a single to left, and George Foster charged the hit, hoping for a play at the plate.

Three innings earlier, Foster had thrown out Ed Ott trying to score. But his arm was no match for Moreno's speed this time, and the Pirates had their winning run.

Pittsburgh reliever Kent Tekulve pitched out of a basesloaded jam in the eighth to preserve a 2-1 Pirates lead.

Tekulve struck out leadoff batter Cesar Geronimo in the ninth but suddenly, the Reds recovered.

Pinch-hitter Heity Cruz doubled to right-center and scored the tying run when leadoff man Dave Collins followed with another two-base hit. That finished Tekulve and reliever Dave Roberts walked Joe Morgan, bringing up Dave Concepcion.

Don Robinson, who saved Pittsburgh's 5-2, 11-inning victory Tuesday night, came on as the sixth Pirates pitcher of the game — tying a playoff record. Concepcion, who had doubled and singled earlier, struck out.

Steve Zack

Grogan a loss?

Could the injury to Steve Grogan during last Monday night's game against Green Bay be a Godsend? If the Patriots are to be a true playoff team, they must replace the QB from Kansas State.

Grogan possesses the proper intellect and leadership qualities to take the Pats far, it is his indecisiveness once a play gets underway that is his downbringing. He has yet to learn when to "eat the ball" rather than throw it up for grabs. Until he cures this bit of ineptitude, the Patriots would be better off with either Tom Owen or Matt Cavanaugh at the helm.

And while on the subject of the Patriots, who I have looked down upon ever since the departure of Jim Nance, the injury to Andy Johnsone's knee is unfortunate but at least running back Don Calhoun will get the starting role he deserves.

Their season may be over, but the Boston Red Sox continue to be in the news. The latest matter at hand is the Fred Lynn trade talks.

Sending Lynn off to San Diego for Dave Winfield and lefty Bob Shirley (the most likely trade) would be the best deal the Bosox have made in years.

Fred Lynn is up for a new contract which most likely will be in the astronomical range of $1,000,000 per annum, a price the owners just cannot afford. Take into consideration that aside from Jim Rice's $700,00 per year deal, the Eck begins a new contract next season for $560,000 per year. And there are still the resignings of Rick Burleson, Tom Burgmier, and alas, Carlton Fisk to take care of.

As far as on-the-field activities go, Winfield will quickly make Boston fans forget that Lynn ever existed. The 6'6" right-handed hitting Winfield would make the Green Monster quiver.

I wouldn't hesitate one moment to say that Winfield could hit 35 home runs, collect 100 RBI's, and bat .325 if he played in Fenway. Along with his hitting prowess, he possesses an aspect rarely found in a Boston player, speed. The kind of speed that would result in at least 20 stolen bases. (Consider that the Sox as a team only stole 60 bases the entire year).

Sticking with the Lynn situation for one more moment, Don Sutton mentioned the other night during the first Reds-Pirates game that the Dodgers are interested in Lynn and might be willing to part with himself, Ron Cey, and Steve Yeager for the centerfielder.

Yeager and Cey would be nice additions to the Sox, but the last thing the team needs is a tag team partner for Mike Torrez.

While all eyes were focused on the divisional title races, perhaps the greatest battle in baseball was going on for the last place in the majors. Congratulations are in order for the Toronto Blue Jays (53-109) who finished a game below the Oakland A's (54-108) when the A's made the mistake of beating Kansas City on the last day of the season.

Being serious for a moment, what is American society coming to when high school teams can't even play a simple football game against each other without some maniac firing a gun at the players?

Too much emphasis is placed on the importation of oil from the Arabs, the Middle East situation, and the newest fashions from Paris that we don't need to see how fucked up our own country is becoming.

Kickers down weak Berkshire

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's soccer team began preparations for facing their toughest opponents of the season with an 8-0 rout over Berkshire Community College at BCC last Thursday afternoon.

UMass led only 2-0 at the end of the first half due to some miraculous saves of the Berkshire netminder and Minutewomen miscues.

"We played sloppily," said Coach Arnie Morse, "We played a 'kick and run' game, we didn't persue the ball well, and we missed some shots on goal (UMass struck 45 times throughout the game)."

The Minutewomen went on a second-half rampage, scoring six times. Scoring honors went to Elaine Contant with a hat trick; sophomore Margie Anderson booted two goals, and freshmen Deborah Pickett, Nancy Feldman, and Anne Connelly added a goal and two assists apiece.

UMass travels to Vermont Saturday for an afternoon contest with UVM. Coach Morse considers Vermont as "a good challenge, with a high level of skill. Against Vermont, we'll need to be more defensive, especially in getting the free ball. The offense should take care of itself; it's proven itself. But Vermont is more sound than most of the opponents we've faced, and we need a more solid team effort."

As for injury, the women booters are "injury-free", according to Morse.

Women spikers crumble NU

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women spikers of UMass routed the Huskies of Northeastern University Tuesday night, 15-4, 15-7, 15-7, at Boston.

For the second year in a row, the Minutewomen faced a young Huskie team that's still building. At times, Northeastern gave UMass some tough moments, but UMass used a network of passing, setting, and spiking to pace their way to a sixth consecutive win.

"We were consistent throughout the match," said UMass coach Elaine Marasco, "and overall, we dominated with a basic, good team effort. We had the opportunity to run some combination plays in addition to our usual offense, and some bench players got some playing time."

"When a team such as UMass comes onto the court with the cohesion that's been building since the beginning of the season, and when six players can perform as a unit, then volleyball becomes fun to watch. That's what happened at Northeastern—UMass played as a unit, and they played very well," said Marasco.

The Minutewomen will take on the Springfield College Chiefs at Springfield on Saturday afternoon.

The men's soccer team played about 14 minutes of their game against Harvard yesterday before finally cancelling because of the heavy rains. There was no scoring in the game. No make-up date has as yet been made.

Jim Degnim: Celtic pride is alive

(Author's note: The story below is absolutely true. The names have not been changed so as to incriminate the guilty.)

BOSTON - Word has been received from Boston's Irish section on Causeway St. that Celtic Pride, feared dead last spring, has been rejuvinated. Attending physician Arnold Auerbach said the cure was a simple one. "All we did was give him a Bird and a Carr from Detroit," Dr. Auerbach said. Auerbach was quick to caution, however, that "Mr. Pride won't be his old self right away. You've got to remember that he spent quite a while on Skid Row eating junk food like Kentucky Fried Chicken."

Mr. Pride, interviewed at Yankee Hospital for Crumbling Dynasties, said, "I feel much better now. Last spring I ate something that didn't agree with me, and I got a bad case of McAdon't. But now I'm convinced that I've turned the corner on my illness, and the Bird and the Carr make me feel better every time I see them."

Auerbach, who like to be called "Red" even though his hair is white, discussed his patient's history. "I think his trouble started right after we removed his Silas. We drew some criticism for that, but the Silas was old and costly to maintain," Auerbach said. "After a while he seemed to adjust, but suffered a severe relapse when his Havlicek gland gave out," the doctor continued, "Now, if you don't think that was discouraging, we tried to treat him with some Ard drugs, but they were a miserable failure," Auerbach lamented. "So I called in a colleague from Philadelphia, Dr. Julius Erving of the Sixer Clinic for the Defensively Handicapped. I also contacted Dr. Jack Ramsey, a trailblazer in the field of medicine who'd worked on patients like Mr. Pride before.

They both readily admitted that they were befuddled. Erving went as far as to say that he'd never seen anything like it. Ramsay said that he'd heard of a place called Terre Haute which had an elixir made from the sap of a sycamore tree. Though it did sound rather unlikely, I was at wit's end, and willing to try anything. Oddly enough, the stuff seems to have had an effect on Mr. Pride."

Auerbach was asked how he would try to keep his patient healthy. "Fried chicken is out," he said emphatically; "but we'll be giving him a lot of cornbread."

Robert Cousy, a longtime friend of Mr. Pride, said, "For a while there I didn't think he was gonna pull thwough. He seemed too young to die. I mean, look at his bwother up in Montweal, Canadian Pwide. He's still going stwong and he's not much younger than Celtic."

Tom Heinsohn lived near Mr. Pride for many years and said he was "thrilled to hear that he was feeling better. We were pretty close friends when I was younger, and even though we've had some differences in the past couple of years, I still consider him a good friend."

But there were also those who didn't seem to care about Mr. Pride's recovery. Marvin Barnes, a self-unemployed businessman from Providence, said, "I never even heard of the guy." Charlie Scott, a photographer who does a lot of shooting in Denver said, "Well, I've heard of him, but I couldn't tell you much about him." Scott then excused himself, saying that he had some shooting to do.

Asked how he was passing the time in the hospital, Mr. Pride said he was reading books like Great Black Field Goal Kickers, Fast White Guys, and The Wit and Wisdom of John Y. Brown. "I haven't got the stamina for anything longer than a few pages," he explained. Mr. Pride said that he plans to make limited appearances this winter, and warned that he wouldn't rush things. "When you've been as sick as I have," he said, "you don't want to overdo it too soon."

"I'm confident that he'll come around," Auerbach said. "People tend to forget how healthy he was in the past. He's a strong guy."

Demonstrators march on Seabrook

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

Approximately 100 UMass students will be heading towards Seabrook, N.H. tonight to join an estimated 3-5,000 people in the planned occupation of the construction site of the nuclear power plant there said Charli Bagli, spokesman for the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide (SCANN).

Starting at dawn Saturday, anti-nuclear protesters from across the country will try to gain access to the site after hiking 1/4 of a mile through marshes and across a small river during low tide. They then hope to occupy the site as long as possible.

The goal of the action is to prevent further construction on the $2.6 billion plant, following the example of a West German group that forced a halt to construction on a nuclear power plant in Germany with similar tactics.

Planners say their first priority is to occupy the future site of the partially built reactor itself. If police bar entry to that area, secondary priorities to occupy non-core construction sites or block access to the entire site have been established.

Awaiting the demonstrators at the site are 250 state police officers and 400 National Guardsmen, sources from the Coalition for Direct Acting at Seabrook report. The CDAS is an umbrella group including over 20 anti-nuclear groups across the country supporting or endorsing the action this weekend.

CDAS sources said police have brought in a more potent type of tear-gas than normally used. SCANN members said this could cause problems—World War II-vintage gas masks they intended to use may not be effective. Plans have been made to make home-made masks from cotton cloth and activated charcoal, the filtering ingredient of most gas masks. The new gas is reported to incapacitate people in 20-60 seconds.

New Hampshire officials have also applied for a $250,000 federal grant to fund six judges for on-site booking of protestors. It is not known if the grant has been approved.

Local Organization nas been handled by the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide. SCANN has been responsible for recruiting, fund-raising and non-violence training for participants from this area. SCANN spokesperson Charli Bagli said everyone goin to the action from UMass will have received non-violence training.

Organizers of the action have stressed their non-violent intentions. "We are very committed to this being a non-violent action," Bagli said.

However, a Seabrook town selectman, Jim Falconer, said "the Boston group that's running this show has refused to work with police to prevent trouble, and that's a bad sign."

One potential trouble spot is the cutting of the chain link fence that surrounds the site. No UMass participants are taking tools, but others are. This drew the attention of Tom Hayden, who warned against any violence during the action during his speech here last week.

Participants in the action have been divided into "affinity groups" of 10-20 people. Each group will have its own legal, medical and support personnel. Decisions at the site will be guided by organizers' prior instructions but will be decided finally within each affinity group. Members of these groups have gone through non-violence training together and will live and demonstrate as a unity. Organizers hope this will reduce confusion and panic.

In addition to affinity group personnel, SCANN has obtained the services of a doctor, a nurse and an intern specifically for local participants.

A local rally to send off the demonstrators is planned in the Amherst Commons today at 3 p.m. There will also be a candle-light vigil held at the Commons beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Amherst stop proposed for New York train

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Vermont Central Railway officials said today they have suggested the rerouting through Amherst of the "Montrealer," which runs from New York to Montreal. The move, they said, would allow area residents direct connection to New York City.

Railway Administrative Assistant James Fitzgerald said a market study conducted by Amtrak showed Amherst would be a favorable place to reroute the "Montrealer." It would allow the large numbers of students in the area quick access to New York City, he said.

Fitzgerald said he has presented the proposal to the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, UMass, and Amherst College, asking for support. Bill McKeon, a member of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce board of directors, said he has received Vermont Central's proposal. "The Chamber voted to support the efforts of Vermont Central," he said.

Vermont Central quoted an Amtrak study which said plan implementation would save Amtrak $380,000. McKeon said since Amtrak is supported by federal tax dollars, "this would save us all money."

McKeon said he also supports the proposal "because we have 25,000 college students in Amherst, most of whom live outside the area. There is a great demand for transportation. The feeling is that the railroad will pick up additional ridership.

"In view of the energy crisis, this is something we support," he said. "The addition of a train service in Amherst would also promote economic growth by encouraging new business to come into the area." This in turn would create additional employment, McKeon said.

Vermont Central Railway said the only extra cost would be the addition of a connector at Palmer, Mass. to allow them a direct route to Springfield, and on into Amherst. The cost of this project would be $1.4 million, $900,000 of which would be paid by Vermont Central, and $500,000 by Amtrak.

Education post goes to woman

BOSTON (AP) — Laura B. Clausen, an assistant state secretary of educational affairs, will be the first woman to serve as Massachusetts Chancellor of Higher Education.

Ms. Clausen, 40, of Weston, was unanimously elected to the post Thursday by the independent Board of Higher Education. The panel also granted her the maximum yearly salary allowed under state law, $41,584.

A former consultant in the Arthur D. Little organization, Ms. Clausen served as chairman of the board during the administration of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, but resigned in January to join Gov. Edward J. King's educational cadre. Her new position was awarded by her former colleagues on the board, all but one of them holdovers from the Dukakis days.

Further use of papal altar banned

BOSTON (AP) — Saying that it wants to avoid anything "to cheapen or commercialize the papal visit," the Boston Archdiocese has banned further use of the papal altar for services or souvenirs.

The archdiocese says the construction company dismantling the altar used for the papal Mass on Boston Common has promised not to divert any materials for souvenirs.

And Gov. Edward J. King's hopes for an ecumenical prayer service at the altar have fallen victim to a demolition crane.

"The policy of the archdiocese is that nothing be done that might cheapen or commercialize the papal visit," said Rev. A. Paul White.

Carter's campaign charges Kennedy using fund loophole

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's campaign committee has charged that the movement to draft Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for the Democratic presidential nomination is an orchestrated national campaign that may be violating election finance laws.

Linda Peek, spokeswoman for the Carter committee, said yesterday a formal complaint would be filed with the Federal Election Commission.

The commission has ruled that the Kennedy draft committees springing up across the country are not campaign committees and therefore not bound to the same contribution and spending limitations. Kennedy has formally disavowed any connection with the committees.

The FEC ruling means that individuals may give a draft committee as much as $5,000, compared to the $1,000 limit on individual gifts to an authorized candidate campaign commitee.

However, the Carter-Mondale Committee says the commission position has left a loophole that Kennedy boosters are exploiting.

At issue is whether the groups are connected, as the Carter committee contends. If they are, an individual contributor would be limited to a $5,000 total for all Kennedy committees.

If they are not connected, individual contributors could give up to $5,000 to as many Kennedy draft committees as as they wish until reaching the aggregate $25,000 limit.

In other words, a person who could give Carter only $1,000 might give $25,000 to the Kennedy movement. Also, multicandidate political committees could give $5,000 each to an unlimited number of Kennedy committees.

The Washington Post, which said it had obtained an advance copy of the Carter complaint, said a survey by the paper had found that political arms of the Machinists Union already has contributed about $20,000 to the Kennedy effort.

The complaint asks the FEC to find that the various Kennedy groups are affiliated and should be required to register and report contributions and expenditures, The Post said.

Big storm brings more than water to Amherst

Police station flooded

Yesterday's storm, one of the worst this year, not only gave the Amherst area a thorough drenching, but also caused a rash of motor vehicle accidents and dozens of complaints of fallen trees and flooded basements.

Wet pavement and bad visibility in the driving rain sent afternoon drivers blundering and skidding into each other from 2:30 to 4:30. None of the accidents resulted in injuries. Police also received reports of several manhole covers popped open by the force of the sewer system water.

Later in the evening, a tractor trailer jacknifed across Main Street in an attempt to avoid barricades at Pelham Road, which was closed because of flooding for about two hours after 4:15 p.m.

Besides being swamped by calls about the storm, police were flooded by rain water which streamed down the incline from North Pleasant Street and poured into the police station, which is below ground level.

"This happens every time we have a major rainstorm," said Police Chief Don Maia. He said the water has never done any serious damage so far, but could conceivably reach the radio wires in a severe storm and break up communications between the station and individual police.

The department plans to install plexiglass shielding at the open front of the station entrance, he said. Hopefully, this would block the worst of the water in the future.

Groups fight MDC proposal of river water for Quabbin

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

The Connecticut River sweeps silently past Northampton and Holyoke on its way to the Atlantic Ocean, sublimely unaware of controversy developing over plans to divert it Quabbin Reservoir.

The Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) has proposed construction of a 9.8 mile tunnel adequate to carry water from the Connecticut River to Quabbin Reservoir to supply district water needs.

The water would be drawn off by "flood skimming" or diverting the water when flow exceeds 17,000 feet per second according to published MDC proposal. The water would be stored at the MDC's Northfield Mountain Pumped Storage Facility.

The diversion proposal has drawn opposition from area residents and environmental groups, notably the Council for Environmental Quality (CEQ) and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG).

MassPIRG's Patti O'Donnell said the student groups' opposition was based on the MDC's "failure to consider either environmental impacts or viable alternatives."

MassPIRG staffer Terri Goldberg said reduced flow in the river and disruption of regular flood cycles were two direct impacts. "Water temperature, erosion amd salinity could also increase, which would affect anadromus fish migration (shad and salmon)," she said.

O'Donnell said various agencies have been striving to increase the salmon run in the Connecticut. She said the lamprey eel, a predator of the salmon, could float through the tunnel into Quabbin Reservoir. The eels would become trapped there and quickly destroy the excellent fishing that now exists, she said.

Both Goldberg and O'Donnell challenged the need for the project at all.

They said an independent survey sponsored by the MDC in 1975 which analyzed water usage in all MDC communities. The report, they said, concluded that the MDC lost nearly 30% of is water daily through leaks and faulty metering. The Boston area had 46% of its water listed as unmetered.

Chancellor reveals rival offer

By BRIAN O'CONNELL

University Chancellor Henry C. Koffler announced today in a Faculty Senate meeting that he was recently offered the presidency of the University of Colorado.

Speaking to the Faculty Senate, Koffler said he was "approached" last year by a Colorado trustee who urged Koffler to "come out to the university." Koffler said he declined the offer because he had already accepted the UMass position. Koffler jokingly said his "moving van had just arrived, and was waiting outside."

Koffler also said he and University President David Knapp were now actively pursuing remedies concerning the library situation. The Chancellor added he and Knapp were also looking into the possibilities of restricted use of the library for faculty, graduates and advanced undergraduates.

In other Faculty Senate business, Professor Joseph Frank, faculty delegate to the UMass Board of Trustees, advised university instructors "to use their own discretion" in rescheduling classes because of state holidays. Frank alluded to the recent Papal holiday last Oct. 1, saying, "in cases such as these, the university should cancel classes immediately after the state declares a holiday."

Speaking on the campus construction problems, Frank cited "overwhelming" university costs for renovations of deteriorating buildings on campus. He said monies from faulty construction refunds will not go directly back to the university, but to the State.

Student Government Co-President Brian Burke reported to the Senate that he was "very happy" with the various student-run businesses and co-ops on campus. Burke said "all the groups are making money. The students are also learning business skills that they wouldn't normally receive in the classroom."

In other senate news, Professor of Business and Finance, James B. Ludtke and Geology Prof. Gregory Webb were elected to the position of Alternate Delegates to the Board of Trustees. Also, Physics Prof. Phillip Jones was elected chairman of the Rules Committee.

Food for Thought

The month of October and November are very busy periods for community organizers because the bulk of all the activities for the Fall semester will occur during this period.

The months are essential for two basic reasons. First, October will usually house the Black Homecoming festivities. While the month of November will contain the events for the Black Solidarity conference. Second, the success of these programs will have a lasting image on Kwanza (in December) and Black History month (February).

Last year the two programs were very disappointing. First, the Homecoming programs were almost forgotten. Normally, the programs are planned in conjunction with the New Africa House Cultural Center. But last year the Center did not work in this capacity. Thus, the Office of Third World Affairs was very slow in taking over these responsibilities. Because of this confusion, Homecoming was delayed until December. The normal events such as a fashion-show and a basketball game between the faculty and the students were not a part of last year's programming. Instead the only survivor was the concert. But it was flat, because the crowd did not appreciate the music of the Ellis Hall Band.

The Black Solidarity conference was plagued by a number of problems. First, the events were not publicized to draw the interest of the students. Second, the emphasis of the conference was based on student to faculty relationship. The turnout of the faculty was also low. Third, the final resolutions did not reach the community. It would seem, that the efforts of all the work, was lost in the three day conference.

With all the memories of last year's events behind us, what can we expect for this year? First, a meeting was held this Thursday, to establish plans for this year. Although a few individuals were not present, Homecoming committee was able to determine everyone's responsibilities. Second, the 1979 Homecoming programs will consist of a fashion-cabaret show, basketball game, and a concert. Although the concert committee has not finalized an act for November 3rd, individuals wishing to be part of this program should contact Miriam or Derrick at the RSO office (5-3604). Third, the Black Solidarity conference will be held in early November. People should contact Brother Tony Crayton in the Office of Third World Affairs for this program (5-2517).

In summation, the tools to make this year's Black Homecoming (scheduled for November 1st, 2nd, and 3rd) and Solidarity festivities successful will depend on the community. We need people to assist us in the leg work. Otherwise, I would hate to see the Fall of 1978 return.

The Attorney General in exile

The Attorney General in Exile refers not only to a candidate who has received at best neglect in consideration, but to the entire process of Attorney General selection. I hope to put forward not a series of argumentative notes but concrete concerns that a significant number of students have voiced over the selection process and a fair methods of appointment. The basis of the problem is rooted in the loss of integrity in the manner in which candidates have been selected and how they have performed in their respective "permanent" and "acting" positions.

The use of investigations for political purposes caused the last permanent Attorney General Robin Adans to be expounded from the Senate March 7, 1979. A move was made by Bob Cleary to appeal the request to recind Adams motion of confirmation, the appeal lost 44-21. In that same meeting of March 7, John Hensleigh appointed, Larry Mandell acting attorney general. These facts were obtained from the official Senate minutes.

March 29, Hensleigh, in his last meeting as co-president appointed Will Pierce acting attorney general and it passed unanimously. Co-president Tyson appointed an attorney general search committee at the same meeting. These were their last official acts as co-presidents.

According to the Constitution chapter five, Article II, section C, the attorney general is to be removed within three weeks of the election of a new president. This being the case, acting attorney general, Will Pierce could not be in that position after three weeks without reappointment and consent of the Senate.

April 25, Brian Burke the new co-president succeeding Tyson/Hensiegh, moved to appoint Ann Bolger as Attorney General. The personal association of the candidate to the president and the lack of background on her qualifications initiated according to the Senate mintues a very lengthy debate ending in Bolger's appointment being defeated 39-4.

Co-president LaVoice later expressed his satisfaction over the leadership of the search. Yet, after the above statement, rather than consider Julie Robinson as Attorney General, LaVoice claims that "under the present circumstances a new search committee will be formed." What was wrong with the last one if they "had done such a great job," was that the only logical choice left was to appoint Julie Robinson. That choice was never considered. Perhaps her consideration was ignored due to her defense of the Malcolm X Center against the reactionary forces in the Southwest Assembly chaired by Richard LaVoice and Tim Condon.

No further action in the Senate was taken until May 2, when LaVoice moved that Will Pierce be appointed Chairperson of the Attorney General Selection Committee. The move passed 18-15. The question still remained was Pierce still supposed to be attorney general? According to the constitution—No.

Having noted these irregularities in the selection process, Third World Senator

Commentary

Gary Lee introduced a motion to amend the by-laws regarding the Attorney General being appointed by the Search Committee and approved by the Senate thus eliminating the power of the presidents to appoint. Such appointments have proved themselves to be political patronage rather than objective consideration of qualified candidates.

On May 9, Pierce was referred to in the Senate minutes as Acting Attorney General and there was a motion passed that read "Move that acting attorney general Will Pierce work through the summer." This clearly implied that he not only was Acting Attorney General but Chair of the Selection Committee for the job!

Further irregulations continued. The following week Pierce as Acting Attorney General took no disciplinary action against then Treasurer Jim O'Connell who fraudently used $301.55 in credit card charges. He merely had him return the money and sign a statement saying it was wrong. According to Coordinating Committee minutes on June 1st discussion of appointing an Acting Attorney General was tabled. Yet on May 9th Pierce was referred to as Acting Attorney General. That's all he was doing—acting. (He was never appointed and never confirmed by the Senate, yet acted like he had the right to define the actions of O'Connell. No disciplinary action was taken for the credit card fraud and O'Connell was later to abscond $60 of cash advance money that Les Bridges the RSO Business Manager then made him return.)

If this process sounds confusing to you now, that's because it is. However let me further substanciate the issue of Julie Robinson.

On June 24 Julie Robinson was assigned by a Coordinating Committee "to work with the treasurers to investigate compliance with financial policies within RSO." This is precisely the job of the Acting Attorney General Pierce according to Chapter 5 Section I D. Robinson's work over the summer was precisely what the Acting Attorney General was supposed to do, yet he was away in Washington to further other interests than those he was appointed to fulfill. Oddly enough Will Pierce's illegal appointment had the same tinge of political patronage of that of Ann Bolgers, he was Richard LaVoice's campaign manager!

It is therefore not a matter of impeaching Will Pierce, nor is it a matter of whether or

Nigeria makes peaceful transition

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Black Affairs Staff

After months of debate and political turmoil, Nigeria finally concluded its transition to civilian rule on October 1st, 1979. The process began in July this year when voters in the 19 state federation went to the polls in what was the country's first free election held since 1965.

Acording to the Nigerain Constitution, the President must in any Presidential election poll 25% of the total votes cast in ⅔ of the states making up the Federation. After the presidential popular election held on August 11, the country declared Alhaji Shehu Shagari of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) as the country's new leader. This sparked off protest from the other electoral candidates. The leader of the United Party of Nigeria, Chief Obafemi Awolowo, along with the leaders of the other parties filed a legal protest against the Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO) for violating the country's constitution.

The basis of their argument was that the winner Shagari got 25% of the votes cast in 12 and not 13 states as stipulated by the Constitution. Shagari was victorious in the following states: Bendel, Gongola, Kwara, Sokoto, Rivers, Crossrivers, Niger, Benue, Plateau, Kaduna, Bornu and Bauchi. In Kano, the 13th state, Shagari scored only 19.94% of the total number of votes polled.

In a ruling on September 11, 1979, the Electoral Tribunal confirmed Shagari's victory by dismissing the claims that the electoral process was unconstitutional. Then on midnight on October 1, 1979 the Federal Military Government under General Olusegun Obasanjo placed control in the hands of the National Party of Nigeria.

President Shagari, a politically astute leader, served in various Nigerian Ministries prior to 1966 and was among the first group of commissioners to serve in the military government. He now faces the task of bringing together the country's vast and diverse population and creating a climate conducive to reshaping and general reform. Nigeria's future under civilian rule depends to a large extent on the performance of the Shagari government.

Editor's note: Marcia Hospedales spent the year on exchange in Nigeria last year.

The Afro-Am Society held its first meeting of the semester in the Shirley Graham DuBois Library in New Africa House on Sept. 18th at 5 p.m. The guest speakers were the Director of the Office of Third World Affairs, Tony Crayton; The Third World Program Consultant of R.S.O., Roberta Uno; the Co-ordinator of the Third World Causus Elections, Tony Johnson; a representative of Ahora, Jose Bou; President of the Asian-American Students Association, Michael Susuki; and finally the Co-ordinator of the Orchard Hill Third World Center and newly elected Vice-President of Afrik-Am, Julian Tynes.

A second meeting of the Afro-Am Society

On October 2, at 3 p.m. in the Dubois Library, our organization held a meeting in which elections took place as announced in our first meeting. The results are:

President: Semaj Lycurgus
Vice-President: Julian Tynes
Secretary: Jalica Battle
Treasurer: Mildeen Worrell
Sargent-at-Arms: Texter Dunwell

Next Tuesday in the DuBois Room at 5 p.m. we will be discussing the standing committees of Afrik-Am, dual-education in Afrik-Am and the community, homecoming and our new name "The Afrikan-Amerikan Students Organization," hence forth to be known as "Afrik-Am"—a new symbol of an old spirit once again rejuvinated.

Budget fight

By TEXTER DUNWELL
Black Affairs Staff

The Third World Cultural Center was recently notified that the Orchard Hill Area Government Budget (O.H.A.G.) is invalid, and that the Orchard Hill Center would again have to go through the process of assuring that they would receive a Budget. This is the second attempt to destroy the center's Budget.

The first attempt which took place at the last O.H.A.G.meeting was defeated. It was replaced by another attempt which to this point is successful.

The members of the Center, who live on Orchard Hill have to carry the weight of assuring that the Center, which represents all Third World People on this campus, receives a budget which will enable it to support various programs which are in the interest of all Third World People. The next O.H.A.G. meeting will be held on Monday October 8, at nine p.m.

not the first candidates in the search were ranked or unranked.

The issue is that one, the search process that involves the ability of the presidents to appoint the Attorney General with no obligation to follow the recommendations of a search committee is a system inherently faulty and replete with irregularities and patronage. The responsibilities of the Attorney General are too critical to be the subject of political manipulation and fraud.

Secondly there was nothing wrong wth the first search from day one, as LaVoice himself declared April 25. The only problem was his refusal to even consider Julie Robinson and make rational reasons for his not selecting her. True, there is no law stating he must yet if the process is to maintain its integrity, openess is crucial. The past years events have not inspired over confidence in the openess of the p·o·cess.

Given this position we again move to amend the by-laws, Chapter 5 Article 2 Section: C; The Attorney General shall be appointed by a search committee with the consent of the Senate by a two-thirds vote within one month after the Presidential election in the Spring. The complete motion dealing wth the vacancy and the composition of the search committee has been read into the minutes and wll be brought on to the floor of the Senate this week.

We have an Attorney General in Exile; bring her home so that she can be openly considered for her work, commitment and skills.

War-like rubble remains where air museum stood

By MIKE STANTON
Associated Press

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. — The nation's fourthlargest aircraft collection now looks more like the aftermath of Pearl Harbor than a museum.

The Bradley Air Museum at Bradley International Airport was among the victims of Wednesday's tornado. Many of the planes, including ones which had survived World War II and were irreplaceable, were reduced to scrap metal.

"It makes me sick," museum President George Clyde said yesterday as he surveyed the wreckage of the 30-plane outdoor exhibit. "I haven't seen anything this bad since World War II."

Clyde, who served as a bomber pilot over Europe during World War II, said 16 of the planes kept outdoors, including one weighing more than 100 tons, were destroyed.

Thirteen more aircraft will need extensive repair, according to museum curator Phil O'Keefe. But he said another 30 planes displayed in an indoor hangar nearby escaped serious damage, as did about 60 more aircraft the museum has in storage at the airport.

Adrienne Rich discusses works

A "meet-the-author" party featuring feminist author Adrienne Rich was held yesterday at Womonfyre bookstore in Northampton.

More than 150 visitors, mostly women, crowded into the small store and exchanged informal conversation with the author, had books autographed, and enjoyed wine and cheese refeshments.

Adrienne Rich is thought by some to be the most important and controversial feminist writer alive today, having published over ten books of poetry and prose on subjects ranging from politics to psychology—but all pertaining to the myths on which the patriarchal civilization is based and its effects on not only women but the rest of humanity, especially children. In her forward to Poems, Selected and New, 1950-1974, she writes:

As I type these words we are confronted with the naked and unabashed failure of patriarchal civilization. To be a woman, at this time is to know extraordinary forms of anger, joy, patience, love and hope. Poetry, words on paper, are necessary but not enough; we need to touch the living who share our animal passion for existence, our determination that the sexual myths underlying the human conditions can and shall be recognized and changed.

Among Adrienne Rich's books are Of Woman Born, "an exploration of the myth and the reality of motherhood," A Dream of A Common Language, several other books of poetry, and her latest book of essays, On Lies, Secrets, and Silence.

Adrienne Rich is a newcomer to the Pioneer Valley, having recently moved to Montague.

Clinic informs students

Birth control info offered

By SHERI SIMONTON
Collegian Staff

The contraception clinic at the University Health Center offers a thorough, in-depth program designed to help students learn more about birth control and aid them in making responsible, knowledgable decisions according to Health Educator Ann Grose.

Those who want to know more about birth control or to purchase contraceptives through the Health Services are first required to attend an hour and a half-long preliminary information session.

The contraceptive program consists of three parts. The first, a slide and tape presentation, gives detailed general information about all the methods of birth control currently available. It also includes the possible side affects, levels of effectiveness when used properly, and positive and negative aspects of their use.

After the slide presentation, a staff member shows and discusses each method, its price, and appointment procedures at the Health Center. A question and answer period is included in the discussion.

The final segment consists of a film concerning breast and pelvic examinations. Leaflets with specific information about each method and the Health Center programs are also available at the sessions.

Grose emphasized that the program is completely confidential. The Health Center records aren't shown to outsiders unless the student signs a release, she said. She stressed the program tries to be as objective and up to date as possible.

Grose also said the staff tries to be as nonjudgmental and avoids biasing people toward any one method.

She said both men and women are welcome at all the sessions. She said it is important for couples to communicate with each other and to examine the role of contraception in a relationship.

The informal sessions are offered four times a week: Monday and Thursday at 3 p.m., and Tuesday and Wednesday at 7 p.m. in room 302 on the third floor of the Health Center. The Wednesday evening program is for couples. No appointment is necessary, according to Health Educator Ann Grose.

As if Organic Chemistry 261 wouldn't be hard enough already, these students are forced to stand through class because of overcrowding problems.

Area governments make semester plans

By ANDREA ATKIN
Collegian Staff

Central Area Government and Orchard Hill Area Government held budget meetings this week, while Sylvan Area Government and the Southwest Assembly met to discuss semester happenings. Because of the holiday on Monday, Northeast Area Government did not meet, according to President Christopher Decker.

OHAG treasurer Dan Trainer, said 1979-1980 will be "a bad year" for the area government. Trainer, who conducted the second OHAG budget meeting, said the area "took a cut of about $1100. It's a really tight year."

Trainer said the budget was finalized at Sunday night's meeting and funds were allocated for the Orchard Hill Men's Center, Women's Center, Third World Center, Photography Room and Ceramics Room.

Funds were also set aside for a new academic counseling center which OHAG hopes to set up this semester, according to Trainer.

Paul Washburn, president of the Central Area Government said Monday's meeting was spent allocating the year's $15,000 budget.

According to Washburn, money was set aside for a Spring Concert on the hill, coffee houses, the Area Craft Shop and the area centers.

The council voted to allocate money for the purchase of new hoops and baskets for the basketball court on the top of the hill. A motion to allocate $425 to the Central Arts Council was tabled until next week, said Washburn.

The Southwest Assembly met Tuesday night, according to co-president Scott Shuster. "We are in the process of forming a committee for programming in Hamden Dining Commons," Shuster said. Hamden Commons has a small theater and other facilities for student use. Shuster said the committee would be responsible for planning movies or parties in the Commons. "We're not restricting them," he said.

Shuster said the Assembly also has planned an area Halloween party for October 26 which will feature a live band, "Martian Highway."

Opera singer presents concert at UM Bezanson Recital Hall

Reknowned opera singer Elaine Bonazzi will perform Oct. 9, at 8 p.m., in Bezanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center.

Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, the concert is free to UMass students, $2 for the general public and $1 for non-UMass students. Tickets are available at the box office.

Star of the New York City Opera, the Santa Fe Opera, the Opera Society of Washington, the Cincinnati Opera and the Metropolital Opera, Bonazzi also has performed as a soloist with major U.S. orchestras including the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland, Philadelphia and Minnesota Orchestras, and the Cincinnati, Detroit and Baltimore Symphonies. She also sang abroad at the Belgrade Festival and the West Berlin Festival.

"Professor" to give free concert of famous ragtime artists' music

Known as the "Professor," solo ragtime pianist Burt Brinker will play Joplin ragtime, Dixieland jazz and the music of Jelly Roll Morton, Louis Armstrong, Scott Joplin, and Fats Waller at a free concert Oct. 7 pm in the Buckley Music Building at Amherst College.

This will be the "Professor's" third concert at Amherst. He has also played at Smith College.

Lunch spot, lounge, or library? The Hatch becomes study space

Pope rejects female priests; women's group asks change

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press

An official of an international Roman Catholic women's group pleaded Thursday for a papal audience, saying she believes Pope John Paul II can be persuaded to withdraw his opposition to ordaining women as priests.

"Have we women been so long with you and you have not known us?" Rosalie MuschalReinhardt paraphrased Jesus in asking the pope to meet with officials of the Rochester-based Women's Ordination Conference.

Ms. Muschal-Reinhardt was moved to tears by the pope's statement Thursday in Philadelphia that restricting the priesthood to men is the way "God has chosen to shepherd his flock."

While Catholic feminists expressed anger and frustration when they learned of the pontiff's comments, many Catholic women said they agreed with the pope or that they could accept his views.

Sister Anna Mae Keeley, a Sister of Mercy who was present when the pontiff spoke, was not distressed:

"I would like the church to open its doors. I would not exclude myself if ordination were possible. But I'm not dissatisfied with what he said. There's a great deal we can do without being ordained."

The pope said the "church's traditional decision ... not to call women, is not a statement about human rights nor an exclusion of women from holiness and mission in the church." The priesthood is "given by the Lord to 'the men he himself had decided on' ... in accordance with the prophetic tradition," he said.

Ms. Muschal-Reinhart responded that the pope "has said this without talking with women scholars and theologians and without listening to the experiences of women who are being called to the priesthood."

"I am asking for a meeting with him," through the news media, she said.

What's funny money?

"More to the picture than meets the eye, Rock'n' Roll will never die..."

Editorial/Opinion

PR relative with N-PR

Jack Gallagher

No one had the bright idea of asking him what we were supposed to do about it, and it was after all kind of cold that afternoon, so no one really wanted to get into the really esoteric question.

The News Bureau Director said that afternoon—it was Tuesday—that Three Mile Island was a public relations disaster, that a prestigious firm which was paid a large sum of money didn't know what to do about it because they didn't know anything about it.

Art Clifford said the Harrisburg incident was a "confused Scenario" and that "the rumors exceeded the dangers."

So what he was really saying was: Because the people in charge of the plant didn't know what was happening and what would subsequently happen, either, the general public was left to extrapolate for itself.

Clifford said that the first thing the PR people called into the situation was that there was no danger. But as we all know there was danger—especially to pregnant women.

Clifford said that because the PR firm said there was no danger, that it and subsequently the whole incident, lost credibility. No one believed anything that was said about the meltdown.

Everyone thought of mutations, deformed babies and the like—because, presumably, they were uninformed.

But the deeper danger, which no one asked about in the lecture hall Tuesday, was whether nuclear power in general is dangerous and whether we, the public, really need a PR firm to tell us that nukes are safe.

After all that has happened—Watergate, every other kind of political scandal and the Red Sox—no one knows what to believe and further, who to believe, if anyone.

Clifford was saying: "I think it could have worked out a little better if the utilities had a PR man in (their) management...who could have structured some account to the people" who deserved to know—you and me.

But, again, the real problem is whether nukes are really good, (or at least that's what everyone thinks), whether misinformation is any excuse for unknown catastrophes.

The nuclear bomb doesn't, of course, do anything for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, trying to sell its product.

Clifford said that the NRC, at Harrisburg, made "poor on-the-spot decisions."

Brooks bathrooms are "slum-like"

To the Editor

There is a fine line between the comical and the absurd. What is absurd is the living conditions in Brooks Dorm; namely the bathrooms.

Being a resident of Brooks, I have had the opportunity to witness a situation so pathetic; that of absent sinks, overflowing toilets and basically worse than slum-like conditions.

There is supposed to be one working sink for every 8 students. The second floor bathroom has one working sink and two working toilets for 35 people.

This is not only ridiculous, but inconvenient and unnecessary. The second floor bathroom has been nicknamed "The Swamp," due to an average of one inch of water covering the floor. The residential rate for this dorm is $397.

To have to live in such horrid conditions is simply a "Royal Ripp-off." A request for work on the bathrooms was initiated on Feb. of last year.

The housing contract states that conditions will not be rectified with in a reasonable amount of time.

One year is not justifiably a reasonable amount of time. How long must we suffer in these poverty-like conditions before action will be taken? Brooks Dorm is now at an all time low subsistence level.

The structure itself is sinking into the mud. How many more requests or demands must be made before we are heard? We are angry and we will fight! We will not allow administrative red tape to force us down our own drains!

Sororities say they're 'abused'

To the Editor

This letter is in response to Margaret Flore's article on September 28th about the sorority raids. As a member of Alpha Chi Omega, I feel that Ms. Flore's article was not only inaccurate but misleading.

I feel that a responsible journalist should be certain that her facts are accurate before submitting an article. Obviously, Ms. Flore did not do so because our shattered glass was not a result of a fraternity raid. I feel that the article was an obvious attempt at sensationalism at the expense of the Greek Area.

From my own experience, I have witnessed more raiding in dorm life, yet I have never read an article about dorm raids.

In general, I feel that the Greek Area is abused, maligned, and totally misrepresented by many Collegian journalists. Whenever the slightest thing happens in the Greek system, it seems that there is always a journalist willing to capitalize upon it.

Believe it or not, many fraternities and sororities do things that are beneficial to the community. It is a shame that the only free publicity we get is harmful and degrading. These journalists are totally ignorant about Greek life and should investigate before putting their hand to their pen. I would like to commend Mark Curolon for his recent effort to portray the Greek Area in an unbiased manner.

I would also like to add that sorority life has proved to be a valuable learning experince as well as a memorable one.

Paper tents gone; chess is checkered

To the Editor

It seems of late that you're damned if you do and damned if you don't.

For the past 3 weeks we of the Chess Club have been attempting fund raising events through an Exhibition and Tournament since we are not funded by the Student Senate.

Well, it seems the more that we try, the less that is accomplished. In an effort to advertise for the King of Hearts movie this Thursday we shelled out $10 for paper tents plus the design and distribution time in the Dining commons only to have the tables cleared off and the tents thrown out.

The reason for this, according to Mr. Blanchard, manager of Franklin D.C., was due to the "commercialism" of the event. Now this is a prime and harmless form of advertising for movies, etc. which has been conducted for years, not for "commercial" purposes but as part of various University organizations' attempts to promote beneficial activities and become self-sufficient in their funding.

So, I ask you, Why should Mr. Blanchard suddenly object to and thwart a group's sincere effort to raise funds? Would he prefer apathy instead?

Survey shows no 'alma mater'

To the Editor

Having done a brief, informal survey of UMass students, I find that 9 out of 10 are unaware that we have an "alma mater"; and the tenth, having once heard it, wishes it didn't.

Sons of old Massachusetts, devoted sons and true." What a song for a coed state university! As if this were not enough, slipped into the refrain, completely out of rhythm, comes "Should auld acquaintance be forgot," complete with its original tune.

Should this song with its males-only lyrics and its patchwork tune continue to be our Alma Mater? With the talent on this campus, couldn't we come up with something better?

Seeing the Pope in Boston Monday was a thrilling event; one I shall never forget.

Therefore, I was highly insulted at the tasteless picture on the front page of the Collegian of some clown making a mockery of the Holy Father.

Booters face off against 3rd ranked Cats and the weather

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's soccer team will once again attempt the the test of the the weather and its own ability when it hosts defending Yankee Conference Champion Vermont tomorrow at 11:00 on Boyden Field.

What would have served as a good indicator of UMass' ability to beat a quality team at home was rained out when Wednesday's deluge forced the cancellation of the Harvard game after nearly 15 minutes of senseless soccer. The game will be rescheduled for a date in November.

Bad weather is again expected for tomorrow, but UMass coach Russ Kidd said he will ask the Catamounts to stay the night to play Sunday if rain makes it impossible to play tomorrow.

Vermont (4-0-3; third in the latest New England poll) and UMass (2-0-2; fifth in the latest poll) have had a semblence of a rivalry over the years. Last year at Burlington, the Catamounts scored with six minutes remaining in a tie game to win. In 1977, former UMass star Tasso Koutsoukos missed a penalty kick late in the game after UMass tied the contest after being two goals down. Vermont went on to win the game with two goals in overtime.

"They have always had a hex on us," Kidd said. In light of possible NCAA playoff hopes Kidd said, "If we're going to do anything, we have to win this one."

The Catamounts are sparked by senior All-American goalie Bart Farley. Among his other 1978 honors, Farley led the Catamounts to the NCAA regionals allowing 16 goals in 16 games to run his three year totals to 34 goals in 37 games. UMass goalie Mark Marilla has been just as consistent this season, allowing four goals in four games.

Vermont has won some important games this season; including an defeat of Connecticut and scrappy Boston University 1-0.

Catamount soccer is very big in Burlington, not only considering the talent of the team but because the football program was dropped at the university several years ago. Much of the money previously alotted to football is used to run the soccer program including the printing of programs and constant press releases, things that some other programs deserve.

BOOTER BANTER: The University of Rhode Island is at the top of the New England Soccer poll this week with a record of 5-0. Though there were few die-hard soccer fans on the field Wednesday, a group of 50 spectators gathered under the overhang of Tobin Hall.

JV gridders take on Milford

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity football team opens the regular season at home this afternoon at 2:00, squaring off against Milford Academy in an attempt to avenge last season's 7-6 defeat.

Led by Coach Clarence Brooks and his corps of graduate assistants, Sam Eddy, Steve Telander, and Jay Kelley, UMass will come out using two main offensive sets.

The first will be the option, an attack which has been introduced to the squad by offensive coordinator Eddy.

The second formation used by the Minutemen will be the power off-tackle, to inject some juice into the UMass running game.

On the field, the Minutemen will be captained by a pair of sophomores, Jerry Gordon and Dave Berlo. Offensively, southpaw Dean Pecevich will handle the quarterbacking duties, while the firepower in the backfield will be supplied by fullback Steve Savard, and tailbacks Al Tobin and Mark Picarillo.

Milford comes into tomorrow's game against UMass with an 0-4 record, losing to U Maryland 6-0, B.U. 26-6, U.R.I. 20-6, and Syracuse, 28-24.

The Connecticut post-graduate school will use a balance in both their passing and running games with a Pro Set I formation, to try to stifle the Minutemen defense.

At the helm for Milford will be Barrett McGrath from Hyde Park, while the backfield will consist of Mike Giaquinto, Vic Kronberg, and Dave Pellerin.

Milford will be without the services of Walpole running sensation Chris Warman, who is out with a badly bruised thigh suffered in the Syracuse game following an 84-yard rushing performance in the first two plus quarters.

Controversial end to IM tourney

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Controversy and new records marked the intramural track and field meet held earlier this week.

A conflict arose when the shot put was cancelled, the event Sugar and Spice feels would have moved them from second to first place. According to Fian Nooijen, the women's shot put was called off because an eight pound shot could not be found.

"We made an honest effort to find one," said Nooijen, "sometimes things like that happen." No action has yet been taken regarding the protest submitted by Sugar and Spice.

In the women's events, records were broken in nearly every event. Lori Taddeio smashed the softball throw record tossing for 206 feet and 1 inch. The record was 173 feet and two inches.

Nooijen helped the Pumas to their third consecutive victory with a 15 foot 3 1/4 inch long jump that measured more than two and a half feet more than the previous record.

Pike took first place in men's action with Beta Kappa Phi and Los Conquistadors coming in at close second and third. Pike took first place in the 440 relay setting a new record of 46.2 seconds. Pike's Bill Tharion completed the two mile run in 10 minutes and 16 seconds while team mate Rick Handschuck hurdled his way through 120 yards in 14.5 seconds. Steve Hyder broke the men's shot put record of 40 feet and 10 inches, tossing for 44 feet and 8 inches.

Women harriers in tournament

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The women's cross-country team will run against some of the top schools in the East this Saturday at the Rutgers Invitational in New Brunswick, New Jersey. 'It will be a good test of where we stand," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said.

Two of the best teams, Harvard and Penn State, will not be competing at the meet. Harvard beat UMass 20-37 on September 25 this season. The favorite at the meet should be Maryland, ranked second behind Penn State in the East.

"Our top runner will be sophmore Judy McCrone. After that, our depth will come through. We've had some good races and our confidence is up," Pfitzinger said.

The top nine runners on the team will compete in the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) race. Junior co-captain Linda Welzel, recovering from a strained ankle, is expected to run.

Lead A.L. playoff series 2-0

Orioles outlast Angels, 9-8

California manager Jim Fregosi reacts the only way he knows how as his Angels lost a close one to the Orioles, 9-8. (AP Laserphoto)

By GORDON BEARD
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Eddie Murray drove in four runs with a single and a homer as the Baltimore Orioles scored eight runs in the first two innings and survived a late rally to edge the California Angels 9-8 yesterday.

After trailing 9-1 in the second game of the best-of-five series, the Angels scored seven runs in the last four innings and had the bases loaded in the ninth before reliever Don Stanhouse retired Brian Downing on a force play for the final out.

The victory, behind the ninehit pitching of Mike Flanagan and Stanhouse, gave the Orioles a 2-0 lead in the best-of-five American League championship series which continues on the West Coast Friday night.

Flanagan, whose 23 victories topped the major leagues during the regular season, retired 15 consecutive batters after Dan Ford rapped his second first-inning homer in two days.

By the time California's Rod Carew doubled with two out in the sixth and scored on a single by Carney Lansford, Baltimore's Eastern Division champions had moved to the brink of qualifying for their fifth World Series in 14 years.

California added a run in the seventh on singles by Don Baylor and Downing plus a sacrifice fly by Bobby Grich, then knocked out Flanagan in the eighth by scoring on a walk to pinch-hitter Merv Rettenmund, an error by first baseman Murray and Lansford's second RBI single.

Baltimore's Al Bumbry is ruled safe at second by umpire Don Denkinger during yesterday's Oriole win. (AP Laserphoto).

Touch football—wreckreation

Uh Oh! It's that time of year again. The leaves start to turn funny colors, the networks start to cancel the lemons, midterms begin to raise their ugly heads and the World Series comes along to dominate the American scene for two weeks.

At the same time, a wonderful disease known as touch football spreads through the campus like a plague, sparing no one.

Everywhere you look, from Brown to Baker to Brittany Manor, folks are diving in the mud after TD passes, running head on into cleverly disguised phone poles while running post patterns, and smacking into each other at high rates of speed, breaking fingers and toes left and right. All this in the persuit of recreation.

Everyday, the ritual begins as it did the day before. You stagger home from your lobotomy class, change into your sweats, pick up your official Pete Rozell autographed NFL football and march down the hallway until you have recruited enough suicidal maniacs to get a game together.

No matter how many people you get together, be it four on four or 20 on 20 or what level of play you partake in (one-hand touch to armagedden) it never fails that the same type of people show up at every game. For example:

THE KICKER: Here we have the bozo who really and truly believes he is Thunder Foot Weaver. In the argument over who will kickoff this guy always wins. Inevitably, this clown will lineup, take his perfect three-step approach, and shank the ball into the street, hitting the Sgt. X. car that happens to be driving by.

THE QUARTERBACK: Here we have team leader, the playmaker, the field General. Usually, the QB is the guy with the slingshot arm. He can throw it from here to Belchertown and he usually does. This is the brain drain who gets down on one knee and diagrams plays on his palm so confusing even he doesn't know what's going on. He never sees you when you are wide open and he always tries to hit you when there are nine guys hanging on you.

THE WIDE RECEIVER: Here is the man with the blazing speed, the suitcase hands and the fantastic moves. The problem is he's too busy looking to see if the camera's on him to catch the ball. Receivers envision themselves as graceful gazelles, always thinking Frank Gifford is up in the pine tree commentating on his every move. This might be the reason that the receiver dives on every play, even when the ball is not thrown to him.

THE LINEMEN: Here we find the moose-like creatures who inhabit only that territory within five yards of the ball. Linemen are the guys who pass block on offense and rush the QB on defense. They spend half their lives trying to convince people they really did count to three Mississippi, and spend the other half convincing the other guys that they didn't count.

THE NOBODY: Here lies Homer Geekma, the nurd, who tells everyone that he has never before played football. Everyone believes him because he throws the ball like a shotput, runs into a willow tree every time he tries to catch a pass, runs away from the people he is supposed to block and plays defense like his grandmother. And yet, it never fails that Homer is the one who is all alone in the endzone to catch the winning touchdown pass.

Just as the same types of players show up in each and every pick-up game, so too do the same types of plays: "The Packer Sweep" that ends up with everyone blocking one way and the poor, misguided running back going the other. "The Double Reverse Flea Flicker" which usually winds up with the QB pitching the ball to the onrushing defensive lineman. "The Kickoff Return" where blockers, totally confused as to what a wedge is, forget to block and the return man is captured for a safety. "The Bomb" Harold Fleetfoot is zooting down the sidelines all by his lonesome, and the QB gets all excited and throws the ball into the next town trying to lead him.

Most games usually follow the same pattern with regards to length. The contest starts out as "the first team to get five TDs wins." Gradually, this is upped to seven, then to ten and on to 12. Finally, both teams get bored, tired, hungry or eaten by bugs, and the cries of "next touchdown wins" can be heard from all corners of the field.

After the game the plays are rehashed, the what-ifs are gone through, and the goats are given a good work over. All is forgotten the next day however, when the ritual starts all over again.

Gridders play host to NCC Eagles

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

Still relishing the effects of their 20-7 thrashing of Harvard last Saturday, the Minutemen go after consecutive win number three this weekend at Alumni Stadium against the North Carolina Central University Eagles, coached by first year man Henry Lattimore.

It is the first meeting ever between the two teams. NCCU comes into the game with an 0-4 record, having lost to V.A. Union, Winston Academy, Elon, and Morgan State (which UMass defeated 38-6 last year at Alumni).

The North Carolina Central offensive attack is led by quarterback Charles Yuille, who has thrown three more interceptions (6) than he has touchdown passes. The Eagles' ground attack, which has yet to score a touchdown via the run, is headed by junior halfback Andre Cooper (58 attempts, 179 yards). Leading NCCU in receiving is Carl Sanders (7 catches, 197 yards, 2 TD's).

Catch all the action of Minutemen football this Saturday at 1:00 on WMUA, 91.1 FM, when UMass hosts North Carolina Central. Howie Sobokov and Jim Mullins describe the action. And don't miss the halftime show with Fred Winer.

Last week against Harvard, head coach Bob Pickett's troop took to the air with quarterback Mike EcEvilly completing 12 of 18 pass attempts for 251 yards and two touchdowns, both caught by wide receiver Kevin O'Connor. On the day O'Connor caught six pases for 159 yards.

For the season, O'Connor has collected 14 receptions for 243 yards and teammate tight end Marty Paglione has netted 12 catches for 167 yards. In the rushing department, halfback Cliff Pedrow leads the team with 130 yards on 41 carries.

For his efforts against Harvard, Minutemen defensive tackle Dan Petrie was named Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week.

Throwing in a bit of trivia, walking the NCCU sidelines Saturday will be former Patriot Johnny Outlaw, now defensive backfield coach for the Eagles.

Game time is at 1:30.

Takes up practically no room. Fills up practically any room.

The slimness begins with the price! Under $50* for a portable cassette tape recorder of this quality is simply unheard of. Especially when you hear the sound from this Panasonic SlimLine (RQ-2745). The sound comes booming out of a newly designed speaker that's just over an inch thin. A newly slenderized motor also helps to keep the SlimLine slim. And it's lightweight, too. So you can take it along. Anywhere.

Inside this remarkably thin tape recorder, there are some big, fat features. Such as One-Touch Recording. The "record" button has been built into the "play" button for simple one-finger operation. When you're ready to play back, simply press the "play" part of the button.

The SlimLine has Cue and Review controls that make it easy to find the spot you're looking for on your tape. There's a sensitive built-in condenser microphone. And an Auto-Stop mechanism that shuts the unit off completely when the tape ends. There's a digital tape counter as well as an edit function that lets you correct recording mistakes easily.

So many features, in so slim a package, at so slim a price. So what else would you expect from Panasonic?

OUR COVER

Jimmy Buffett seems particularly fond of boats and water, so photographer Tom Corcoran managed to get all three in the frame.

IN ONE EAR &

I have just recently seen a copy of your magazine and I love it! It is truly a very informative magazine geared towards young people and what we like to know. What I would like to know, though, is how I can be assured of receiving it regularly. (I had seen this first copy laying around the commons on campus here.) Also, how often is it put out and where around here can I pick it up?

We're so glad you asked. You may subscribe to Ampersand for a mere $5.00 per year (that's nine issues; we publish monthly during the school year). Just send check or money order plus your name and address to Ampersand Subscriptions, 1680 N. Vine Street #201, Hollywood, CA 90028.

My favorite group now is the Futants. I think their name means Future Mutants, but it might mean Futile Infants. The lead singer has blond hair. They played at CBGB's when Robert Fripp was there, but you had to walk by all these bums on Bowery Street and I saw one that was laying on the sidewalk and another one was stepping on him, but barefoot. I thought they were Rolfing.

EMMA BOGACHEVSKY

Last year there was an article in Ampersand asking for contributions describing the best colleges for parties. Are you planning to print these letters? I know everyone at the University of Utah would enjoy reading how other campuses get off at their parties.

The University of Utah is considered to be the best kept secret in the country. You see, most people think that everyone in Utah is real straight. Well...the secret is that Utah has about the best parties around!

J. PARKS
UNIVERSITY OF UTAH
(one of the "highest" campuses in the world)

We did indeed solicit contributions from campuses, and we received a few...none of which will be reprinted because they were swill, the product of brain-damaged boogies, the flotsam of collegiate jetsam. But we will publish Party Down anyway; it's the supplement-within-a-supplement accompanying the November issue.

Ten Rolling Beatle Years After the Traffic Dept., Blind Faith Div.

BASSIST BILL WYMAN, first of the Rolling Stones to record solo (1974's Monkey Grip), will — according to a usually-reliable rumor trader — be the focus of a new band. On drums, Ringo Starr. On lead guitar, Alvin Lee, once of Ten Years After. On everything else possible, the multi-talented Stevie Winwood (Spencer Davis Group, Traffic, Blind Faith). First gig: opening the Olympics in Moscow next May. Afterwards comes a U.S. tour and live-from-Moscow album. No name has been selected and no label deal secured, though "five or six offers have been made," says the rumor source, who added the qualifier, "It's still in preliminary stages, but they have agreed to play together."

Does This Mean We Won't Have to Sit through Any More Damned Killer Bee Skits?

HARRY SHEARER, ONCE A MEMBER of the Credibility Gap, a writer/actor and radio announcer and an all-round neat guy, is the New Man on Saturday Night Live. He'll more than fill the holes left by Belushi and/or Aykroyd, as a writer/performer, and not a moment too soon. Good luck in the snake pit, Harry.

What the Big Stars Are Doing

WHEN BURT REYNOLDS ARRIVED in London a few weeks ago to begin filming Rough Cut (plot similar to To Catch a Thief) with Jacqueline Bisset, he found the picture's director, Don Siegel (Escape from Alcatraz, the original Invasion of the Body Snatchers) had been fired by the producer David Merrick, for saying unkind things about the script in an interview. Reynolds did some fancy negotiating, and Siegel was reinstated; the script is being reworked by Anthony Shaffer (who wrote Sleuth).

WOODY ALLEN'S NEXT FILM, untitled and muffled in tight security as always, stars Charlotte Rampling, Marie-Christine Barrault and Jessica Harper; Gordon Willis, who shot Manhattan for Allen, is again cinematographer, and this film will also be in black and white. There is reportedly a period piece inserted within the modern movie, and we've heard hints that the script deals, sort of, with personality transference. Not unlike Bergman's Persona, maybe? Which would seem to indicate a movie more like Interiors than Annie Hall.

STEVE MCQUEEN IS LIVING in an airplane hangar near Santa Paula, California, with several old planes and motorcycles sharing his space. He's out of Taipan (after collection of about $3 million from his pay-or-play deal, for doing absolutely nothing), but will, we hear, actually work again, starring in The Hunter, a modern detective yarn, to be shot in Chicago.

DIANE KEATON will reportedly star in A New Wife with her old flame (and Godfathers co-star) Al Pacino, which probably won't thrill Warren Beatty, who is still working with Keaton on the oft-retitled John Reed biopic, based on Reed's book, Ten Days That Shook the World.

FLEETWOOD MAC, about to release a two-disc opus called Tusk, got their own Hollywood Boulevard sunk-in-the-sidewalk star on October 10th. That means the star's a Libra, but almost on the cusp of Scorpio. Rumours, the last multi-platinum effort from the Anglo-California outfit, came out February of 1977 and didn't list for $15.98. But Tusk will. Gossip has it the group spent around $1 million on the new product.

German Family Takes Clive's Baby

ARISTA, THE YOUNG COLUMBIA PICTURES subsidiary run by Clive Davis, home to such diverse acts as Barry Manilow, Graham Parker, Ray Parker (no relation), Dionne Warwick, the Kinks, Patti Smith, Lou Reed, Jennifer Warnes and GQ, has been sold to German's Ariola Eurodisc for $50 million (thereby inspiring some rumors that Arista would be absorbed into Ariola America, with its president, Jay Lasker, being removed and Clive running the whole schmear from New York; "Not true," denied Lasker). On paper, Arista is deep in debt to Columbia, so only $7 million from the transaction will be counted as profit for the stock-holders.

OUT THE OTHER..

Davis will remain as head of Arista with the new owners. Once near the pinnacle at Columbia Records, Davis fell from grace with that label because of business practices disputes, but his acknowledged brilliance won Davis a second chance. Much of Arista's success has come with fully developed artists who had escaped stagnant situations with their previous labels — Graham Parker, Lou Reed, Dionne Warwick and the Kinks being standout examples. Arista now has a respectable twelve albums in Billboard's Top 200 and Davis predicts the label will continue to grow.

Smith Draws Intellectual Crowd

READING POETRY AT THE FOX VENICE THEATER on the eve of her recent L.A. concert, Patti Smith drew an audience the likes of which even her mystic sense couldn't have foreseen. Smith wanted to read from The Ticket That Exploded and asked if anyone present had a copy. "Oh, wow," a woman in the twelfth row exclaimed. "I've got it at home. Can you wait while I get it?" Moments later her date put forth this observation: "The reason we're full of shit is because we're only here right now!" Later, a panel of gag writers agreed they couldn't create such pure nonsense at any price.

Yeah, But Who Plays The Blonde?

MOVIOLA, AN 8-HOUR MINISERIES for NBC based on the not-yet-published book by Garson Kanin, will present some factual reminiscences of real-life Hollywood giants. No one has been cast as Garbo, Marilyn Monroe, or David Selznick, but the inside Garbo track is reportedly crowded with Dominque Sanda, Isabelle Adjani and Marthe Keller, not one of whom is Swedish.

Strange Bedfellows Dept.

BARRY MANILOW AND IAN HUNTER. Strange enough combination for you? "Ships," taken from the ex-Mott the Hoople limey rocker's recent hit LP, You're Never Alone with a Schizophrenic, will be woven into the sweeping romantic schlock of Barry Manilow's next release, One Voice. It may even be the first single released. Hunter might find it hard to face his friends afterward, but at least he'll be able to afford darker sunglasses.

#1 with a Bullet

MORBID PEOPLE MAY RECALL the January, 1978 case of Brenda Spencer, a San Diego miss accused of wasting two people and wounding eight children with rifleshots at a local elementary school because she was in a stormy Monday mood. The flamboyant Boomtown Rats wove Spencer's quote — "I don't like Mondays" — into a song of the same name. Now, with the song Number One in England and being considered for the Rats' next U.S. album, attorneys for Spencer want it stopped. "It adds fire to a very volatile situation," says attorney Michael D. McGlinn. "It makes fun of a tragic case."

Bob Geldof, ex-rock critic mastermind of the Boomtown Rats, claims the song "does not exploit" the Spencer incident, but rather attempts "to understand why it happened." Actually, it neither adds fire, makes fun nor attempts to understand. It tells Spencer's story in a most oblique fashion, not mentioning names or gunfire, framed by choruses of "Tell my why/I don't like Mondays."

Still Working

ROBERT STIGWOOD, the Australian music/movie mogul, will produce four films in New York over the next 18 months, with a total budget of $25 million. Stiggie will oversee the productions from his yacht Sarina, anchored in New York harbor (such a rough life). The films: Times Square, a "youth-oriented contemporary drama with a heavy emphasis on music"; The Fan, starring Lauren Bacall, based on the best-selling Broadway thriller; Angel, about a girl in Spanish Harlem, to be directed and choreographed by Patricia Brich, who designed the dance steps in Grease; and Stayin' Alive, a familiar phrase from a Norman Wexler screenplay (he wrote Saturday Night Fever; get the connection?). Oh yes, RSO will release four soundtrack albums, no surprise.

PAUL MICHAEL GLASER, Starsky of TV fame, finally found a movie he wants to make, called Phobia, to film in Canada, directed by John Huston, with a screenplay by Ronald Shusett, who co-wrote Alien. Yes, it's supposed to be scary.

MARIEL HEMINGWAY is currently working out with a UCLA track coach to prepare for her upcoming role of Olympic track star in Personal Best, with script by Robert Towne (Shampoo, Chinatown).

HARRY REEMS, the porno actor who was arrested and tried (later acquitted) in Memphis for his performance in Deep Throat a few years back, has finally landed a fully-clothed role in a non-porno flick. In The Squad, to be filmed in Montreal, Reems' character, Mr. Clean — leader of a police vice squad — will be a parody of the Memphis district attorney who busted Reems. Stay out of Tennessee, Harry.

BRIAN DE PALMA, who last perpetrated The Fury, will next direct Dressed to Kill, yet another thriller/murder mystery.

JAMES GARNER has already signed up for another NBC series when his Rockford Files runs its gamut. If this season is Rockford's last, Garner will take a year off and return with an as-yet-unannounced series. Meanwhile, Garner has separated from wife Lois and taken up with Lauren Bacall; they co-starred in Robert Altman's Health.

Random Newts

THE CARS HAVE A STRANGE cleanup campaign: Any girl who wants to get backstage and next to a Car must first take a shower with the group. Does any of this have a purpose? "Just to see if the girls will go for it," said a bemused Elektra spokesman. Perhaps the Cars think VD can be washed away.

NICARAGUA will be a film based on the four-year diary of a Nicaraguan journalist, set against the background of the recent revolution. And who better to star in a film about Nicaragua than an actual Nicaraguan, Bianca Jagger?

WARREN ZEVON, reportedly still on the wagon, recently came in second place for the "Best Poet" Balrog Award at the World Fantasy Convention. Veteran tale-spinner Ray Bradbury nosed Zevon out. Balrogs, Tolkein fans will remember, are a form of Lord of the Rings creepy-crawly.

SKATES ON THE SKIDS?? Seen passed out, mid-day, on a bus bench at Hollywood and Vine: a bum, thirty-ish, in a dirty t-shirt, a stabbed heart tattoo — and roller skates!

Re-associated

THE ASSOCIATION is re-forming with all its original members (except the late Brian Cole): Terry Kirkman, Russ Giguere, Jules Alexander, Jim Yester, Ted Bluechel, Larry Ramos. One of the Sixties' most successful groups (Cherish, Along Comes Mary) and one of the most effective vocal groups of any decade, the Association's original members have been pursuing solo careers for several years while an ersatz group calling itself the Association still tours the country. According to Jim Yester, "Ted Bluechel was the last to leave; he leased the name to that other outfit. We'll get him for that." Yester said they decided to regroup last Christmas when they reunited for a Home Box Office Artists of the Sixties show. "It sounded so good, we all decided to give it a shot." They're rehearsing now, with several labels anxious to hear the results. As for that other Association: "We'll have to work that out; we may have to end up calling ourselves the Original Association or something like that."

the tall blond one

BY TERRY ATKINSON

We know that face, that ever-so-elegant voice. It's a Monty Python, the one who plays all the doctors and soldiers and London bobbies with Welsh accents. King Arthur in Monty Python and the Holy Grail. He's the (relative) straight man in a loony bin, the foil, he's the tall blond one, Graham Chapman.

Chapman has been a Python since 1969 when Monty Python's Flying Circus first beamed over the BBC at 11:30 Sunday nights because, as one Python has noted, "the BBC thought no one would be watching." This series came to U.S. TV stations four years ago, at about the same time their first film, And Now for Something Completely Different was released and seen by very rabid — but very few — fans. Monty Python and the Holy Grail followed soon after and did very well, earning $10 million so far ($5 million in the U.S. alone); hundreds of thousands laughed at the knight getting his arms and legs cut off, and the big wooden rabbit, and other nonsense. In this time the group released five record albums: Monty Python's Flying Circus on BBC; Another Monty Python Record, Monty Python's Matching Tie & Handkerchief, Monty Python's Previous Record, and Live at Drury Lane, all on Charisma. But yet very few people could recognize the tall blond Python if he were seen, for instance, shopping at the local supermarket without his King Arthur beard.

"I'm by nature a little lazy," Chapman says, sipping a Tab in his rented Hollywood Hills home. He speaks softly, with that British upperclass accent; very polite. "Provided I've got enough to do, I'm not pushy for parts," so he is usually assigned the less flamboyant roles in Python films and TV sketches. John Cleese, the Tower of Fume," is "more grotesque; certainly more recognizable with that chin." These two tallest Pythons are frequent writing partners, and in fact are responsible for the story line of Life of Brian, the group's latest film, as well as some of the most revered, hysterical, monumentally mad moments in Python TV history: the Dead Parrot, the Cheese Shop and the Argument Clinic, among others. Although they all write together in the sense that they all contribute whatever and whenever they're so inclined Chapman-Cleese are most often partners while Terry Jones and Michael Palin frequently write together, and Eric Idle usually writes alone; Terry Gilliam, the graphic artist, also writes — and co-directed, with Jones, Holy Grail.

We'd never know any of this if they didn't occasionally break down and confess, as there are no clues to their individual contributions listed in their television series or albums. Their films list them in their various guises, but as these are usually *dis*guises, it's still difficult to tell one from the other.

There are still some devoted Python fans who can't tell Jones from Palin: Jones is short with dark hair and likes to remove his clotthes; Palin has lighter hair, is also short and is usually but not always clothed; Palin has hosted Saturday Night Live and starred in the best-forgotten Jabberwocky. Idle (who also hosted a Saturday Night Live) has a long face and a very distinctive, one might even say grating, voice. Idle was the creative force behind another TV show, The Rutles, a near-perfect satire on the rise of the Beatles; it bombed in the ratings.

Perhaps all this fragmentation and individual endeavors will at last bring the Pythons separate identities. For Chapman, it might bring even more — an acting career, for instance. His portrayal of Brian transcends the silliness; "It was an interesting part, not getting beards glued on or having to wear terrible wigs," Chapman says with somewhat typical modesty. Chapman has just finished a film project of his own, The Odd Job, in which he stars and which he wrote and co-produced with friend Bernard McKenna (who appears in Life of Brian; all very incestuous). Since The Odd Job (about a man who hires another man to kill him, then changes his mind, a not unfamiliar plot), Chapman and McKenna have been writing yet another film, a pirate movie called Yellow Beard, and Chapman has started work on a book called A Liar's Autobiography, which he describes as fiction and non-fiction. "It's going to be very hard to sort out the lies from the truth, as it is in real life. It's Volume 6, for a start. You're not going to know whether there's a Volume 1 or not. I'm not telling anybody."

But for these next several weeks Life of Brian will take some of Chapman's attention, what with the group's and film's mainstream coverage in Playboy, Rolling Stone, et al. Holy Grail may have started life with a cult following, but Brian is already the Big Time.

Which is weird, considering it's an irreverent swipe at religion, that most sacred of cows, and other ancient travesties. Life of Brian is set in Judea at the time of Christ; Brian is a young man who, despite his protests, is declared the Messiah by his desperately hopeful followers, and his life parallels that of Jesus in several ways. Satire, of course, runs rampant. So do absurd and unexpected twists, set against a realistic background that avoids anachronisms. There are lepers who don't want to be cured because it ruins their business (begging and groveling), Roman soldiers who speak like London bobbies, crowds that shout in unison like throngs in a Cecil B. DeMille spectacular.

Ah, blasphemy, you say — and so did the film's initial backer, EMI, which pulled out and left the film flat until it was rescued by George Harrison, a long-time Python admirer. Harrison became co-executive-producer, found the funding (it cost $4 million) and even appears in the film as Mr. Papadopoulis (he has one line).

When Life of Brian opened in Los Angeles a few weeks ago, local newspaper letter columns were filled with sputtering, raging messages from offended Jews and Christians alike.

Chapman contends that Life of Brian is not offensive to Christians. "Even though we are agnostics, I think Jesus comes out of it very well. It's not at all blasphemous; in fact, it's quite moral. Warner/Orion (distributors of Brian in the U.S.) has not asked for a single cut."

But Brian started out as a slightly more scandalous idea. "After we'd done some publicity work for Grail, we all went to eat at a Chinese restaurant in London. It was the first time the group had been together for some time, and we were saying, 'What next?' Somebody said, 'Why don't we go for the big one?' Then Eric suggested, 'Why don't we call it Jesus Christ – Lust for Glory,' as a kind of joke. Then we all began to think, well, wait a moment, there might be something in that — the area of religion, the origins of religion, maybe."

And it came to pass the the six Pythons and a large cast and crew assembled in Tunisia (coincidentally the location for some of Star Wars, which may or may not have inspired a bizarre live action/animation outer-space interlude in the middle of Brian). "We were

can you be bribed?

You get $35.21 in bribes when you try 10 DAK ML90 high energy cassettes risk free for only $2.19 each. Your bribe is bigger than your purchase!

FREE CATALOGUE "HOW TO RECORD" BOOKLET

Hats off to Maxell. Their UDXL cassette established a new standard of sound quality for all cassettes.

The new DAK ML90 starts another new technology. A technology of protection from Hi frequency loss and of extreme reliability.

Later we are going to offer you valuable bribes, just for testing these cassettes, risk free; so read on!

YOUR TIME IS PRECIOUS

Imagine yourself just finishing recording the second side of a 90 minute cassette and horrors, the cassette jams. Tape is wound around the capstan, your recorder may be damaged and you've just wasted 90 minutes of your time and perhaps lost a great recording off FM.

Enter DAK. We manufacture over one million units of cassette tape each month in our factory. Many of our tapes are used for high speed duplication where they are recorded at speeds up to 8 times normal. This is the ultimate stress for cassettes and causes more failures than any other use.

When we first started, 12 years ago, DAK's cassettes failed, just like many others. So we installed over $20,000 worth of high speed duplication equipment at our factory and set out to design the perfect cassette.

MOLYSULFIDE

Failure after failure. For six years we substituted, remade, tested and retested until we positively linked the major cause of cassette failure to the slip sheets, or liners in the cassette. Evidently, 3M and TDK were hot on our heels, because they have now also come out with new liners.

We developed polyester slip sheets with raised spring loaded ridges to guide each layer of tape as it winds. We coat the liners with a unique formulation of graphite and a new chemical, molysulfide.

Molysulfide reduces friction several times better than graphite and allows the tape to move more freely within the cassette. The molysulfide is tougher and makes the liner much more resistant to wear.

Hi frequency protection! Tape is basically plastic, and as it moves within the cassette internal friction causes the build up of static electricity, much as rubbing a balloon against your hair, or scuffing your shoes on a carpet in dry weather.

Static electricity within the cassette was drastically reduced by the low friction of the molysulfide and easily bled off, so that its tendency to erase very high frequencies was drastically reduced. A very important consideration for often played tapes.

MAXELL IS BETTER

Yes, honestly, if you own a $1000 cassette deck like a Nakamici, the frequency responses of Maxell UDXL or TDK SA are superior to DAK and you just might be able to hear the difference.

DAK ML has a frequency response that is flat from 40cps to 14,500 ±3db. Virtually all cassette recorders priced under $600 are flat ±3db from 40cps to about 12,000cps, so we have over 2000cps to spare, and you'll probably never notice the difference.

No apology. We feel that we have equaled or exceeded the mechanical reliability of virtually all cassettes and offer one of the best frequency responses in the industry. Maxell UDXL is truly the Rolls Royce of the industry, and DAK is comparable to the 100% US made Cadillac or Corvette!

Price DAK manufactures the tape we sell. You avoid paying the wholesaler and retailer profits. While Maxell UDXL 90s may sell for $3.50 to $4.50 each at retail, DAK ML90s sell factory direct to you for only $2.19 each complete with deluxe boxes and index insert cards.

YOU WIN

You are paying less for the 10, 90 minute cassettes than you would pay for the comparable bribes we are offering if you went to a Radio Shack store.

CHECK THE VALUE OF THE DAK BRIBES AT RADIO SHACK

The next time your batteries are dead in a calculator, radio, flashlight or battery operated recorder, you'll be glad you have this versatile battery eliminator AC adaptor.

You'll save lots of money on batteries because now you can plug in, instead of using up expensive batteries. 4 voltages: 3, 4.5, 6 and 9 volts plus 4 plugs to fit virtually anything battery powered. Radio Shack sells a similar 4 voltage adaptor for $9.95.

Think of it, 10 of the most commonly used six foot hook up cords with RCA plugs at each end. You can connect friends recorders, extra tuners, or virtually any stereo equipment. You'll certainly appreciate these cords in the years to come. Radio Shack sells their six foot cords for $1.89 each.

You need clean tape heads to make good recordings. The easiest way to clean your heads is with DAK's 12 oz. deluxe spray head cleaner, complete with handy snorkel tube. Radio Shack doesn't sell a single large 12 oz. can, but 12 oz. from them costs $6.36.

The comparable Radio Shack prices are not list prices, but the actual prices you would pay at a store when this ad was written.

WE WIN TOO

Customers like you are very valuable in the form of future business. We anticipate receiving over 6000 orders and 4500 repeat customers from this advertisement to add to our list of over 57,000 "actives." We are betting you will buy our cassettes again, and we are putting our money where our mouth is!

TRY DAK ML90 FREE

We want you to try these high energy cassettes on your own recorder without obligation for 30 days. If you aren't 100% satisfied for any reason, simply return the tapes and bribes to DAK for a full refund.

To order your 10 DAK ML90 minute high energy cassettes and receive your $35.21 bribe with your credit card, simply call toll free 800, 423-2636, (in Calif. call 213-984-1559) or send your check for $21.90 plus $3 for postage and handling for each group of 10 cassettes and bribes to DAK. (Calif. residents add 6% sales tax).

DAK unconditionally guarantees all DAK cassettes for one year against any defects in material or workmanship.

Why not order an extra group of 10 DAK ML90 cassettes for yourself or a friend? We will add one free ML90 cassette to each additional 10 you buy and of course you get all 3 bribes with each group of 10 tapes.

HEAR IT LIKE THE PROS, AT AN UNHEARD-OF PRICE. JBL'S NEW RADIANCE SERIES.

JBL. By far the leader with the pros.

You'll find JBLs in America's top recording studios.

Now you can find them in a new price range for your home. The Radiance Series loudspeakers are the first JBLs at popular prices, starting at $139.95 suggested retail.

These new JBLs are designed to reproduce music with accuracy. They have clean highs and tight bass. Radiance speakers require an amplifier with only 10 watts per channel—highly efficient when compared to other speakers in their class. And yet they can handle large power—from 80 watts per channel to 200 watts per channel.

Radiance loudspeakers come in three models: a two-way system, a three-way system with a 10" woofer, and a three-way system with a large 12" woofer. With their front grilles on, their appearance is classic, traditional, fitting any room decor. With their grilles off, they have a striking, space-age look.

The Radiance Series was designed by the same engineers who designed JBL's more expensive systems and professional equipment.

They're evaluated with the same computer facilities and test equipment used in the development of the more costly JBL speakers.

And they're subjected to the same rigorous demands of JBL's listening panel, the committee that must give the final auditory "o.k." to any JBL.

The results are unheard-of in this price range.

Hear them now. JBL's new Radiance Series.

Dope, Sex & Cheap Thrills

Everyone always told us that rock and roll was sordid, druggy and decadent, totally without redeeming social value. Now we hear it again, only more so: Tony Sanchez lays out a tawdry, perverse world of the Rolling Stones in a gossipy, questionable book titled Up and Down with the Rolling Stones (William Morrow, $8.95) that is certain to make just about everyone sick to his or her stomach.

The main thing we learn by reading Sanchez's account of the band from the early Sixties to Mick's wedding to Bianca is that the human body can ingest all sorts of death-inducing drugs and still defy the grim reaper. Chapter and verse on just about every illegal substance known to man is recited in gross detail until I wanted to cry uncle. Apparently Sanchez worked for Keith and his common-law wife, Anita Pallenberg, for a number of years, mainly as a gofer and procurer; when one reporter asked the Stones' publicist who Sanchez really was, Paul Wasserman replied cogently, "a gentleman's gentleman."

Ah, if it were only so. If only a percentage of this book could be true, the life depicted is still a dizzying descent into debauchery on a juvenile level. These heroes of rock and roll aren't very nice people, in fact they're quite rude, mean and miserable. Sanchez isn't concerned with their talent (he only gives Brian Jones credit for that), he's more interested in telling us about their bad skin, their sexual activity (Keith, he says, is a non-energetic lover) and their conquest of illegal substances.

Keith emerges as a weak-willed person, totally dominated by the powerful Anita (the "sixth" Stone by virtue of her romps with Brian, Keith and Mick), who practiced black magic and put a curse on Bianca when she married Mick because, Sanchez says, Anita wanted Mick for herself. Mick doesn't fare much better — he's dismissed as hopelessly middle-class and incapable of caring about anyone. Sanchez "proves" that by saying Mick refused to recognize Marianne Faithfull's dependence on heroin and then co-opted her first line when awakening from a coma, "Wild horses couldn't drag me away," for a song.

Other of our fave raves also flit across Sanchez's book to more or less disastrous results, including John Lennon (once on heroin), Paul McCartney (high on himself) and Eric Clapton, to say nothing of Ron Wood, who eventually out-Stones the Stones in perversity. Conspicuous by their absence are Charlie Watts and Bill Wyman, who apparently don't take drugs or live with women who like to bed young girls. Ah well, maybe someone else will tell us their secrets.

Rius: Reinventing Comix

The comic book has suffered many unexpected fates in our time, some of the worst of these dealt out by the relentlessly well-meaning instructional-media people. These individuals tend to regard the comic as a Skid Row wino who can be made to straighten up and fly right in the service of education. The result is usually a series of drawings concerning a simultaneously tormented-and dull-looking young person who needs, gets and assimilates information on career opportunities or sexually transmitted diseases. This is a curious state of affairs, since the essential compatibility of instruction and elegant amusement has been evident since ancient fable-telling times.

Rius (Eduardo del Rio) is the self-taught Mexican graphics genius who managed to fuse the wild invention of the best comic with out-and-out, unabashed teaching. Political satire was Rius's original specialty (in Los agachados, translatable as the clobbered-down, perhaps, and indicative of the short-end-of-of-the-stick segment of society, and in Los supermachos). Working in this role quickly brought him to an unhappy limitation: the generally low level of socio-political awareness among readers. The kind of humor Rius wanted to do was a critique of the organizing mechanisms of a bureaucratic-capitalistic state, and it required a reader alerted to the contradictions inherent in such a society.

The obvious solution to such difficulties is to cartoon at the readers' level, but Rius chose not to. Instead, he made his graphic humor the source of diffusion for concepts and information necessary to a comprehension of social weirdnesses, which could then be found funny in a horrible way. Smoothly worked into the fabric of silliness were whole bundles of data, statistics and all, about electioneering, media bombardment, dollar imperialism and class distinctions. Rius readers, far from rejecting this teacherliness, formed a massive cult. They followed Rius's innovation of a full-length comic-book treatment of one question: TB as social problem, university unease, election fraud. When, at one point, Rius lost control of Los supermachos and a more mainstream bunch came in, it became clear the preachy cartoonist had a following that would go with him wherever he cared to publish. The ultimate mutation of the Rius comic was its transformation into neo-textbook. The Rius audience, having started out with a relatively standard batch of funnies, was now willingly purchasing and absorbing introductory texts on Marx, Cuba and petromadness.

Rius's work has only sporadically invaded the United States. A raggedy newsprint edition of Cuba for Beginners surfaced in Berkeley in English. Marx for Beginners was occasionally available as a British import item. Now, suddenly, Rius is here. A U.S. translation of Marx for Beginners (Pantheon Books, $2.95) is on sale; pages of it have appeared in The Village Voice. Richard Appignanesi, the translator, followed the same model in his Lenin for Beginners (also from Pantheon and $2.95). I have not seen the latter work, but Andrew Hacker reports it is like Rius only less engaging.

Why exactly do readers accept being lectured by Rius, sometimes at considerable length? Visually, he wins the eye over with his rampant eclecticism. He has a Ralph Bakshi-like fondness for mixing the hand-drawn with the image. Quaint and fusty-looking drawings fascinate him, and not only for reasons of copyright; not content with ransacking old advertisements and illustrated manuals, he fabricates his own instantly passe graphics. In Marx, the capitalist exploiters display a luxury of soaring silk hats and waistcoats, with heavily furbelowed womenfolk. The poor are wretched in the approved Dickensian mode. In tune with the melodramatic tenor of the visuals, Rius provides his figures with larger-than-life dialogue. A young intellectual of Marx's day, eager to illustrate the ferment of heavy ideas typical of the moment, has a balloon hanging over his head with the words "What is Man?"

If Marx for Beginners really catches on, there is a wealth of relevant Rius material waiting to be Englished and distributed. Some of his work is too specific to Mexico to win wide audiences elsewhere — for instance, an exposée of right-wing dirty business at the University of Monterrey. Others, such as his recently-issued comic analysis of the new Mexico-petroleum-and-U.S. situation, have a more world-wide relevance (the petro-document also shows how much teaching and how little drawn-and-doodled visual interruption Rius can get away with). In fact, Rius already has a U.S. following among persons able to read Spanish. One devotee, Phyllis Procter, wrote her 1972 doctoral dissertation about him (University of Texas), while others limit themselves to reading Rius when they should probably be doing something more required and less educational. The obvious eventual result would be a cooptation of the inimitable Rius's techniques by U.S. manufacturers of instructional materials; hardly a fate worse than what they now give us. Even if Rius's complete works were to vanish instantaneously from the surface of the earth, he would still have made a very significant point about the potential for renovating mass-culture artifacts and accommodating them to the purposes of increasing political and social awareness.

Rius' Marx: Politics in the Funnies

White Love in the Dark Continent

Until the time of Jomo Kenyatta and Julius Nyere, Africa may have belonged to the blacks by birthright, but it was the white European colonists, who, in their supreme self-rightousness, imposed themselves by force as rulers and took from the land, and the people, whatever they wanted. And though the three tales in Georges Simenon's African Trio (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, $9.95) are personal, intense, psychological portraits, they are based in this ambience of supremecy, disregard, expendability. The blacks understood their position implicitly and simply accepted it — they had not yet the power to change the political order. But Simenon stretches our horizons by showing that life was hard for everyone in Africa in the Thirties and Forties, white and black, aristocrat and commoner alike. And he makes this point ring true by having his European characters endure great suffering — the white man may be 'massa' but he pays a heavy price for that honor.

Each of these novelettes (they run about 100 pages apiece) by the inventor of that famous Parisian personality, Inspector Maigret, is from the outset filled with foreboding, so that the trek through these pages is not always pleasant, but it is certainly provocative.

This month's aerial Ampersand is from Michael Upham, a graphic design student at Santa Fe College in Gainesville, Florida; he's now $25 richer for any other would-be Ampersand creators, here are the rules: Send us finished art work using black ink on white paper, and put your name and address on the art work. Be whimsical, clever, precise, gory, cute or meaningful, but do be neat.

A strange, irrational love affair, with people distinctly unsuited for each other, is central to each story. In Talatala, the owner of a coffee plantantion in the upper Belgian Congo falls in love with an English noble woman whose small plane has crashed on his property. He follows her blindly to Istanbul only to be totally rebuked — she has a husband and children and her life goes on. The young protagonist of Tropic Moon arrives in French Equatorial Africa and finds that the job he's come for doesn't exist. He is seduced by a tainted hotel proprietress and her subsequent disdain for him only deepens his attachment to her, eventually, with the help of a case of dengue fever, driving him past the brink of sanity. Aboard the Aquitaine finds a Congo Railway engineer's wife falling for the ship's purser. When he jilts her, she begins amours with a poor account clerk who's been put into first class, instead of the second he's paid for, for the sake of his ill baby and his weakened wife. This liaison ends frightfully when the clerk strikes a wealthy passenger and is banished from the premier section's dining room and bar.

The atmosphere surrounding these affairs is dark,dank, unhealthy, ominous. Everywhere it's incredibly hot. People are constantly sweating through their clothing and bedding and the stench of humanity hangs in the humid air. Passions rise and death slips in its sure hand: an overzealous commissioner, and the reality of life in the bush, leads his young assistant to take his own life; a blackmailing native receives lead instead of the 1000 francs he expected. Simenon doesn't dwell on these Wild Should Wild Remain.

"Man always kills the thing he loves, and so we the pioneers have killed our wilderness. Some say we had to. Be that as it may, I am glad I shall never be young without wild country to be young in."

ALDO LEOPOLD

"Integrity is wholeness, the greatest beauty is organic wholeness, the wholeness of life and things, the divine beauty of the universe. Love that, not man apart from that...."

ROBINSON JEFFERS

"The love of wilderness is more than a hunger for what is always beyond reach; it is also an expression of loyalty to the earth, (the earth which bore us and sustains us), the only home we shall ever know, the only paradise we ever need—if only we had the eyes to see."

EDWARD ABBEY

"We need wilderness preserved—as much of it as is still left, and as many kinds... It is important to us... simply because it is there—important, that is, simply as an idea."

More Champagne, Hold the Tequila

BY BYRON LAURSEN

A chilled split of Moet-Chandon champagne effervescing in front of him, Jimmy Buffett, 32, sits crossways in a posh Hotel Carlyle armchair. Midtown Manhattan and a dark green limousine wait twelve stories below, where thousands of office workers are now pouring home by subway and cab. A resolute 'Bama grin settles on his face. "I work hard for my money," says he. Millions of his best friends would scoff.

To much of his audience, which grew from cult to mass after 1977's "Margaritaville" hit single, Buffett embodies the lifestyle his albums delineate — pub crawling, rum-lubed Caribbean cruises, infinite vacationeering. Working ain't in it. But Buffett, by now a twelve-year music business vet, also logs a hundred-show-per-year schedule, carting a twenty-seven person entourage. "You have to be a businessman," he says. "If you're in there for longevity, you've got to have some practical sense."

Practical sense Buffett has, plus a gregarious turn of nature, a love of storytelling and a folkie's command of guitar. Combined with an urge for longevity, these have made him the author of several light and smartly crafted tunes, mostly about romantically carefree, adventurous living. Buffett's albums are the soundtrack for being twenty-five years old into perpetuity. "There's a lot of other people writing what I call 'piss-and-moan' songs," he says, locking his hands behind his head, squirming lower in the armchair, hooking a leg over the side, "I write escapism music. I don't draw from the traumas."

Practical sense has Buffett in Manhattan for a four-day stretch of interviews to push Volcano, his eighth LP and first for the MCA label, which recently bought out ABC Records. The day before he took in sailboat races up at Martha's Vineyard, the guest of friends James Taylor and Carly Simon, well-to-do authors of many a piss-and-moan song. Today he flew early in the afternoon by chartered plane into La Guardia Airport and rode by limo to the RCA Building, just in time to appear on comedian Robert Klein's radio talk show.

Born 1946 on Christmas Day in Pascagoula, Mississippi, Buffett came up in Mobile, Alabama. "On the coast," he clarifies, "The Gulf Coast, which is not like what you think of the rest of Alabama. It's very loose." Childhood reading, including Robert Wilder's Winds from the Carolinas, hooked him permanently on Caribbean lore. He played folkie dates while earning a journalism degree at the University of Southern Mississippi. He toured cocktail lounges, got married, moved to Nashville for a roll at song-selling, took a job at Billboard, the music business journal, made a study there of the "politics and workings" of the industry, and finally contracted a record deal with an outfit called Barnaby Records. The resulting first LP didn't sell

Sony Tape. Full Color Sound.

Music is full of color. Incredibly beautiful color. Color that you can hear... and (if you close your eyes) color you can almost see. From the soft pastel tones of a Mozart to the blinding brilliant flashes of hard rock to the passionately vibrant blues of the Blues.

In fact, one of the most famous tenors in the world described a passage as "brown ...by brown I mean dark...rich and full."

Music does have color. Yet when most people listen to music they don't hear the full rich range of color the instruments are playing. They either hear music in black-and-white, or in a few washed-out colors.

That's a shame. Because they're missing the delicate shading, the elusive tints and tones, the infinite hues and variations of color that make music one of the most expressive, emotional and moving arts of all.

Music has color. All kinds of color. And that is why Sony is introducing audio tape with Full Color Sound.

Sony tape with Full Color Sound can actually record more sound than you can hear.

So that every tint and tone and shade and hue of color that's in the original music will be on the Sony tape. Every single nuance of color, not just the broad strokes.

Sony tape with Full Color Sound is truly different. Full Color Sound means that Sony tape has a greatly expanded dynamic range — probably more expanded than the tape you're using. This gives an extremely high output over the entire frequency range, plus a very high recording sensitivity.

There's even more to Sony tape with Full Color Sound, however. Sony has invented a new, exclusive SP mechanism for smoother running tape, plus a specially developed tape surface treatment that gives a mirror-smooth surface to greatly reduce distortion, hiss and other noise. Each type of tape also has its own exclusive binder formulation, that gives it extra durability.

Any way you look at it — or rather, listen to it, you'll find that Sony tape with Full Color Sound is nothing short of superb.

If you're not hearing the whole rainbow on your audio tape, try recording on Sony tape with Full Color Sound. Then you'll be hearing all the glorious full color that makes every kind of music, music.

PRIMA BELLA

L.A.'s Dancer/Choreographer Bella Lewitzky (Who Needs New York?)

BY ED CRAY

Those who live long enough, despite the endless pasta dinners, the drafty storefronts grandly passed off as rehearsal halls, and the constant scrounging to pay the lights or the printer or phone; those who manage to maintain some shred of integrity, some sense of ideals still uncorrupted by reality, they are called legends. Critics and public speak respectfully of their dancing, and their choreography.

And if they're lucky — or maybe if they're just survivors, tough ones, those whose flinty sense of commitment won't let them pack it in, or sell out to the Dean Martin variety shows — the money begins to come. A grant from a foundation, another from the federal government pay for what couldn't be had before or, wonder of wonders, even give the dancers a hundred bucks a week so they can keep their souls together if not their stomachs full.

With a little publicity, a little recognition, the tours get longer, the audiences grow from sparse clusters of dance freaks to enthusiastic coteries, and the prestigious universities with posh performance centers replace community colleges and barren multi-purpose rooms on the schedule.

It's a life only for the true believer, someone like Bella Lewitzky, born as she puts it, "into a birthing time when modern dance was being shaped, fortunately able to be part of that."

Sixty-three years old, a dancer for as long as she can remember, a veteran of half-a-hundred experiments in the arts and education, Lewitzky is the grande dame, the legend of contemporary dance. If anyone has inherited the torch lighted by Isadora Duncan and carried onwards by Martha Graham, it is this elegant woman born in a utopian socialist community in the Mojave Desert in 1916. They are her "tap roots, and I can't but help reflect their work, philosophy and ethic. To that degree I carry forward that particular era and pass it on."

California, the arbiters of dance maintain, is a backwater, or a sinkhole of panderers few can resist. Artists do not thrive there, they come from there, to New York, of course, or to Europe, especially Europe if they are opera singers. Bella Lewitzky stayed in Los Angeles, through the early years of politically inspired dance, the Federal Theater Project of the Depression (perhaps the most vibrant creative period in American history), through the frightened years of the blacklist when she couldn't even get those "pagan" dance jobs in Debra Paget jungle epics that paid the rent.

She stayed, explaining later of avoiding New York, "People there are reduced to human garbage. You must step over them to survive, and survival is not what it's all about. I have friends who live in that atmosphere. They create in order to escape the environment. I create to celebrate the environment."

In Los Angeles she taught wherever she could, performed whenever she could, dreamed of her own company, and kept the faith. Overweight housewives came for a little exercise and she taught them. Mothers brought in their gawky daughters and she taught them too. One by one she found young dancers, people she could mold, people she could infuse with her vision.

Denied a teaching position at UCLA in 1954 because she wouldn't sign a loyalty oath, twelve years later she gave a lecture-demonstration at that university which became pivotal. Invitations followed from other universities, and her reputation spread. There were workshops in Utah, Texas, North Carolina, and even a two-month stint in Israel as a guest teacher and choreographer.

In 1971, after more than three decades of grubbing, Lewitzky took her company, seven women and two "boys" — male dancers are always "boys," regardless of age, regardless of marquee-power — on its first eastern tour. New York's powerful music press, which is to say the New York Times, discovered her. The legend had come to St. Paul's and was canonized.

She was not then the woman, the creator, of earlier years, and she is not now, eight years later, the choreographer she was on that first New York tour. Her dancing, then her choreography — she retired from dancing three years ago — has progressively grown more abstract, less concerned with stories, with statements even, more focused on line and movement, on vitality.

Her newest ballet, "Rituals," premiered at Los Angeles' prestigious Music Center in 1979, carries Lewitzky even farther from the programmatic. It seems like it might be about racial integration, or some kind of integration — black costumes on one group, white on another, the groups at odds, then blending. But that is too facile an explanation, and Lewitzky is long, long past the obvious political statements of her work in the Federal theater. If "Rituals" has any specific meaning, that is for the audience to decide at that performance. As Lewitzky puts it, "My works tend to be abstractions rather than manifestos. Each tends to be a new statement of the place I am."

However much Lewitzky's work has evolved, one thing seems constant: her fey sense of humor. It sneaks in everywhere, and is central to the rousing spoof "Pas de Bach," choreographed in 1977 with a decor by former-dancer-now-clothes-designer Rudi Gernreich (he of the topless bathing suit). Lewitzky satirizes artistic snobbery, her fellow choreographers who have doted upon good J.S. Bach's music, Hollywood musicals, the Floradora Girls, ballet in general, and two or three other affectations which flitted by too quickly to be identified.

Not many troupes are so well trained they can move, en masse, from the sober to the absurd as deftly as do Lewitzky's minions. It is a mark of the quality of her teaching and the cohesiveness of the eleven dancers she has bonded together into a working company.

Moreover, she has sympathetic technical support, notably from music director Larry Attaway, whose score for "Rituals" is as dichotomous as Lewitsky's choreography, moving back and forth from Notre Dame organum to Luciano Berio. Such unity of enterprise only the most secure, on-going companies achieve.

They still skimp to make the payroll; all dance companies do. They still tour small colleges; more dance companies should. The lady born into a birthing time works on, teaching contemporary dance anew, passing it on to the next generation.

It's one of the obligations of being legendary in one's own time.

Besides, as she explained, "I don't want to carry it to the grave with me."

IN BOTH EARS

Direct-to-Disc The Truest Sound?

Of all the cockeyed inventions the world has ever seen, the phono record must surely be somewhere near the top of the list. It was astonishing enough when disc sound was all mono, but then to impress stereo and later four-channel sound into the grooves is even more incredible, particularly now that the disc is a centenarian. Yet this electronic senior citizen is still our most important sound source.

Tape machines didn't come along until many decades after the invention of the phonograph. Prior to that development the output of a microphone was connected directly to the record cutting machine, and since just one mike was used, the musicians clustered in a group around it. There were several problems. The musicians had to be right the first time, and if they made a mistake it was recorded directly to the grooves, and so they had to start all over again. The tempo of a composition was sometimes governed by the amount of playing time permitted by the record. If the musical composition couldn't fit, if it was too long, the musicians played a bit faster.

When tape finally came along, all that changed. The tape could be edited and offending passages removed. With multitrack recording, musical instruments could be recorded separately at different times and different places. Recording engineers pieced the whole thing together and then a master was made from the final tape. Another advantage is that through the use of multitrack tape, a variety of special effects can be obtained, such as sound with sound, echo, sound on sound.

No rose without its ,horn, no garden without its weeds. The problem is that tape recorders help limit dynamic range and add noise, plus the fact that it is the recording engineer and not the musical conductor who often has the final say about the musical content of the master tape. Tape decks and tapes also supply their own quota of noise and this can become an integral part of the music.

While tape recording does make life easier for the musician, there is a big difference between performing solo and working with a group. In an orchestra each musician not only concentrates on his instrument but on the music produced by his instrument in relationship to all the others. You could say that the musician, in a competitive situation, playing solo to a tape recorder, with each instrument to be combined later by the recording engineer, is weakened by the lack of incentive.

Today we have a "new" technique known as direct-to-disc recording, a throwback to the methods used in the early days of phono records. In direct-to-disc, all the musicians mus be assembled and they must all play together. As soon as the composition starts, a record-cutting lathe goes into action, and what is produced is a master disc. If any errors are made by the musicians, those mistakes are also recorded. If the faults are serious, there may be a retake, an expensive procedure. To avoid this possibility, direct-to-disc requires a number of rehearsal sessions, including the person operating the cutting lathe. But with tape/record, if a musician makes an error, the group or orchestra can stop, move back just a few bars and continue from that point. There is no need to start all over again. Musicians are less apprehensive about errors and know that if one does happen correction will be kept to a minimum.

Both techniques, direct-to-disc and the tape/record process, use microphones and mixing consoles, but in direct-to-disc the output of the console goes directly to a record-cutting lathe and the tape/disc process feeds into a 30 ips recorder.

Recording techniques for direct-to-disc and tape/record are essentially the same, though. Both methods use microphones for changing the sound into an electrical waveform; what sound results is based on the number and kind of microphones used, and their placement. The difference is that in direct-to-disc there is no opportunity for experimenting with microphone placement. With tape/record, if a take isn't quite right, some adjustments can be made. However, it isn't all gravy since such experimentation takes time. Usually sound engineers have enough experience to avoid this.

To be able to hear he difference in direct-to-disc as compared with recording via tape requires audio components that are absolutely top quality. Direct-to-disc records are more expensive than discs using the tape recording process. The higher cost is attributable to the fact that these are limited editions. Only a certain number of pressings can be made from each master, and then that's it. As a result, some earlier direct-to-disc recordings have become collectors' items. With ordinary records, the audio signal is put on tape which can always be used to cut another master.

Direct-to-disc recordings are not only higher-priced and have a limited number of labels, but some record stores refuse to carry them. Stores that sell records depend on built-up demand, but they know that even if demand is high, they may not be able to fill orders. A characteristic of direct-to-disc is limited output and once that output is distributed, no more records of that particular cutting will be available.

Direct-to-disc records are being made by smaller companies and they don't have the top artists. Nor is it likely that big time artists will drift over to the direct-to-disc recorders since record royalties from limited sales don't make it worthwhile financially. The result is that direct-to-disc offers a limited selection.

Those who had had experience with direct-to-disc claim that the sound is superior to records made via tape. It is true that with the tape method noise is produced by the tape recording process, but the fact remains that noise is also produced by the plating process in disc manufacturing. Whether noise is audible or not would seem to depend, in both cases, on the care and expertise used in record manufacturing.

BOB DYLAN
Slow Train Coming (Columbia)

To dispassionately review a provocative blend of music and religious philosophizing like Slow Train Coming is impossible. But, if Wallace Stevens can propose "Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird," can not Ampersand present two ways of looking at an album? Forthwith are two biased viewpoints.

This Train Delivers

With the release of Slow Train Coming, there is no question left to ask regarding Bob Dylan's new Christian belief. He himself has answered them within the context of this extraordinary LP. Yes, Dylan is a Christian; his belief has had a profound effect on his world view. the content of his music, the way he looks at himself and others. Slow Train Coming reveals a changed man, a change extending not only into the future but reaching back into the past, bringing a sense of completeness to Dylan's long, mercurial career. The ring of authority with which this album resounds is the sound of prophecy fulfilled.

The truest persona in the protean Mr. Dylan's long public history was his first; the lone sojourner with a guitar, singing out against injustice, social, spiritual and relational. It is particularly fitting that, on Slow Train Coming, Dylan should again find his voice of protest, a voice now grounded in the conviction that there is an answer to the suffering and ills comprising our lot, a moral certitude that frees him, at long last, to again point out where we have all gone wrong, not excluding himself in the indictment. When Dylan decries "fathers turning daughters into whores" on "Gonna Change My Way of Thinking" or "sheiks...deciding America's future from Amsterdam or Paris" on the LP's title track, it is the same chilling, decisive truth illuminating "Blowin' in the Wind," "The Times They Are a-Changin'" or any of Dylan's impassioned, early work.

The comparison does not end there. Dylan's voice has returned to the gravelly, highly emotive style of those early days; he has never sounded better, more honest or assured in what he is saying. His lyrics lack almost competely the purposeful obscurity and subliminal metaphorics of so much of his middle and later period; while Street Legal was a distressingly hollow return to the dense word associations of Highway 61 Revisited, Slow Train Coming is a powerful reaffirmation of the poetic honesty of The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan. Where once words were the muse's delight, they have again become weapons and tools for Dylan.

The centerpiece of Slow Train Coming is Jesus Christ. In nearly every song He is referred to, more often directly than not. That this album is a triumph artistically, a delight musically and a rebirth for an artist who has been prematurely eulogized more than once, points directly to Dylan's claim that he has, at last, discovered the truth. It is a claim not easily dismissed in light of this certified masterpiece.

Same Train, Different Track

The evaluational ante is always high with a Dylan album, and this time the drama of his religious conversion boosts the odds ever more. While this is a strong enough record to take the wear of the many axes that will be ground against it, it's also a human enough creation to show flaws. Dylan's musical and lyrical stocks-in-trade are all in evidence, but they're sometimes applied with little finesse — judged by the standards of Dylan's most remarkable work has set. Here is a cut-by-cut overview.

You Gotta Serve Somebodh. A moody, minor key organ intro and ominous tempo brings "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" to mind. The insistence of the chorus is effective, but the reductionist school of thought — "It may be the Devil or it may be the Lord," is disquieting.

Precious Angel. Mark Knopffler of Dire Straits introduces this one, which itself introduces the notion that a woman friend sparked Dylan's conversion. "You either got faith or you got unbelief/There ain't no neutral ground," says the lyric.

I Believe in You. Again, a slow tempo. Knopffler's fills are subdued, liquid, graceful. This album features Dylan's smoothest production yet. Very spare. His voice is the only rough-edged instrument, standing in high relief. The instrumental understatement implies latent power.

Slow Train. This is a worthy title track. The anger of the righteous is expressed, with plenty of ready imagery from the modern world for fuel. Still, Dylan has written more effectively. The images, perhaps too literal, don't illuminate so much as catalogue. "Hard Rain" will outlast this song.

Gonna Change My Way of Thinking. Another simple structure — a "You Really Got Me" style riff and cowbell timekeeper. For the first time producers Jerry Wexler (Ray Charles, Aretha Franklin, Sanford and Townsend) and Barry Beckett (practically everything out of Muscle Shoals) are coloring with horns, their use oddly sparing for a Muscle Shoals-ecorded gospel-style LP. Maybe considering the literalness of thought evident elsewhere, horns seemed too carnal. Sample hackle-raising lyric: "Who's not for me is against me."

Do Right to Me Baby. Knopffler backdrops this crossbreeding of the Golden Rule and "All I Really Want to Do" with light, trebly fingerpicking. One of the more palatable songs on the record.

When You Gonna Wake Up. This is the best-written cut. Dylan has long understood that it can take a paradox to reveal the cutting edge of a truth. "You got some big dreams, baby/But in order to dream you gotta still be asleep." Not bad, though not on the order of "Too Much of Nothing." My current favorite lines in this song are "The rich seduce the poor/And the old are seduced by the young...There's strength in the things that remain."

Man Gave Names to All the Animals. This one might be admissible as evidence of brain damage. Moronically transparent verses build to predictable rhymes. A day-nursery sort of charm is almost invoked, probably unintentionally, but the "pregnant" ending is a failure.

When He Returns. With its stately gospel piano foundation and its brevity, this suits perfectly to cap the LP. As is said of politicians' speeches, a song doesn't have to be endless in order to be eternal. The feeling imparted is that Dylan has made a testament rather than a diatribe. Although he has written of God, conviction and rage before, Slow Train Coming takes Dylan the extra step from spiritual longing to surrender. Slow Train Coming is more powerful than eloquent. The "either for or against" mentality is truly disturbing. I believe the album will ultimately stand as one of his better, not one of his best. However, after the muddle of Street Legal, the boringly indulgent Renaldo and Clara film and his smarmy recent tour, in which the "poet of rage" looked more like Neil Diamond, Dylan's work on Slow Train Coming is a beacon of clarity and purpose.

THE CLASH
The Clash (Epic)

This is the long awaited and much delayed compilation album of material from the English punk rockers' earliest recordings that were never released domestically before. The material ranges from the band's first single ("White Riot") to its most recent, post-Give 'Em Enough Rope EP ("I Fought the Law" and the two songs on the bonus single).

The bulk of the songs are drawn from the first English album and subsequent trio of classic singles and, by and large, have been well selected. The only grievous omission is "Capitol Radio," an acerbic attack on airwave conservativism that not only preceded Elvis Costello's "Radio Radio" but far surpasses it in vitriolic force.

The earliest songs have been re-mixed as well (poor sound quality being one of CBS Records' official excuses for not releasing the album at first), again largely for the best. The classic "Complete Control" loses some of its darkly ominous power but, overall, the drums punch through cleaner, the guitars bite harder and Joe Strummer's lead vocals are more easily discernible.

Strummer's lyrics may be derived fom the political circumstances facing English youth in 1977 (the other major CBS rationale for not releasing it), but he's also dealing with themes that cut across national boundaries. The chorus to "Janie Jones" certainly wouldn't sound foreign to American ears, nor would the exhilarating way the band kicks into "I Fought the Law" need translation at the United Nations. "I'm So Bored with the U.S.A." not only makes some trenchant points about American cultural imperialism ("Yankee detectives are always on the TV/Cause killers in America work seven days a week") but does so in hilarious fashion ("Move Up Starsky to the CIA/Suck on Kojak for the U.S.A.").

The album could have been sequenced better, thus avoiding the occasionally grating juxtaposition of old and newer material, and why the first beats of the martial drum intro to "Janie Jones" were cut out is mystifying (sounds like a very minor detail but it definitely throws the rhythm out of whack for a while). But The Clash is an absolutely essential album by the best rock band in the world today.

TALKING HEADS
Fear of Music (Sire)

Whether it sells as well as Buildings & Food, Fear shows the Talking Heads noticeably improved in performance, production and inspiration.

David Byrne continues to use inanimate or impersonal objects as sources of inspiration. Here he describes his feelings through paper, cities, air, heaven, and an electric guitar. His "camera eye" lyricism is ingenious; he parallels a disintegrated love affair with holding paper up to the sun ("some rays, they passed right through"). "Drugs" is a vividly accurate, yet unromantic portrayal of the paranoid, schizo moods and perceptions in a psychedelic high.

Byrne usually masks his paranoia in comic exaggerations. He worries about the dangers of air, being laughed at by animals, and surviving war with a change of identities and a two-day supply of peanut butter. His singing is less shrill but still edgy.

The band is as tight as ever; the everpresent staccato guitar chords bristle with energy. Tina Weymouth supplies a more emphatic bass line to compliment Jerry Harrison's brisk beat. Chris Frantz and Byrne even have room to cut loose with clear, biting lead work.

Their precise musicianship is enhanced by Eno's fuller production. Buildings & Food had all the instruments upfront, resulting in a clinical feel. Here Eno adds a deeper texture to the layered arrangements. He occasionally submerges a vocal line or a rhythm track for a more dynamic effect. Instead of special effects as frill to the regimented melodies, his synthesizer treatments are better molded into the songs.

The Talking Heads' music, no matter how finely presented, will still alienate a lot of people. Some won't stomach Byrne's dry wit and vocal style. Others won't have enough desire to get involved with what the group's trying to say.

Still, Fear of Music is further evidence that the Talking Heads will be a major creative force in the music of the 1980s. If only people would conquer their fears about adjusting to different and unique sounds.

NAT ADDERLY
A Little New York Midtown Music (Galaxy)

Nat Adderly has enlisted some top-drawer talent to make this tasty album. The cornetist-leader pulled in Roy McCurdy, drums, and Victor Feldman, piano, from Los Angeles, bassist Ron Carter from New York, and saxophone wizard Johnny Griffin from Holland, though the latter was actually making his first U.S. tour in 17 years. These five men explore a variety of modern jazz compositions, including four by the leader, in an invigorating and thoughtful manner that makes this album worth repeated hearings.

It turns out that Griffin and Carter are the stars of the show. Griffin left the U.S. in 1962, after stints with Art Blakey and Thelonious Monk, to find happiness and work in Europe. He is an unabashed jazz player, holds no affection for contemporary "cross-over" music, and through his saxophonics and his words in print, is rapidly becoming the relevant spokesman for America's native art form. Carter, known to many through his tenure with Miles Davis, is a superlative technician who combines warmth, wit and intelligence in his performances.

Brother Nat wasn't at the peak of his game last September in Berkeley, when this album was cut; in fact, he huffs more than a few, but his noble cohorts burn right on through, more than holding up their end of the bargain. On "Fortune's Child," Carter's floating bass lines, full of glissandos and firm, solid notes, provide points of interaction for McCurdy's aggressive yet sensitive drumming, and together they push Feldman and Griffin into inspired moments.

The title track and "Come Rain or Come Shine" feature Adderly on muted horn, sounding a little like Miles but getting a more open, throatier tone. These two tracks give us some attractive Adderly, though Griffin's stellar moments stay with the listener longer than the leader's.

But, even with a so-so performance from the leader, A Little New York Midtown Music presents Adderly with four hip new tunes and the best of co-players, that's a good payload for any album.

GEORGE THOROGOOD & THE DESTROYERS
Better Than the Rest (MCA)

George Thorogood's rise to national prominence playing 20-year old material on a pair of albums released by a folk- and bluegrass-oriented label with no promotional clout certainly ranks as the left-field success story of the late Seventies. But his basic appeal isn't too difficult to trace. Thorogood is every frat bro' who's ever harbored secret desires about becoming the life of the Saturday night kegger by magically turning into a guitar hero, kicking out those basic Chuck Berry jams.

The remarkable thing about this collection of five-year-old material — given to MCA by his former manager over Thorogood's strong objections (the case is still in litigation) — is how little his approach has changed over the years. Obviously, this is the work of a less polished, not fully developed talent — the production is terrible, there's a different bass player, George's guitar is often double-tracked and his vocals are less effective. Essentially it's the same assortment of blues, Berry and Fifties rhythm and blues. He does break one of rock & roll's cardinal unwritten laws on "Howlin' for My Darling": no one except Captain Beefheart should try to imitate Howlin' Wolf's singing style.

While most of the songs boast enough hot licks to sustain interest, only the surging powerdrive of "In the Night Time" and the acoustic slide blues "You're Gonna Miss Me" qualify as first-rate. Better Than the Rest probably won't disappoint those who want everything Thorogood has recorded, but the two Rounder LPs remain better introductions to his music.

An added consumer note: Better Than the Rest contains a paltry 28 minutes of music.

in the south, in the Gabès, a maritime oasis," Chapman says. "There were irritations, but you got used to it, I suppose. If someone above you was lucky enough to have a room with a bath, you'd find your room was flooded. If that didn't happen, one of the torrential rainstorms would do it. And then there was a variety of little companions in one's room, too — insects and other wonders of nature. Quite fascinating. Fortunately, there were no scorpions inside, but lots outside. In fact, while filming the Sermon on-the-Mount-type scene, I made a rough estimate of the number of creatures on the set; it came to something like 24,000."

Some of those creatures were probably a BBC-TV crew, there to interview the Pythons; this was aired over some U.S. PBS stations recently and was, besides funny, eye-opening: Chapman, who makes no secret of his homosexuality, was filmed with a young man sitting on his lap (no such young men were in evidence during our interview.)

The only real problem on location was dysentery. Chapman knows — not because he suffered from it, but because he treated it, often. He was the company physician. He is a genuine accredited doctor, who, upon graduation from Cambridge, accepted a post as an ear-nose-throat specialist. As there was a six-month waiting period before he could assume his doctor duties, Chapman spent the time writing comedy with Cleese and liked it so much he never practiced medicine except on cast and crew.

His medical knowledge has come in handy in other ways, too, especially when he began to notice that his drinking habits were catching up with him near the end of 1977. "I became aware that I was — or at least was very close to being — a compete alcoholic. I really was drinking a monumental quantity of gin. I realized I'd gone far enough when I started to notice signs of liver damage and short-term memory lapse. I've tried to analyze why it crept up on me," he says, puffing on his pipe; "somewhere there was a feeling of inferiority in me." Throughout school and professional success, as he reached one plateau after another, he had the feeling at each stage that he didn't deserve to be there, that he wasn't smart enough. "Finally, I had to admit to myself that I was quite bright...and I realized, 'Okay, I can do it sober.'" So, before tackling Brian and Odd Job, he went cold turkey and hasn't ingested a drop of gin since.

Instead, he sips at his Tab and patiently bears a few last-minute questions.

Would Python ever do another TV series? "I doubt it. We may do some specials or something like that, but we prefer films; there's more freedom." And, presumably, more money. Do the Pythons see much of each other socially? "No, though I see a fair bit of Michael Palin, since we both have places near each other in London."

Any idea what the next Python film will be about? "Yes, but I'm not telling."

Any special ambitions? "Yes. I want to act more and perhaps write a bit less." After nearly ten years as "one of the Pythons," perhaps he can be forgiven the urge to be recognized as Graham Chapman, and not "the tall blond one."

JAN SONNENMAIR

Patti Smith Group
The Palladium, Hollywood

The Patti Smith Group, which had delivered a breathtaking musical event one year ago at the Santa Monica Civic, seemed at the Palladium in the midst of a religious rite gone haywire. Smith, as high priestess, was totally unable to satisfy the adoration of the faithful, refusing time and again to bleed herself in the rock ritual. Smith's performance and her relationship to the audience were frighteningly incoherent.

A year earlier there was no question that Smith was all she claimed to be; a poetess, a singer and a visionary. "Because the Night" was on the airwaves. Success, creative and popular, was in her grasp. Firmly at the helm, she steered the band through dangerous musical waters by sheer exuberant force. Risks were undertaken, reserves tapped, fate tempted.

But Smith has since paid dearly for success. She has a new following, people who wouldn't read Rimbaud unless his poems were printed on Gene Simmons' tongue. Made cynical by the indiscriminate adulation coming her way, Smith apparently lost the will to center and direct her mindless audience. "You wanted some new blood," she shouted hoarsely during a disjointed rendering of "Time Is on My Side," "Well, you got it in me." She threatened to kick those pressed against the stage if they knocked against her monitors, then halted an hour into the set for a ten-minute break that lasted thirty. Repeatedly asking the throng to "relax," Smith stalked the stage in what seemed to be a state of nervous exhaustion.

The music, of course, suffered terribly in this exchange between artist and audience. Her voice strained and ragged, Smith — who has previously established herself as a singer of no small ability — tore through each song with masochistic determination.

When the dust had settled, a question remained. Could it be that Smith's poetic sensibilities are being strangled at the source by the demands of commercial success? It's a question that one of Smith's mentors, Jim Morrison, also needed to answer. His silence seems somehow significant.

Delbert McClinton & Fenton Robinson
The Bottom Line, New York

A few more shows like the ones Delbert McClinton has been putting on the last year or so around New York and our friend from Fort Worth is going to have to become a movie-style Texan and pack a six-shooter just to ward off his well-wishers.

Blessed with one of the best voices in rock & roll — soulful, potent, soaked in whiskey and sweat — and backed by a six-piece, kick-ass Texas band (three of them have played with him for 22 years!), McClinton's New York shows are becoming events. Semi-regular sit-ins have included Elvis Costello, the Allman Brothers Band and Belushi and Aykroyd of the Blues Brothers.

McClinton's opening act at the bottom line was Fenton Robinson, the blues songwriter from Chicago who wrote the classic "Loan Me a Dime." Robinson, who appears to be in his late forties, plays a Gibson hollowbody and sings in a voice somewhat like Albert King's without the slight rasp. Accompanied by a second guitarist, bass and drums, Robinson entered the stage while his band played the standard blues-vamp opener, "Chicken Shack." They performed a highly competent set of uptempo country-blues, which sounded at times all-too-familiar and at other times made the listeners feel they were doing a valuable service by keeping this traditional music alive and vibrant. Surprisingly, however, "Loan Me a Dime" (which people still associate with Boz Scaggs since Robinson's credit was left off Scaggs' album) was tucked in the middle of the set and given a low-key, offhanded treatment and not played as a blues at all. It moved along with an unexpected sprightliness, was over in three or four minutes (Scaggs' version clocks in at 12:48) and contained none of the pain etched strongly in Scaggs' vocals and Duane Allman's crying guitar.

McClinton's band is a rarity in contemporary music, able to shift from Texas rock & roll to blues to country and even some funk as smoothly as an Alfa Romeo. Chuck Berry's "Talkin' 'Bout You" featured a torrid duet between Robert Harwood on sax and McClinton on harp, as did "Back to Louisiana." Willie Nelson's "Nightlife" showcased McClinton's vocals and "Corrina" included a funky, rhythmic harp and drum duet. But the McClinton originals, "B Movie" (one of the funkiest, hottest rock and roll tunes in memory), "I Received a Letter" (a country classic if there ever was one) and "Take It Easy" are just as powerful as the covers, which include a scorching version of Willie Dixon's "Spoonful" most nights.

McClinton, a Fort Worth native who cut his teeth on blues-bar performing, remains one of the most natural rock and rollers on the planet.

Mal Waldron
The Jazz Safari, Long Beach, California

Waldron, a fixture in Charles Mingus' early groups, a collaborator of Eric Dolphy, Billie Holiday's last regular accompanist and a distinguished composer of film scores, has resided in Munich since 1967. He usually makes it to New York about once a year; his last California appearance was in 1957 with Billie Holiday.

Waldron began with an improvised solo piece that wound into a tapestry of strong, swinging fabric, displaying the most immediate earmark of his playing, its dominant rhythmic sense. The left hand hammered out an obtuse, percussive ostinato while the right punctuated with spare, sharp chords.

Drummer Lawrance Marable and bassist Herb Lewis, two L.A. veterans, joined the set early on. With the rhythmic support of bass and drums, Waldron's left hand was free to drop odd, harmonic bombs while the right rifled off a flurry of notes on Miles Davis' "Milestones."

Thelonious Monk and Bud Powell, the two wellsprings of modern jazz piano, are prime raw materials for Waldron. Monk's masterpiece "Round Midnight" was Waldron's homage to Monk.

Reverence for Bud Powell was displayed in a swinging workout of "With a Song in My Heart," minus any of the sentiment. The tempo was way up with Marable providing all of the necessary underpinnings so that Waldron's left hand could comp while the right played an harmonic machine gun.

The final piece was Dizzy Gillespie's "Night in Tunisia" played earthy and hard. Waldron wisely used the strong undercurrent line of the song's original arrangement.

Though this show was a rare treat, knowing Waldron had more to offer added a sense of loss to the occasion.

Kirk Sillsbee

Louise Goffin & Greg Kihn
The Roxy, Los Angeles

Elektra Records passed out little cloth badges for the fans, calling this combined tour "The Next Chapter in Rock and Roll." What a straight line! But in fairness, Kihn and his band moved their set from commonplace to rousing in small but sure steps. A Bay Area favorite for some time, Kihn plays a clean, honest-feeling pop blend that homogenizes influences from Springsteen to the Byrds. Disciplined, cushiony, sung without grit or irony, the Kihn sound became most compelling after the smooth-faced leader announced, "We're well into the rock & roll portion of the program," then capped his show with "Life's Too Short" and "Roadrunner," the Jonathan Richman song that frequently anchors Kihn's sets.

Called back twice for encores, Kihn responded with "For Your Love," trading lead vocals with the rest of the four-piece band, then "In the Museum," and, finally, "Telstar." On the latter, an early Sixties organist's workout, Dave Carpenter, he of the radically shag-cut red hair, hit the tune's melody notes on guitar, sustaining with volume at distortion levels. The result, simultaneously more rocking and more human sounding than the original, became a neat summary of the Kihn band's virtues.

Cute as Shirley Temple, with tight pants, suspenders and a big-stripe t-shirt and several gallons of rampant blond locks, Louise Goffin (daughter of Carole King and Gerry Goffin — how time flies) started the evening with a professional workout, full of bouncing, audience-pointing and air-boxing. In lieu of communicating, she "sold" the songs, and herself. Though Goffin ultimately seemed more shallow than cynical with her calculated approach, at least one stomach turned when she encored in an artfully ripped and safety-pinned punkette t-shirt. She sang a nearly unrecognizable version of the Sex Pistols' "Problems," whirling to reveal a professionally block-printed "The Problem Is You" across her back. Goffin may score hits with her pro, well-coached, showbiz ways but the actual problem is her lack of substance. If she's the author, the next chapter of rock will be light reading.

APOCALYPSE NOW, starring Marlon Brando, Robert Duvall, and Martin Sheen; written by Francis Coppola and John Milius; directed by Coppola.

After three years and $31.5 million, after all the jokes about "Apocalypse Never," Francis Coppola (the middle name Ford has mysteriously disappeared) has at last relinquished his Viet Nam epic. Most of it was definitely worth the wait.

Martin Sheen, who is in almost every frame of the film (despite third billing, a ludicrous testament to "star power" vs. major roles), plays an army assassin ordered to Cambodia to execute "insane" Brando; the army brass want Brando dead because he has gone native, he is outside their influence, beyond their control; they do not appreciate creative warfare. As Sheen rides upriver on a navy patrol boat (with a young, drugged, rock & roll crew), he reads Brando's dossier, and we're hooked. Intense foreboding, even titillation: is Brando so crazy? No crazier than the astonishing things we see along the way, with Duvall outstanding as an officer who fancies himself a cavalryman (his helicopters are bugled off to battle!). Duvall orders his troops to attack and hold a Cong beach just so he can watch his new surfers hit the waves. He stands upright, wearing his cavalry hat, in the middle of the bombing, he cranks up Wagner's "Ride of the Walkyries" on a huge sound system in his chopper because "it scares hell out of the slopes." The few minutes of this attack are dazzling, heroic and stupid, macho mayhem taken to its ultimate horrifying giggle.

More madness: not violent butchery, but the abject decadence of a USO show in the middle of the jungle with Playmates bumping and grinding for the troops. The most painful scene of all comes when the boat crew annihilates innocent natives aboard a sampan because of their own nervous fear. Coppola's Viet Nam (the Philippines, actually) is alternately lush and inviting, stark and brutal. Small wonder the young soldiers drugged themselves, trying to erase the war by erasing their minds.

Alas, when Sheen finally arrives upriver — and finds Brando's bizarre, painted army just waiting around some temple ruins, as if any guerilla force would occupy such an easy target — the film falls apart. Coppola fine-tunes us, squeezes us with fear and numbing anticipation, and then drops us. Coitus interruptus. Instead of the heart of darkness, the core of madness embodied in a self-proclaimed god, a crazed, cold killer, we find Brando, fat, middle-aged and bald in what may well be his first uninteresting screen appearance.

Brando's character, Kurtz, fills the movie before we ever meet him; we sense a confrontation with man's primitive soul, the uncivilized savage never far beneath the surface; Kurtz, we believe, has peeled away his 20th-century character and confronted his timeless demons; he has reverted, slipped back to primeval ways, with painted face and necklaces made of enemies' bones. We wait for Kurtz to peel away some of our layers, or at least Sheen's, but he doesn't. Not even a glancing blow. Perhaps it isn't fair, isn't possible for one actor to personify Viet Nam's madness, and to do so in about five minutes. We might have sustained our fearful quiver if we'd never met Kurtz, or if he'd been frighteningly sane. Too many ifs.

After some pretentiously oblique conversation, Brando waits to be killed, and Sheen obliges with a ritual machete execution, intercut with the ritual butchery of a hapless animal by Brando's natives. Visually exciting, but emotionally empty. Nothing really happens; the different ending which will be used in the small theater/35mm version (a big-boom apocalyptic finale) won't change that. Sheen does not see himself in Brando, there is no transference, no revelation, just a lot of staring and sweating. This isn't Sheen's fault, but he just doesn't look like a killer, there is no cutting edge in his voice or eyes; he is desperate, but never demonic.

The script (with additional narration written by Michael Herr) is excellent when it sticks to the story, but Coppola and his cohorts occasionally lapse into philosophical observation, as when someone intones that the Viet Cong know only "death and victory," or when Dennis Hopper as a freako photographer with Brando's army blurts out that Brando has said, "The word 'if' is in the middle of life." Such profundity. Why, the word "ill" is ⅓ of "kill."

Although Coppola almost realizes his ambition "to create a film experience that would give its audience a sense of the horror, the madness, the sensuousness, and the moral dilemma of the Vietnam war," he falls prey to the same boogieman that has beset previous Viet Nam films, namely our simplistic belief that the Cong are, or were, invincible. We didn't win the war, in fact we lost a great deal more than the war, but that does not mean the North Vietnamese are supermen; Brando's speech about the "pure, perfect" acts of the Cong, who kill with no judgment, is clever but meaningless claptrap.

Apocalypse Now, especially its ambiguous ending, will be discussed and dissected for years to come and will probably yield more treasure with each search. I fully intend to see it again and again, by which time I too may paint my face and wear bones around my neck.

MONTY PYTHON'S LIFE OF BRIAN, starring Graham Chapman, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle, Terry Jones, and Michael Palin; written by all of the above; directed by Jones.

Now that their achingly silly TV series has run its course, now that I've seen all their films and memorized all their records, I measure my years in new Python offerings, and this year brings their best movie yet, Life of Brian.

This is the Pythonesque version of a Biblical epic; Brian was born in the manger next to you-know-who and grew up with many of the same problems, not to mention the same gruesome fate. Brian is played by Graham Chapman (see feature, this issue), who was last seen as King Arthur in Monty Python and the Holy Grail. Chapman plays two additioal roles, a Wise Man and Biggus Dickus, a lisping Roman centurion. John Cleese has six roles, from revolutionary to centurion to Jewish official at a stoning: Terry Jones clocks in with five including Brian's mother Mandy; Palin is most visible with ten parts, best of which is a lisping Pontius Pilate; Idle has eight roles, including a sexually confused revolutionary, Stan, who wants to be called Loretta. They all take aim at religion, a subject rife with satiric possibilities, and they don't miss a shot. The Nativity, Pilate, disciples, prophets, intellectuals and familiar Biblical scenes are all stung by the collective snake. F'r instance: when observers at the back of the crowd can't quite hear the Sermon on the Mount, an intermediately placed person translates for the others: "I think he said 'blessed are the cheesemakes,'. . . and 'blessed are the Greek.'" Since women were not allowed to attend stonings, Python has them buying phony beards and speaking in deep voices so they can hurl stones at the criminal. The beard seller is Idle, who also purveys stones and gravel for throwing.

And at the end, several men, nailed to crosses, sing a vacuous little tune (written by Idle) called "Bright Side of Life."

They're nuts, bless 'em.

Judith Sims

Martin Sheen on a mission of death and mystery in Apocalypse Now.

THE KIDS ARE ALRIGHT, starring the Who; directed by Jeff Stein.

Great rock & roll movies — those about bands — have largely been limited to the Beatles' A Hard Day's Night and Help, and, to a lesser extent, the Monkees' Head. These day's serious musicians see themselves primarily as artists, not entertainers, so we're stuck with a few inane fantasy movies featuring the questionable talents of Kiss, Donny and Marie and the like. Serious musicians, like the Band, Rolling Stones, Pink Floyd, Yes, Led Zeppelin and Grateful Dead, have chosen to showcase themselves in live concert films.

The Who, until Keith Moon's untimely death a year ago, had been together, intact, for 15 years. Director Jeff Stein takes full advantage of this span in constructing their on-and-off stage saga, The Kids Are Alright.

Mixing footage from various periods of the Who's career offers the unexpected and provides a fascinating glimpse of the band's development — musically and culturally (although a more comprehensive view of the latter will be presented in Quadrophenia, due out later this year.)

The film starts with the Who destroying their instruments on the Smothers Brothers TV show,, and makes extensive usage of sequences filmed at Woodstock, Monterey Pop and the (previously unseen) Rolling Stones' Rock and Roll Circus (wherein the Who provide the movie's most satisfying moment with an inspired "A Quick One While He's Away.").

In the beginning, the Who were brash and colorful. Their intense musical statements about youth (like "My Generation") were matched by the band's literally explosive stage show — flamboyantly destroying guitars and drums — and visually exciting pop-art-inspired stage apparel. Through short interview segments we are given some glimpses of the Who as people. In early interviews (circa 1965), Townshend reveals a precocity and naivete that contrasts sharply with his present-day evasiveness. Except for a sequence where John Entwistle shoots his gold records out of the air (ala skeet shooting), his non-musical identity is nil. Similarly, Roger Daltrey is remembered more for his amazing and consistent singing than for any spoken words.

The late Keith Moon steals the show, a hyperactive kid continually making jokes, pulling legs (literally) or ripping off clothes, and uncontrollably hamming it up. In one segment he demonstrates the art of wrecking a hotel room, and in another he refers to the time he drove a car into a swimming pool. If it weren't for the fact that he was, perhaps, rock's greatest drummer — in the movie you'll see how his constant onslaught doesn't merely keep the beat but propels each song — he could've made a classic slapstick movie comedian.

much, nor did the tour that followed make money. His marriage failed. Later, after Buffett's ABC albums took flight, Barnaby released another disc from leftover tracks.

When Nashville proved too trying, Buffett decided to join friend Jerry Jeff Walker in Miami. Sojourns to the nearby Keys reawakened his fascination with pirates, schooners and life in the warm sun. Soon he was dabbling in the contrabandista life, running light dope shipments. Thomas McGuane, then working on the novel 92 in the Shade, soon to write screenplays for Rancho Deluxe and The Missouri Breaks, became Buffett's partner in hell-raising as the pangs of Nashville and divorce were getting stir-fried out of his system. The novelist, brother of Buffett's current wife, Jane, also wrote liner notes for the debut album on ABC, A White Sport Coat and a Pink Crustacean. Cut in Nashville and released with the fall of '72, it introduced a bar-stool anthem that won Buffett compadres in all four corners of the U.S.A., the plainspoken "Why Don't We Get Drunk (and Screw)." Clearly off to a good start, he has ever since banked on his instincts for playfulness, raunch, and the combination of drink and song. The lilt of Caribbean music forms has affected his melodic sense as much as the rock-country-folk material of his mainland heritage. "The curious hinterland where Hank Williams and Xavier Cugat meet," McGuane put it in the liner notes. Later in history, Buffett did the soundtrack for Rancho Deluxe and Jack Nicholson's Goin' South. He also appeared briefly in FM, a cinema vehicle for music stars that was pure failure.

"Come Monday," off Buffett's 1974 release, Living and Dying in ¾ Time, made its way into the Top 20. By the end of the same year he was back in Nashville to cut AIA, which featured the snapshot-cum-postcard cover decorations that help link Buffett with down-island imagery. With its heavy dose of Caribbean settings, AIA, named after the road that connects Miami and Key West, prefigures the current Volcano more than any of his other records.

In 1976, after he had played an anti-nuclear benefit with the Eagles, Buffett chanced to meet diminutive mogul Irving Azoff at the bar of the Hotel Jerome in Aspen. Azoff, respectfully tagged "His shortness" around the offices of his Front Line Management firm in Los Angeles, had managed the Eagles to multi-platinum status and built a reputation for brash, gutty tactics in the process. Boz Scaggs, Steely Dan and Warren Zevon are also in Azoff's stable. He asked Buffett to open for the Eagles on an upcoming national tour, an offer no ambitious musician could refuse. Soon, Azoff was managing Buffett's career as well.

The following year saw another new album, Changes in Latitudes, Changes in Attitudes, very much along the lines of the previous recordings. Nestled in the LP was "Margaritaville," a drunkard's ditty of light remorse that Buffett claims he wrote entirely in five minutes. With whimsical rhymes (tattoo/clue, pop-top/flip-flop) and a lazy, airy melody, it pulled the album to platinum. One succeeding album, Son of a Son of a Sailor, also went platinum, but the double live You Had to Be There sold less healthily.

Volcano came about on Monserrat, an island about 17 degrees above the equator, near Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Martinique. George Martin, former producer of the Beatles, recently built Air Studios there for the double benefits of sunshine and lenient tax laws. Buffett and his Coral Reefer band descended on the facilities, along with James, Hugh and Alex Taylor, who came to sing harmonies. "It's a great little island" says Buffett, "very conducive to getting a lot done." Rum-sucking reputation notwithstanding, he recorded the album in a disciplined seventeen days.

Larry Solters, an Azoff aide assigned to steer Buffett to all his New York appointments, waits for Buffett's tardy chartered flight to arrive from Martha's Vineyard. Solters lights for a moment and says, "The last time I was in New York doing interviews with Jimmy, I spent four hour one night chasing him from bar to bar, telling him what he was supposed to do on the next day. He would go up to the second floor, up to the storeroom, and tell them if I came in to say he wasn't there."

Buffett deplanes, barely half an hour before the scheduled Klein taping, and says, "Did I ever let you down, Larry?" We jump directly for the limousine. The driver looks a lot like Burt Young in Rocky. Buffett, in tan, woven shoes and frayed bellbottom denims, appears either to be growing a beer belly or smuggling a tortoise beneath his flowers-and-egrets sport shirt. A funny woven cord loops behind his thinning, ringletted blond hair, hooked to a pair of sunglasses. "Are the Yankees on TV?"

At the RCA Building, Klein greets Buffett with a crack, "You were fogged in at Martha Vineyard? I wish I had excuses like that!" An MCA publicist rushes up with "the numbers," statistics on how many radio stations are starting to play the just-released LP. Seated in the engineer's booth while Klein introduces him to the studio audience as "a man who should be ashamed, taking money for the kind of life he leads," Buffett draws a photo from his wallet. It's his eleven-week-old daughter, Savannah Jane. "Think I'm in trouble?" he says. "She's just gettin' into yellin' now."

After the taping, I remark to Buffett that most stories about him involved following along on a bar-hopping round. "Yeah," he says, shouldering into an elevator. "And I gotta go home and live with that." We drop back into the limo, drawing fire from one of New York's aggressive panhandlers. "That'd be a wino," Buffett says while pushing a button for the electric plexiglass sunroof, "a wino and a junkie." One of his most-quoted lines, "living my life like a song," is from a song called "The Wino and I Know."

We cross Manhattan at the start of rush hour, interviewing as the blur passes by. Eventually, we're settled in the Hotel Carlyle's calm, costly rooms. "I've always looked for a bar like the one in To Have and Have Not," Buffett says, "where Hoagy Carmichaels' playing piano and there's ceiling fans and Lauren Bacall and Bogart are drinking at the tables. It doesn't exist. But you do find characters on the run down there. That's where I pick up ideas for songs, talking to those people.

Doesn't this mix of socializing, drinking, toking, snorting and sailing wear a body down? "They've been doin' it in the Caribbean for centuries," Buffett says. "It really is a historical fact. You can be healthy and still do it. There's actually nothing else to do. Hell, who can turn down a piña colada when it's eighty degrees on the beach?"

I ask if Klein's opening remark, about taking money for an idyllic-seeming life, bothered him. Still smiling, Buffett flashes an expression that says he's dealt with this one before. "Nobody else was there when it was just me and a rent-a-car, driving to play the Holiday Inns." But the scuffling days are long past. Buffett keeps a home in the islands, another in Aspen, another in Alabama. Euphoria III, now being built, will carry him around the islands in style.

Another line of questioning: When fans identify with a performer, sometimes it forms a trap. They respond to certain elements in the performer's work — say, an emphasis on drunken good times — and ignore other subtleties. "Worst thing you can do is fear your audience," Buffett says, sipping his champagne from a plastic cup. "I don't want to be a shut-in, it's not my personality. I'm playin' for their enjoyment. Oh, they bug me sometimes, sure. I get calls like, 'You wanna just come down for a beer?'" Buffett swirls his eyes around the ceiling. "Hey, Larry, could you get that cap from my suitcase?"

Solters hands him a deckhand's hat from the United States Coast Guard Cutter Diligence, one of the boats assigned to crack the Caribbean smuggling trade. Somebody stole it to make Buffett a gift. "This is the cops and robbers catch boat," he says, striding around the room with the hat on, looking for a mirror. "They paint marijuana leaves on the stack for everyone they bust. They got a big flag they fly when they pop one." Glee is in his eyes. "And you just know every asshole on that boat smokes."

The future involves some writing, though Buffett isn't sure just what it'll turn out to be. "It'll naturally be something funny, with a lot of story. I keep journals, so that'll make it easy. There's somethings I'd like to say that won't fit into three verses and a chorus." Buffett took a screen test for Nashville, but no role resulted. Will he take another shot at film? "It's in the works," he says. "But I can't talk about it yet. I've been offered some things to do, some acting, but I want to wait till it's something comfortable." How much longer will he tour and make albums? "Forever," Buffett asserts. "Long as they buy 'em. That's the thing I do best. I'll never stop."

acts, seeming to say that death is as much a part of life as birth, and there are many more living, so let's concern ourselves with them. Still, it's made particularly clear that the lives of blacks, and minorities in general, aren't worth a nickel. Framing a native for a murder a white has committed is common practice. Life in Africa is hard and cheap.

To make his artistry complete, the author places the action in settings as vivid as his characters. The luxuriant foliage, the rough landscape, the ramshackle bungalows and buildings, all are easily seen with the mind's eye.

African Trio is an immensely readable, masterfully written volume. You'll want to share it with your friends.

A Genuine Heroine

Too many recent novels about women seem to rely solely on females who try to find themselves by careening between their psychiatrists and Bloomingdale's. Burger's Daughter (Viking, $10.95), written by acclaimed South African author Nadine Gordimer, is a welcome exception to that trend and a remarkable accomplishment. She has written a novel with a genuine heroine — one who would be worthy of the morally weighted novels of, say, George Eliot or Edith Wharton. Rosa Burger, unlike many current heroines, doesn't earn her stripes by having the slimmest hips or the fastest dirty mouth or the most acrobatic sexual maneuvers; she becomes a heroine slowly, painfully and reluctantly by exploring the difficult relationship between personal pleasures and moral commitments.

Burger's Daughter is about decisions. It's set in South Africa and deals with apartheid, at least so far as that scandalous rule applies to the Afrikanner Burger family. Rosa is the daughter of two political activists who are willing to die for what they believe. As the child of martyrs who are eulogized throughout the world by those who would see South Africa change, Rosa grows up in a household that takes personal sacrifice for granted the way others may count on milk for growing bones. But Rosa didn't choose her life, she inherited it, the way other children inherit a certain religion or blue eyes. It takes a long time for Rosa, (prophetically named for Rosa Luxemberg) to grow into her heredity.

What makes this book so powerful is that Gordimer never allows her political bias to interfere with her people; she has instead managed the near impossible and meshed them together totally. There are no absolutes in her novel, and she keeps our interest by introducing a myriad of unexpected, but totally possible, plot twists. The ending seems predictable in retrospect but when reading it emerges with valuable shock appeal.

Gordimer's style of writing is not unlike the film vocabulary introduced in the early Sixties by New Wave director Alain Resnais (Last Year in Marienbad and Hiroshima Mon Amour), fragmented and evocative. The book is crammed with memorable characters who lead honest lives. At its simplest level, Burger's Daughter is about the age-old conflict of how to be good to one's self and good to other people. Gordimer's novel makes an eloquent attempt to give us some answers.

Birth control.
Now it's as simple as this.

At last, Encare.®
Neat, compact, no bigger than your fingertip, Encare is fast becoming the most talked about contraceptive we have today.

Free from hormonal side effects, Encare is available without a prescription. And it might well be the easiest method of birth control you will ever use.

Simply simple.
You simply insert Encare with the tip of your finger. There's no iffy measuring, no tubes, no applicators. And no messy paraphernalia to clean up afterward. Each tiny insert contains an exact, premeasured amount of the clinically proven spermicide, nonoxynol 9.

Simply effective.
Very simply, Encare works by neutralizing sperm. When used properly, Encare melts and gently effervesces, spreading within your vagina for protection against pregnancy.

Even under very rigorous testing conditions, Encare's spermicide was found to be highly effective.

Simply safe.
And if you ask your gynecologist about Encare, you'll be reassured to hear that Encare cannot harm your body the way the pill or IUD might.

Which means, you simply won't be worried about those complications.

For maximum protection, it is essential that you read and follow directions carefully and, if indicated, consult your physician. No birth control method is guaranteed to prevent pregnancy.

Birth control, simplified.

Seabrook... Mace-rained, yet few arrests

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

SEABROOK, N.H. — Although anti-nuclear demonstrators failed in their attempt to occupy the Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant this weekend, organizers from UMass are calling the action a success.

"Given the fact it was the first of a series of attempted occupations, I thought it went very well. People stood up really well, but we have a lot to learn -- next time we'll have to do things differently," said Brooke States, an organizer of the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide.

Increased coordination between different groups was needed, one UMass protestor noted. Many agreed vast publicity generated by the event, was beneficial to the anti-nulear movement.

Twenty people were arrested as of 9 a.m. yesterday; none are UMass students. Most of those arrested refused to give their names and are being held in jail on $120 bonds. One demonstrator has been charged with criminal mischief, the rest with criminal trespass. One of those arrested was taken to a hospital for treatment of head injuries and then taken to jail.

An investigation into excessive police force and illegal entry onto private property has been requested by the Seabrook Justice of the Peace, Robert Cushing, Jr., according to a press release Cushing distributed. Cushing is also a co-founder of the Clamshell Alliance, a northeastern anti-nuclear group.

By noon, three major attepts and numerous smaller ones had been halted by law enforcement officials which included state police from Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and New Hampshire, and national guardsmen from New Hampshire.

The afternoon was marked by an attempt to confiscate gas masks from demonstrators, who were forced onto an island by a rising tide. After the tide receeded, the protetors joined hands and walked the length of the fence, while talking with police and singing songs. This was the end of confrontations for the day. The demonstrators retired to plan Sunday's actions.

Sunday morning dawned quietly after a night of wind and rain. The demonstrators spent the morning reading newspapers, meeting with each other, and talking and laughing about what many said was exaggerated press coverage.

Yesterday, area residents joined the protestors, carrying signs and singing songs before police and national guardsmen inside the main gate. This peaceful confrontation sharply contrastd the events of Saturday and Sunday, when police used high-pressured water hoses, Mace, tear gas, night sticks and guard dogs to repel demonstrators.

The weekend's events began Friday evening for the 100 UMass protestors, who spent a sleepless, rainy night on private land adjacent to the construction site.

By 5 a.m. Saturday, an estimated 2,500 protestors were on marshes bordering the plant. About 1,500 of those gathered on the south side of the plant. Helicopters circled the area, observing the protestors.

The protestors wore gas masks and held large plastic sheets to protect other protestors who carried wire or bolt cutters from Mace. Those carrying the tools atempted to tear down a fence surrounding the plant.

About 1 p.m. the demonstrators gathered their belongings and slowly moved onto the railroad tracks separating the campsite and the construction site.

Accompanied by a lone bagpiper as they marched through the woods, the demonstrators moved toward the construc-

SEABROOK, N.H. —A growing number of persistent anti-nuclear demonstrators, after repeatedly failing to take over the Seabrook nuclear power plant, gatheredat the front gate yesterday in a revised plan to keep workers from re-entering the construction site.

However, construction workers had the Columbus Day weekend off and were not to return to work until today.

By noon, hundreds of demonstrators either peacefully walked a picket line carrying anti-nuclear power signs or blocked the gate as state troopers and National Guardsmen stood ready on the other side.

Additional groups including about 30 "Amesbury (Mass.) Parents Against Nukes" — many pushing baby carriages — joined the estimated 800 who remained from the assaults on the 140-acre construction site during the weekend.

More than 500 helmeted state troopers and national guardsmen — the largest show of force in the five years of protests at the plant, used tear gas, Mace, riot clubs and dogs to thwart numerous attempts by as many as 1,500 demonstrators to cut or pull down the fence encircling the construction site.

But by Monday afternoon, demonstrators apparently had given up their plan to occupy the coastal plant site and instead talked about preventing plant workers from entering the area.

Several demonstrators who camped three nights in the nearby woods through three days of intermittent rain, said reinforcements were coming from anti-nuclear groups in Maine and the Boston area.

"We're not going to go in in large masses over the next few days," said a protester identfied only as Keith, from Boston. "But we are going to try to continue ... things to make sure that the police have to stay at the site for a longer period of time."

Only one attempt was made Monday morning to breach the 8-foot-high chain link fence. About 15 demonstrators managed to cut away a large section of the fence, but were chased off by troopers in a brief encounter.

Dead birds riddle campus

By PETER SMERDON
Collegian Staff

At this time of year at UMass it is not only leaves which are dying and falling off trees, but also various wild birds. Several students show that in the past few weeks considerable numbers of pigeons, starlings and warblers are dying on campus from a cause or causes which, as yet, remain unclear.

Sharon Finn, a former vetinary assistant and now an Animal Science major, found a very sick pigeon outside the Morrill Science Library two weeks ago. "It was a young bird, all huddled up in a lot of pain, which couldn't move," she said.

Maureen Sullivan, a sophomore English and journalism major, said that in the past week she discovered three dead starlings around the Student Union Building.

Yesterday, a Collegian reporter spotted approximately 20 dead warblers lying near Draper Hall and three in front of Machmer Hall.

John Ward, a senior Botany major, discovered a sick pigeon in front of Fernald Hall last Tuesday. "It was pretty well gone," he said. "It was breathing, but lying there. It's feathers were ruffled...but it did not look as if it had been attacked.

Geoffrey Macduff said he saw some dead pigeons outside the Fine Arts Center last week, as well as one outside the Stockbridge School of Agriculture. Samnuel Santa, a psychology major, said he found a pigeon in front of Machmer Hall. "It was lying there," he said, "unable to move, but still alive. It was very sick."

Late last month outside the Morrill Science Building the same reporter found a young pigeon flapping around on the ground, although it appeared to be physically unharmed. After about twenty five minutes however, mucous and then blood appeared around its bill. Its body shook with periodic spasms, but these lessened as the bird seemed to become completely paralysed. Finally, in order to end its misery, the reporter broke its neck.

Botany Professor Howard E. Bigelow said he recently saw two sick pigeons around

Finances divide Congress

WASHINGTON (AP)— With much of the federal government technically broke and government paydays fast approaching, Congress begins searching today for a solution to the internal dispute that has blocked approval of new financing.

The House Appropriations Committee scheduled a meeting this afternoon to decide how to resolve its continuing battle with the Senate over the controversial issues of a congressional pay raise and government financing of abortions.

The House and Senate have been unable to agree on those provisions, which were attached to an emergency money bill needed to keep the government fully functioning after the new fiscal year began last Monday.

As a result of the impasse, several major government departments are struggling by on funds left over from the previous fiscal year.

Soviet seeks U.S. asylum

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)— A young Soviet naval engineering student jumped ship at the Tampa phosphate docks to seek asylum in the United States, the FBI says.

Igor Aleksandrovich Ponomarenko, 19, a student at the Soviet Naval Engineering Institute, showed up Sunday in Brooksville, 45 miles north of Tampa, seeking asylum, said Phil McNiff, head of the Tampa FBI office.

Ponomarenko apparently was a seaman aboard the Russian phosphate freighter Alexander Grin when he jumped ship at Tampa's port Tuesday, McNiff said.

The FBI notified the State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service about the asylum request, and State Department personnel contacted the Soviet Embassy in Washington, McNiff said.

The Soviet Union has been hit with a recent series of defections in cultural areas.

Water supply threatened says study of N. East pipes

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON AP — Aging underground pipes threaten "serious and costly" water supply problems for Northeastern cities chronically short of repair money, a study released Monday concludes.

Government officials in 11 states, including New England, banded together as the Consortium of Northeastern Organizations, sponsored the study. It said $25 billion or more would be needed to modernize and expand supply systems, bring sewage treatment up to federal standards, safely dispose of hazardous waste and complete other water projects in their states.

Hoping to divert the flow of federal water money to their region, the officials noted the study's conclusion that lack of concerted pressure "has meant that national policies have been skewed in favor of the claims pressed by other regions."

"Our national water policies have failed to address many of the region's most important needs, such as rehabilitation and maintenance of water-supply systems," said Rep. Robert Edgar,(D-Pa.), in a statement released along with the study.

"The situation could get every bit as bad as the energy crisis if we're not prepared to take aggressive, positive steps," said Edgar, chairman of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, one of seven groups in the consortium.

"It's not an immediate crisis situation," reporters were told earlier by Robert Grossman, president of the Nova Institute which did the study.

But Grossman said many cities have been "living off past capital. We've not been maintaining our water systems; we've not been replacing them."

The study uses lists of water projects planned, already begun or considered necessary by officials of many cities in the 11 states, but it gives few details of system conditions in those cities and states.

It does note substantial leakage problems in Boston's water supply system and reports of need for supply expansion in Pittsburgh, Washington, New York and Providence, R.I.

Authors of the study suggest "re-thinking" of the need for strict federal sewage treatment rules which they estimate will cost the region about $5.3 billion. And Grossman said it is clear that much of the rest of the $25 billion "is going to have to be put up by the localities or states of the Northeast."

But lawmakers drawing attention to the report, including Rep. Silvio Conte,(R-Mass.), are already using it to support arguments that their region needs outside help.

Many Northeastern cities, Conte said, "simply lack the financial resources to mount an effective program of preventive medicine to protect their supplies of water." And at present, he added, "virtually no federal aid is available to help them upgrade water systems."

Landscape plan shown at Herter

By JENNIFER YODER
Collegian Staff

A proposal of a newly-landscaped parking area in front of the Student Union Building is on display at the Herter Gallery until Oct. 12.

The UMass campus may be in for a low-cost beauty treatment.

A minimal-cost landscape improvement plan has been proposed by the administration by Ben Fieman, who was hired last year as director of the three-year-old Campus Landscape Project. A visual presentation of Fieman's project can be seen until Oct. 12 at Herter Gallery, from 1:30 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The project, developed by the UMass planning office and Department of Landscape Architecture, was designed to improve the campus aesthetically and functionally. Fieman's proposed action would include transplanting trees and clearing pedestrian pathways of traffic.

"This would be a coordinated effort -- the pooling together of our academic abilities and our available resources to gradually reach a final product," Fieman said. The response of the administration and students will largely determine whether or not the plan is carried out, he said.

"If the academic departments concerned with landscape architecture, arboriculture, horticulture, park management and turf management were involved in the grounds program, our campus would look better while providing a 'hands-on' experience for students in those programs," Fieman said.

"The re-routing of unnecessary vehicles from the pedestrian pathways to the back door entrances would improve the looks and function of the campus without costing a dime," Fieman added.

Fieman recommended that Physical Plant funds and equipment be used for the project, and suggested the project be undertaken gradually, beginning with the transplantation of trees to sites where they are needed to direct pathways or mark entrances. Former plant nurseries, he suggested, could be renovated so the University could grow its own trees, and sewage sludge from a nearby treatment plant could be converted into rich topsoil for landscaping.

When asked if the addition of trees might provide rapists with added hiding places, Fieman said, "It is true that trees are concealing things, but if the trees are arranged in anaesthetically appealing way, and more people are encouraged to move in and out of the area, the popularity and liveliness of it will reduce the chances of crime."

Fieman said he hopes to discuss the added trees with the Everywoman's Center. The center could not be reached for comment last night. Lack of funds has prohibited UMass landscape developments in the recent past, Fieman said.

"The most significant action has been the creation of my job," he said.

But Fieman said he is greatly encouraged by Chancellor Henry Koffler's and President David C. Knapp's positive response to the proposal. "What they'll do remains to be seen. There has been no action vet, but true interest from high levels," he said.

Simon's play— made 'em laugh

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Popular playwright Neil Simon's romantic comedy, "Chapter Two," delighted a capacity audience at the Fine Arts Concert Hall Thursday night.

Review

While Simon could be accused of not creating profound theater, he has few contemporaries that match his ability to make us laugh.

Although it may be unrealistic to believe people are as witty as Simon presents them to us, for an evening of light humor, "Chapter Two," along with the rest of Simon's plays are your best choice.

George Schneider (David Faulkner), the play's central character is a confused, straight-laced novelist grieving over the death of his wife of 12 years. His meddling brother Leo (Donald Gantry) urges George to enter the dating scene and George immediately falls in love with Leo's first successful match, Jenny Malone (Dawn Wells), a divorced actress.

While not Faulkner's fault, his character George sounded like a joke machine. It was difficult to feel sympathy for this cardboard representation of a man, although he was placed in a compelling situation.

Wells, best known for her portrayal of Mary-Ann in the television series "Gilligan's Island," appeared to be re-creating Mary-Ann at the outset, as she played Jenny. Yet, in the second act, the better written of the two, Wells was able to develop Jenny into a well-rounded, caring woman.

The supporting actors, Jenny's best friend, Faye (Kathleen Gaffney), and Gantry sensitively play a couple who unsuccessfully attempt an extra marital affair.

While the script contains all of the usual Simon flaws, such as an overabundance of one-liners and a theme not deeply enough explored, most of us left the theater warmed by the typical happy ending, and pleased by an evening of contemporary humor.

Alda's film: politics and romance

By DIANE CLEHANE
Collegian Staff

Alan Alda, of television's MASH brings the same intelligence, wit, and biting satirical dialogue found in his television show to his new movie, The Seduction of Joe Tynan, a story about temptation for political and sexual games.

Joe Tynan, a driven, hardworking, ambitious state senator from New York, gains backing for the presidential nomination after opposing the appointment of a racist candidate to the Supreme Court. But his life extends beyond political glory -- his personal life is in turmoil.

His long-suffering wife, played brilliantly by Barbara Harris, calls Tynan a "decent guy who is in politics -- not a politician." While the film's attempt at examining the Washington political scene is somewhat sketchy, the politics of marriage are examined in much more depth. The film's most touching scenes are those in which Alda makes several unsuccessful attempts to reach his family through what he thinks is a family discussion but is perceived by his children as a lecture.

The difference between his two worlds is even more apparent when Tynan meets an equally brilliant and ambitious lady lawyer played by Meryl Streep. They are seduced by each other's drive toward attaining power. Here the film examines how politics becomes an individual quest for attainment rather than an acquisition of power to help the public.

The film's most humorous scenes are those between Alda and Streep. Their brief stint at a resort parodies the pitfalls of fame in every way possible, and is touching and humane as well.

Charicatures such as a hard-boiled patriarchal senator and a mindless girlchaser, both Tynan's colleagues, sharply contrast his laid-back attitude. Tynan continues to operate as an uncorrupted political figure while his colleagues are swallowed by the Washington ratrace.

Screenwriter Alda uses every political cliche the American political system has come to represent. The film's climax parodies the ultimate soap opera cliche -- at a fundraiser, Tynan, his wife and mistress meet in a scene that is destined to become one of this year's most memorable.

In the final moments of the film we come to realize that this man has had an affair, neglected his family, become a "politician," and he is still a hero.

The Seduction of Joe Tynan raises some important questions but unfortunately offers only the simplest of solutions. Will he be thoroughly corrupted by the system? Will he keep his promises to his family? Will they ever fully trust in him again? The audience is left hanging and unsatisfied. In the tradition of both The Graduate and The Candidate, the finale is brilliant in parts but curiously uneven as a whole. Yet what makes this still a good film is its humanistic approach to the life of a man who is a sincere and dedicated politician against all odds.

British singer arrives

By BRETT MILANO
Collegian Staff

Mentioning Robin Williamson, many think of the television star of Mork and Mindy, but actually Williamson is a British musician who brought his talents to Amherst this weekend.

British traditional music is still largely underrated in this country, although a number of rock artists who draw from it—most notably Jethro Tull and Al Stewart—manage to hold their audiences. But Williamson operates at a slight disadvantage, since he records for a small label (Flying Fish) and makes few concessions to the rock mainstream except emerging recently for a guest appearance on Van Morrison's new album.

Williamson was part of the Incredible String Band, a creative and eclectic group which lasted for nearly ten years before disbanding in 1974. His new group, the Merry Band, stays closer to traditional music than the ISB did, but shows equal creativity. With a new album just released and a tour underway, the American audience now has another chance to discover their music.

Williamson and the Merry Band performed for a small crowd at Amherst College Saturday night and their two sets were received well—each one displaying a different musical focus. Four musicians shared instruments—harp, fiddle, guitar, mandolin, flute, whistles, organ, concertina—and played some unusual instrumental combinations. The first set spotlighted experimental music and the highlight here was an extended piece called "Five Denials on Merlin's Grave" with lyrics based on Celtic folklore. The piece skillfully integrated music and poetry, and Williamson's delivery proved him to be a master storyteller. Also in the first set were a few ballads, and a lovely solo performed by bandmember Sylvia Woods on the Celtic harp.

In the second set, the atmosphere became more festive. Songs were interspersed with pieces of exuberant dance music and the set closed with a wonderfully silly audience singalong.

Notable throughout the concert was the absence of any Incredible String Band material. Williamson is not making a career out of rehashing his past, and his songs prove he has no need to do so. The band's new album, A Glint at the Kindling, is its third LP. It contains most of the songs from Saturday's concert, including "Five Denials" in its entirety. The band has become more unified and no longer uses outside musicians. There are no bass or drums and the instrumentation is strictly acoustic, but the band generates enough power on its own. Musical influences range from Baroque to rock. Many of Williamson's lyrics deal with childhood memories, told with humor and perception. There's a few pastoral ballads and some more of the medieval dance music at which the band excels.

If you missed the concert and can not wait until next year to see them again, their new album is well suited for autumn merrymaking.

Christian thrills MHC crowd

By SHERI SIMONTON
Collegian Staff

A capacity crowd of 1,200 enthusiastic women filled Chapin Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College Friday night to hear feminist composer and singer Meg Christian.

Applause and cheering as Christian stepped on stage was deafening and throughout the concert Christian's music seemed to generate a rising feeling of unity and spirit among the women present.

Christian's repetoire included a wide range of songs, spanning her past ten years as a soloist-folk-guitarist reflecting feminist's attitudes. Her music greatly reflects her growth as a person as well as the evolution of the feminist and lesbian movements. Christian told the audience she strives to maintain a balance between the artistic quality of her music and its political message. This quality was evident throughout the performance.

Christian's music expressed the more personal aspects of many current political and social problems—especially lesbianism, sexism and alcoholism. The moods of her songs range from poignant, nostalgic reminiscence to joyous celebration. Several songs describe her gradual struggle to accept herself, as an individual and a lesbian. Christian's lyrics often humourously parody society's views and treatment of homosexuals and lesbians.

One particularly moving song describes Christian's fight with alcoholism in 1977. In it she captures her feelings of the initial denial, struggle, gradual acceptance of her illness and the support of the women in the alcoholic center who helped her to recover.

Christian also has a special talent of interacting with her audience and creating a sense of rapport. Many times during the evening, listeners sang with Christian and provided harmony while stomping their feet and clapping hands to the rhythym of her music. Christian truly evoked the sense of unity which she seeks to inspire through her music. At the end of the concert Christian received a long, thunderous standing ovation from everyone in the audience and she responded with two encores.

Archaic laws for gays stink: must alter them

Jim Moran

The $40,000 civil suit being filed in Hampshire District Court by two UMass men – Byron Canney and Bruce Goodchild, on charges that the Quonset Disco in Hadley discriminated against them because they were dancing together, raises some interesting questions about not only our pre-conceived levels of "acceptable" social behavior, but also about the implied ramifications this case will have upon the gay rights movement in the United States and the religious ethics connected with them.

Our society is one which is strongly influenced by the Judeo-Christian values of hard work, family-oriented upbringings, and pre-occupation with social scrutiny. Whether or not we adhere to a particular denomination, or even practice religious tenets if we do "believe" is negligable. The fact remains that our educational systems, our workplaces and our laws are laced with theological mores. The mere thought of a homosexual act is frowned upon because of this. We are, like it or not, the lab animals in a sort-of Pavlovian test of Puritanical conditioning.

Massachusetts has a rather interesting set of laws, based on this Puritanical influence, coming under the guise of Chapter 262 of the Commonwealth's General Laws. Written in 1624, and not updated since, these darling little dirties of decency serve to technically outlaw any form of sex outside of marriage. Indeed, even within the confines of a legally-approved marital bond, sex is only legal when it is conducive to procreation. All other "extracurricular actvities" are deemed "lewd, lascivious and improper." And those "abominable and unnatural acts" of bi and homosexuality are the worst of the lot, getting you up to 20 years in the thinktank, and hundred-dollar fines. Realistically, these laws are not used to arrest people for cohabitation or for having children out of wedlock, but these laws are the basis for the arrest of homosexuals in certain instances. When police bust a gay bar, or in entrapment situations, such as the 1978 incidents on Interstate 91 and at the Boston Public Library, these laws are enforced "discretionally." When laws are used to persecute certain segments of society and not others, then something is wrong with those laws and the people who enforce them.

Strange Encounter of the First Term

Yet, our laws still reflect intolerance of homosexuality. Last year, the Massachusetts legislature voted down three bills in the gay rights "package." One would have prohibited discrimination in public sector, such as government jobs and housing. Another would have prevented discrimination in private sectors, such as banking, credit, employment and housing. The third piece of legislation, the so-called "consenting adults bill" would have repealed the state's archaic sex laws. None of these measures would have granted special privileges, no Affirmative Action or quotas. Uncle Sam is not or should not be welcome guest in anyone's bedroom. That's the whole point of gay legislation. A gay or lesbian does not need a law to get a job. Rather, the problem is to be kept from losing one's job when you are "found out." Gay rights is based upon the premise of equal rights and fair application of the laws under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The case of Canney-Goodchild has the potential to become a test case for gay rights. It could be the impetus for the passing of laws which have, heretofore, failed to pass state legislatures. The courageous actions of these two men, who chose to protest attitudes which prevent human beings from showing their affectional preference, by dancing together as an integrating force at a "straight" nightclub, is the modern-day equivilent of Rosa Parks' defiance of the segregatory laws of the South in the 1950's. Figuratively, Canney and Goodchild "sat at the front of the bus." This case can serve as a binding force for gays around the nation, and as a rallying point for the future of civil rights movements. I urge all people, gay or not, to join the National Gay and Lesbian March on Washington to be held October 14th.

And for those of you who are still too "moral" to stop sanctionized oppression against homosexuals, I submit that Anita Bryant sells orange juice very well. But when you listen to her views on anything but oranges, then aren't you being the real fruits?

SUPE needs student input

To the Editor

Why is the library falling apart? Because the government of the state of Massachusetts isn't interested in providing quality public higher education for it's citizens. In your wildest dreams can you imagine this happening at an Ivy League school?

The library isn't our only problem. Faulty design and construction and deferred maintainance plague many buildings on campus. Our ten million dollar hating plant closed within months of it's opening. Walk by the coffee shop and look at the diplay of our crumbling campus center garage. Twenty million dollars is needed to repair deteriorating living facilities on campus.

Faculty members teach in leaky, overcrowded classrooms. Requirements are next to impossible to fulfill due to lack of classroom space and understaffed departments.

Students United for Public Education has been organizing students at UMass and Westfield State for the past few years to fight for quality education. On Wednesday October 10 at 8 p.m. in Machmer E-37 S.U.P.E. will hold a meeting for all students who are interested in working with us for the following program on the library:

1. We demand the provision of well lit, quiet study areas. Worcestor Dining Commons does not meet our needs. The same goes for Hampden Student Center. The University must immediately renovate these and other areas.

2. We demand full access to books and research materials be guaranteed to undergraduates as well as graduate students and faculty.

3. We demand that the administration immediately provide full information regarding the nature of the library problem and further that no decisions be made without consulting those who the decisions affect: students, university workers, librarians and faculty.

Bagli's story needs work

To the Editor

When I finished reading Charles Bagli's column on the administration trying to "take over" the RSO office I didn't know whether to laugh or cry. After thinking about it I decided instead to write a letter to the editor and cry foul.

I know this about the SGA:

– Since I came to UMass the SGA tax has gone up 50% and I feel that I'm getting less for it now than I did three years ago. This is because of the corruption and patronage in the SGA.

– One Treasurer of the SGA was being paid from three different (one was CETA) accounts and was making $10,000. He was caught using SGA cars for his summer vacation, but avoided prosecution.

– The next Treasurer put his brother on payroll.

– The next Treasurer was involved in the creation of the Record Co-op. This is very good except the Co-op had thousands of dollars stolen from it by some people who worked there.

– The Speaker of the Senate was convicted in court of calling Hawaii more than 50 times and charging it to the students. This same person was later convicted in court of driving a car registered in N.H. and paying no insurance when he lived in Massachusetts.

– The President of the SGA resigned after getting caught stealing from the Campus Center Store.

– The last Treasurer of the SGA admitted to stuffing ballot boxes in an election and resigned after he was caught stealing $2000 from the SGA.

By their own mismanagement they got us into this mess because of their greed and inability to manage the budget (it's their deficit). Bagli, who gets paid by the SGA and whose RSO group is funded by this same group of thieves should stop lying to us about how bad the administration is. I think that his main fear is that Field, Madson and Daniels may be honest.

God forbid that honest people should watch over the SGA money.

Anne Cohen

Dear Gov. King, would you read this letter?

Christopher H. Schmitt

[Following is the text of a letter to Gov. Edward J. King]

Things are not so good here, Governor King. Class sizes are soaring, course offerings are shrinking, tuition and fees are beginning the first step in a series of climbs, much of the University is literally crumbling around us, and more importantly, students are growing increasingly dissatisfied with their life and education at UMass.

But there appears an even more disturbing trend we notice: We sense there to be a complacency, and indeed a disregard, on the part of your administration, the Legislature, and particularly yourself, to our problems.

If these trends are not arrested soon, and some action not taken, this flagship of public education in the Commonwealth is destined to suffer future and more devastating cutbacks in quality and service. As newly-appointed Chancellor Henry Koffler remarked recently to your secretary of education, Charles Johnson, UMass "has been underfunded from the start," and that current funding is a "very disturbing situation."

Let us delve into some examples of the decay we see. All about us, more and more students seek to crowd into fewer and fewer classes. In the Economics department, now among one of the more popular departments here, hundreds of students cannot get into classes they want because there are not enough professors. What classes there are swell in size until, say, a 10 person seminar becomes useless with a class roster of 30 students.

Introductory courses in large lecture halls now routinely have more than 300 people enrolled. Seats are filled, that is those not broken, and bodies spill into the aisles.

The entire University experience is more draining and offers the student less. Psychological and emotional energy is sapped as we first experience, then begrudgingly "accept," what has happened and been forced upon us.

We see campus buildings that have not been repaired in years. Buildings that are reaching the point where they can no longer accomodate the needs placed upon them under the conditions they are in. A consultant's report a year-and-a-half ago listed nearly $20 million in renovations that needed to be done to halt the crumble of our campus.

As Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said then, "Every university in the country is facing the problem of deferred maintenance." But such statements help us not at all. Something needs to be done, Gov. King.

What is needed is a fundamental change in thinking about public higher education in Massachusetts. Quality, low-cost education for citizens of the Commonwealth needs to be afforded the high place in society it deserves.

What is needed is a philosophy like those evident in other state universities, particularly in the Midwest. There, public higher education is a priority, and is a committment people turn to first. It reflects a deeper committment to education -- and its importance in society -- than you or your administration appear to exhibit.

The change is needed now, before conditions irrevocably deteriorate. Look upon the reordering of spending and priorities as an investment, one that will return dividends later.

It'll be well worth the price.

[Christopher H. Schmitt is the Managing Editor of the Collegian].

Our cost: Penny & a half

This makes cents

Carol Rosenberg

Imagine UMass without a daily student newspaper.

Try to picture waking up in the morning, going to the dining commons, and not being able to pick up yesterday's sports scores or finding out what Ted Kennedy said last night.

Imagine a city without a daily.

A city without a newspaper is paralyzed.

The Collegian faces a cut in its budget this week which could effectively change the substance and quality of the paper.

The Undergraduate Student Senate proposes to cut the Collegian's current operational budget based on a history of financial problems. Yes, there have been problems. In years gone by, the Collegian has burdened the students with a deficit of astronomic proportion.

The Senate proposes to take from the Collegian to help pay off that deficit. That rationale is devoid of certain facts.

Fact: The Collegian has made some serious monetary mistakes in the past and we are now paying for them dearly as well as the entire structure of student funded groups.

Fact: The Collegian will not add to that deficit, but the Collegian needs the funds to operate on a break-even basis.

From their Student Activities Tax, the students pay one and a half cents a day for the Collegian. A penny and a half a day, $1.11 a semester, $2.22 annually, for national and international news, for local news coverage, for sports scores and concert reviews.

They pay for dining commons and earthfoods menus, for a forum of opinion, feedback and complaints, for student talents and training, for Gary Trudeau and the Duke, for a community calender and for Tom Oliphant.

You, the students are paying one and a half cents for a daily crossword puzzle; a market for local and national advertisers; for a knowledge of the issues on campus which can be covered no where else.

You're paying for an exclusive interview with Jane Fonda and a UMass student's coverage of an occupation at the Seabrook Nuclear plant.

Fact: The Collegian will continue to be a daily. For without a daily on this campus, we could lose our identity. UMass is a city and without a daily a city is paralyzed.

The Collegian, New England's largest college daily, could start sliding with this budget cut and never stop.

Fact: According to a 1979 campus survey, half of UMass relies on the Collegian five days a week, and almost three-quarters of the campus reads the Collegian a minimum of four days a week.

The Collegian is a daily newspaper. It will remain a daily newspaper. That's what the students want and that's what they'll receive.

The Collegian is the one common form of education to a campus of 23,000 students.

Fact: The Collegian is an important training ground for almost 200 undergraduates in an ever-expanding staff.

This campus' daily faces a serious threat this week. A newspaper, often considered the "watchdog of government," could be seriously cut by the very organization which we are supposed to be watching.

Carol Rosenberg is the Collegian's Editor-in-Chief.

Field to Bagli: Sorry Charlie

Field's response to Bagli's column

I can accept the fact that Charles Bagli as a Collegian columnist is entitled to any opinion he may choose to hold, no matter how fanciful. However, I must object to the statements which he has expressed concerning me which are based either on ignorance or deceit.

I presume Mr. Bagli has been provided information by some unkown student politician which he has chose to accept as fact, rather than contacting me, examining the record, or questioning any of the many persons who are familiar with the problems which permeate the finances of Student Government on campus.

My position is exactly opposite that assigned to me by Mr. Bagli: I do, in fact, feel that Student Government should fight tuition increases with all the resources at their command; I do believe that Student Government should do everything in its power to improve the quality of education; and I continue my support for the G core, Human Awareness courses. Mr. Bagli's allegation that I am "in favor of parties and films as bread and butter issues" is simply untrue and is refutable by anyone with a modicum of intelligence who would spend even a moment examining the issues.

It is also true that I am deeply concerned that financial records of Student Government and procedures of the Recognized Student Organizations have been sadly inadequate to prevent deficit expenditures which now impact on many different student organizations. This year, every undergraduate will pay $5.70 to pay off deficits which developed during the past years. A deficit here means that money which didn't exist was spent improperly by some individual. The deficit is so large, in fact, that next year another $5.70 per student will be required.

Mr. Bagli is concerned that certain student businesses may not be allowed to spend money which they do not have in anticipation of revenue that may eventually come to them. One of the businesses which enjoyed this privilege last year turned out, in an audit conducted less than a year after the start of the business, to have lost $20,000 which could not be accounted for.

The Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co., the certified public accountants who examined the RSO records, stated that the "audit procedures performed disclosed a high rate of non-compliance regarding prescribed internal control features designed to document and ensure the propriety of charges to individual Recognized Student Organizations." This statement means simply that it was not possible, because of violations of regulations, to account for a high proportion of expenditures through the organizations which Mr. Bagli seeks to defend.

This is not an argument between administrators and student organizations. Both are responsible for procedures which are inadequate to properly protect the dollars paid by every undergraduate student. The important thing, at this point in time, is to see to it that every dollar collected from students for their student activities fee is properly accounted for and is easily and publicly reviewable by any student at any time. We have reached a point in time where complex fund transfers and confused accounting processes which cover deficits running in the hundreds of thousands of dollars can simply no longer be permitted.

If Mr. Bagli would like to have his unknown source meet with me at any time to debate these issues or to examine the facts in the case, I would be delighted.

Cuban missile controversy a political ploy, not a real danger to security

Elved Owens

Whilst it's obvious that President Carter isn't without his problems -- his collapse in front of millions during a run, allegations of drug-taking against his closest aides and the extraordinary attack on his canoe by a giant rabbit -- it's ironical that two major headaches, Senator Kennedy's challenge for the Democratic nomination and the threat posed to SALT ratification by the Cuban controversy should coincide. Any President who has to deal with Cuba is fortunate not to have a Kennedy hovering in the wings. Carter isn't that fortunate.

Many unflattering parallels are being drawn between the handling of the Cuban missile crisis of 1962, and that of the present Cuban controversy, even though such parallels are unwarrented. In 1962 John Kennedy decided that he would not tolerate Soviet missiles on Cuba, and he engaged in frightening brinkmanship which fortunately paid off. The fact that Kruschev's gamble didn't pay off meant that from then on his days were numbered.

In the light of his success one can only admire the way Kennedy handled the affair which was made dramatic not merely by the high stakes involved, but by the crucial time factor. Kennedy had to decide on invasion or blockade before the Soviet missiles were made operational; if he stalled, the missiles would be ready and he would be in a far worse bargaining position. That is what conventional wisdom says anyway; it is also true that because of the almighty shock Kennedy's actions had given to Kruschev the latter didn't press arguments about U.S. missile sites in Turkey. These missiles were obsolete, and Kennedy was furious to learn during the crisis that the orders he had given on coming to office for their removal had not been implemented.

Agreeing to remove albeit obsolete missiles would have made the U.S. look as if it was dancing to a Russian tune; and such missile trading would have meant that the Soviets would have got out of the affair with respectable face (And they don't even have to worry about being elected).

In the event, they were given a public whipping.

Many factors influenced Kennedy's response to the Cuban missiles. Doubtless he found the threat such missiles posed, 90 miles off the coast, genuinely intolerable. But one can't forget for a long time the twin spectres of Cuba and Kruschev had haunted Kennedy, both politically and personally. Cuba had been the scene of one of his administration's greatest disasters, the incompetent Bay of Pigs invasion, over which Kennedy swore, rather late in the day, never to trust the military or the CIA again. And during the sombre Vienna summit which Kennedy and Kruschev had concluded, the latter teased and taunted Kennedy, creating the impression that he regarded the American President as young and naive, a political lightweight.

Kennedy was eager for the first opportunity to prove him wrong; no President, certainly no Kennedy, likes to be taken lightly.

Given the assumption (and it is an assumption some would not accept) that the circumstances warranted action, Kennedy handled the crisis brilliantly; although he did force the issue to such an extent that if Kruschev had not had the sense to abandon his pride and back down (gestures of which Kennedys are made, from birth, to be incapable) we would probably not be here today. Such are the stakes when policy is impelled by crisis.

It is one of those situations when the President is almost forced to act, not because the circumstances necessarily demand action, but because the costs of inaction for the Presidential image will be too great. Possibly, if Carter had responded to the first questions concerning Soviet troops in Cuba by confidently emphasising that there is nothing dramatically new about this force he could have successfully contained the issue. But the impression already created that the intelligence people were only recently aware of the exact nature of the troops (and they do differ slightly from previous contingents) has meant that such an answer would look merely complacent. And there is too much capital to be made by Carter's enemies for him to be given such leeway. So he is forced into the position of making some kind of gesture, which is what Monday's telecast represented. No one was surprised that Carter did little more than try to reassure and clarify, and pour oil on the troubled waters that are threatening to drown the already soggy SALT treaty.

As is becoming the rule, Carter's image is the first casualty. He probably gazes wishfully at the rising stock of Senator Kennedy, hoping either that some disaster could make it stall (it is too soon to call Chappaquiddick a dead issue), or that he could appropriate some of that effortless prestige himself. Not only does Kennedy represent the death blow to Carter's nomination chances, but he is also the embodiment of a romantic image of leadership with which it is hard for amiable peanut farmers to compete.

The fact that the present Cuban controversy is not the Cuban missile crisis will be lost on most voters, but many will be noting, despite the irrelevance of such comparisons, that Carter just isn't JFK.

And for the moment, at least, they will conveniently forget that Teddy Kennedy isn't JFK either.

PLO violence expected mayor says

BOSTON (AP)— The Palestinian mayor of Hebron on the occupied West Bank says "I don't believe the PLO will accept the advice of (the Rev. Jesse) Jackson to adopt non-violence."

And Mayor Fahd Kawasmeh predicts continued terrorism against Israel "until we get our aims."

Addressing a meeting sponsored by the Palestine Human Rights Campaign, Kawasmeh endorsed both the Palestine Liberation Organization and continued terrorism against both civilian and military targets in Israel.

"No one can say if a people is struggling for its human rights they are terrorists," he said Sunday. "The PLO is the representative of the Palestinian people — both inside and outside (the occupied territories)."

Jackson, the Chicago-based black civil rights leader, conferred with PLO leader Yasser Arafat in the Mideast last week in a series of highly publicized meetings.

Kawasmeh told the group of about 300, including many Arab students from Boston universities, that he is traveling in the U.S. on a Jordanian passport, meeting with American black leaders, including Rep. Mel King, D-Boston.

The 40-year-old former Director of Agricultural Science for the West Bank charged that Israeli occupation authorities are starting to "change the topography and geography" of the West Bank in order to annex it.

He charged that for six months he has been unable to obtain permission from Israeli authorities to start work on a badly needed water well for Hebron and has also been denied permission to construct an electric power station.

Kawasmeh said he would accept the existence of a Jewish state if the PLO gained control of the West Bank and Gaza, claiming he "accepts human rights and peace for Israel."

But "they don't really want peace," he said of Israel. "They want more land and bloodshed."

Spanish film festival showing at Smith

As part of a two-week Spanish film festival, two films will be shown at Smith College this week at 7:30 at Sage Hall at the end of Green St. Tonight, "La Cuitat Cremada," (The Burnt City), will be screened. The film depicts the aftermath of the Cuban Colonial disaster in 1898 to the uprising in Barcelonia in 1909.

"La Prima Angelica," (Cousin Angelica) will be shown tomorrow. The film focuses on a man returning to a Castillian town to relive the Civil War and his childhood romance.

Music workshops offered at Amherst

Free music workshops are being offered by the Music Department and the Music of the Whole Earth Program at Amherst College Mondays from 4-5 pm in the college's Music Center.

A Javanese gamelan will meet and the instruments of the gamelan — a variety of gongs, chimes, and xylophones — are loan from the collection of Harrison Parker.

Every Wednesday from 4-5 p.m. at the center, a workshop on Indian music will meet. At the same time, for a small fee, a workshop in Bharata Natyam, a classical dance style from India, will be taught by Sujatha Sastri.

The workshops are open to the public and no musical background is necessary.

Slides and lecture tells Indian histroy

There will be a slide and lecture presentation tonight at 7:30 at the Jones Library in Amherst. Buddha's Mahapari Nirvana, depicting the events occurring after the death of the Sakamuni Buddha, will be shown.

Art exhibit opens at Amherst College

An opening reception will be held from 4 to 6 today at the Mead Art Museum at Amherst College for the college's first exhibition this semester.

Titled "Background to Modernism: Prints and Drawings, 1889-1906," the exhibition features prints, drawings, and illustrated books and periodicals of the late 19th century and includes works by Munch, Beardsley, Pisarro, Signac, Vallotton and Denis.

On display until Nov. 19, the exhibition was drawn from collections from the museum, the Smith College Museum of Art, the Fogg Museum, Harvard University, the Yale University Art Gallery, the Boston Public Library, Rutgers University and several private collections.

Hampshire College features jazz

A free jazz concert tonight at 8 in the Robert Crown Center at Hampshire College will feature Buster Williams, Freddi Waits and Kenny Barron.

Another free jazz concert will be held tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium and will feature a solo by saxophonist Jake Epstein of the Epstein-Faulkner Quintet.

Collegian news staff meets in CC tonight

There is a Collegian News staff meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Collegian offices in the Campus Center. Story assignments, beats and deadlines will be discussed. This meeting is mandatory for persons wishing to write news for the Collegian this semester.

Latin American art displayed at Smith

A new exhibition is on view at the Smith College Museum of Art in the Selma Erving Gallery, from now until Oct. 14 and from Nov. 30 to Dec. 21. The exhibition, "Latin-American Art from the Collections" features paintings, prints, photographs and objects from Mexico, Brazil, Peru, Columbia and Venezuela.

Hours are Tues. - Sat., 11 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.; and Sun., 2 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Conn. River problem to be tackled tonight

The Connecticut River Committee of MassPIRG, a consumer advocate program group, is scheduled to meet tonight at 7:30 in room 423B in the Student Union Building to discuss strategies of public education and legislation concerning the proposed diversion of the river through Northfield. Hazardous wastes in groundwater and water conservation will also be discussed.

Student Health Board to discuss viewpoints

The Student Health Advisory Board will meet today in the Employees Lounge of the University Health Services at 6:30 p.m. The board is composed of undergraduate and graduate students interested in presenting their viewpoints about the University Health Services and health issues on campus.

Yankee rumblings

On the last day of the season, 21,641 fans looked on at Yankee Stadium while the Bronx Bombers were thrashing the hapless Toronto Blue Jays, 8-2. Thus, the Yankees, finished the season on a bright note, winning their last eight games and enabling Ron Guidry to pick up yet another 200 strikeout season again this year.

But on the other hand there are many reasons why you won't be watching them on T.V. this week. In many respects it is shocking to look at the standings and find the Yankees in fourth-place with the talent they possess. With this fourth place finish let's examine the misfortunes, and personality conflicts that stalked the former World Champions in 1979.

1. Cliff Johnson-Rich Gossage – known to the fans as "The Wrestling Match". It resulted when Johnson resented a remark Gossage made in the locker room after a game. The Goose said that Cliff, when he was in the National League, had a tough time handling the pitcher's fastballs and curves. Well ol' Cliff took exception to those remarks and decided to stretch the Goose's thumb like a piece of licorice as a means of punishment for the Gooses' inappropriate comment. After it was over it left the Yankees without the best relief pitcher in the Major Leagues (yes Stan the Man Unusual Stanhouse and Kent "Chicken Bones" Tekulve, I said the "Best") for two to three months.

2. Thurman Munson – When a team loses any player by death it sends shock waves through a clubhouse for weeks. But the magnitude of the loss of Munson, the Yankee Captain and true team leader was devastating to the whole Yankee organization. Munson epitomized Yankee tradition and always will be remembered for it.

3. Mickey Rivers – When Steinbrenner dealt Rivers to Texas because of Mick the Quick's troublemaking and attitude problems, I said to myself there goes a third of their offensive punch. Rivers was the team catalyist, the explosive force that started the Yankee arsenal going. Without him they are innocuos. Bobby Brown, Bobby Murcer, or Lenny Randle are not the answers.

When I went to see the Red Sox play the Rangers at Fenway Park, all I saw Rivers do was go 3 for 5, score 3 runs, hit two doubles, miss hitting a homerun by a foot or two and make a great catch in center. Rivers is one of my favorite players and I hope he finds a home in Arlington, Texas.

4. Reggie Jackson – Reggie tries so hard to be a team player but just can't. His constant run-ins with Steinbrenner and ever-present bickerings with Billy Martin were not beneficial at all to the Yankee cause or morale. There is so much speculation on where he'll be next year, but, still count on him roaming right field in Yankee Stadium next season. He's a big attraction at the gate and Steinbrenner knows this.

With all this turmoil the Yankees still managed to finish 18 games over 500. There were some great and moving moments during 1979. There was the tribute to Munson in Yankee stadium. That night they flashed his face on the screen and people gave it a standing ovation applauding and crying at the same time. There was Roy White pinch running against the Red Sox and 55,000 fans gave him a standing ovation largely in part because there was a published report quoting White saying that he wanted to be traded. Roy White is and always will be a Yankee. He's been a Pinstriper since I was in first grade.

Other moving moments include the incredible 5-4 win over the Orioles after the Yankees returned to The stadium following Munson's death. Murcer put on a one man show dedicating all his efforts (a three-run homer and a two run double in the ninth to win it) to the memory of Munson. It was undoubtedly the most exciting game of the year.

And speaking of exciting games, this week it's the World Series. My prediction: Baltimore in 5.

Stickers win a pair to remain undefeated

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team took its act on the road last weekend and remained undefeated (6-0) by rolling over Cortland 6-2 and shutting out Colgate 1-0. The wins lifted the stickwomen to a sixth national ranking.

Cortland provided little opposition for Coach Pam Hixon's squad in Friday's game, being outshot 27-10. Played in a virtual quagmire, as in very wet, and goalie Karen Stifter continued her excellent play. Both Laura O'Neil (2 goals) and Judy Strong (3 goals) continued their stalwart play against the over-matched Cortland squad, coached by Debbi Aikens.

Last year the stickwomen shutout Cortland 3-0 and the stickwomen wasted no time greeting Cortland goalie Shiel as O'Neil scored twice early. O'Neil hit a short corner shot at 14.35 of the opening half (assist McHugh) to make the score 1-0 Umass. Exactly thirteen minutes later the co-captain scored again on a beautiful breakaway play, UMass 2-0. Strong scored at 31.45 (assist O'Neil) to close out the first half at 3-0, UMass.

Coach Hixon, having the luxury of resting O'Neil the second half, saw her squad jump out to a commanding 5-0 lead. Judy Strong completed her hat-trick scoring at 13.45 (with an assist from freshman Chris Coughlin – who replaced O'Neil) and then again at the 20.30 point of the half.

Cortland made an attempt to make a match of this game and scored twice five minutes after Strong's goal. Laurel Walsh made the final score 6-2 at the 29.20 mark (the teams play thirty-five minute halves).

"The conditions were really awful and the footing was really bad. The field was under water. Karen Stifter in goal lost her footing on both goals by Cortland," said Hixon.

Lauded for outstanding play against Cortland were defenseman Sue Cryder, Jodi Wickman, Ro Tudryn and sweeper Carol Duffy along with stickers McHugh and Hall.

Saturdays match with Colgate (at Cortland) turned out to be a defensive struggle. Colgates goal-keeper Martha Kurtz, a former All-American, saw eleven UMass shots and stopped all but one. UMass goalie Karen Stifter earned a shutout stopping all seven Colgate shots.

By this time the field had dried somewhat and the teams played a scoreless first half; Colgate lost to the stickwoman 2-1 last year. Julie McHugh scored the only goal of this match one minute and thirty seconds into the second half. A beautiful and timely play, McHugh finished off the pivotal shot with excellent passes from O'Neil and Strong. Strong drew the Colgate goalie out and McHugh put it past her, UMass 1, Colgate 0.

Said Hixon, "We dominated – without Kurtz the score could have been higher. This was one of the better teams we have played and it is good to play under pressure and hold a lead."

According to Hixon the stickwoman face the best team in New England today at NOPE (3 p.m.). The UConn Huskies are in town and are currently ranked third in the nation. Pam Hixon's squad then faces a tough Yale team Wednesday at NOPE. UConn eliminated the Umies last year in the regionals (2-1) and the game promises to be close.

Hixon summed up the UConn game like a true coach by stating, "The team that makes the fewest mistakes and is the most psyched will win. It is dead even. Look for the national rankings to change tomorrow as the UMass field hockey team does not believe in polls. The new defense is working well (man to man) and the shutout against Colgate was perhaps an omen.

out. Then, with the score tied at 10, Umass was stopped by two technicals, both involving a call. UMass coach Elaine Marasco claimed the officials should've made. After Marasco was awarded one technical, one of the UMass players swore. Another technical was given; the Chiefs received two points as a result. Springfield finished off the Minutewomen, 15-12.

"We're very disappointed," said Marasco, "that's all I can say."

In junior varsity action, Springfield defeated UMass in best two-out-of-three, 15-2, 4-15, 15-9. The key to the lone UMass win in the second game was a phenomenal backcourt which gave back to the Chiefs everything Springfield was dishing out – spikes, bumps, and lobs.

The backcourt continued to perform well in the third game, as they helped UMass rally from a 3-14 deficit. However, Springfield spiking and UMass net penalties stopped the surge.

Groos wins Boston road race

BOSTON (AP)– Margaret Groos, a 20-year-old cross-country runner from the University of Virginia, won a 10,000-meter women's road race here yesterday, breaking her own American record with a time of 32:47.

The Nashville native finished 200 yards ahead of Princeton sophomore Lynn Jennings, 19, of Harvard, Mass., winner of the 6.2 mile race in 1977. Jenning's second-place time was 33:41.

Despite a stiff head wind early in the race, Groos bettered her record time of 33:05, set last December in a Memphis road race.

Joan Benoit, holder of the American women's marathon record and the pre-race favorite, was third Monday in 34:12. The Bowdoin College senior from Cape Elizabeth, Maine, won the event in 1978 in a course record of 33:15 and last spring won the women's segment of the Boston Marathon

It's October and the leaves are turning brown. It is a season of change – the clear, cold death of winter shines ahead of us. Soon we will be able to see our breath, frisk with small dogs in the snow, and roll our cars over on patches of black ice. With winter approaching and good jokes sure to be as scarce as summer birds, now is the time to lay in a winter's supply of jokes in the new October comedy issue of National Lampoon; and as for summer birds, you can probably mail away for them to Florida. Yes, the National Lampoon Comedy issue has enough rich, plump guffaws to keep you chortling right into spring. Matoin's kickoff return lifts JV's to 23-21 victory

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

Antoin Matoin's 86-yard kick off return with 3:30 remaining in the fourth quarter, his third touchdown of the afternoon, gave the UMass junior varsity football team a 23-21 victory over Milford Academy in the Minutemen's home opener last Friday.

Matoin's touchdown gallop came just over a minute after Milford's J.V. Roberto took a 68-yard pass from quarterback Barrett McGrath to put the Falcons on top , 21-17, using Milford's "Sleeper" play. The objective is for the Falcon offense to line up toward one side of the field, and then for the wide receiver to snap the ball to the quarterback and take off down the sideline, past the befuddled defense.

The play worked to perfection, as Roberto sped by a UMass defender, snared the ball, and streaked into the endzone. It was the second time that the play has worked for the Falcons this season, having used it the week before against Syracuse.

The Minutemen jumped to a 7-0 lead midway through the first period, as quarterback Dean Pecevich looped a 36-yard pass to Matoin, followed by a Greg Conklin extra-point to top off the scoring.

The lead was short-lived, however, as the Falcons evened things on the second play of the next stanza. Milford capped off a 33-yard drive when McGrath threaded a pass to Paul Zimmer and John Ferrigno split the uprights to deadlock the game at seven.

UMass had two excellent scoring opportunities within the quarter but both ended in failure, the first on a fumble on the Milford five-yard line, and the second on an incomplete pass on fourth down and nine from the Falcon nine.

Minutemen chances were not to be denied in the third quarter, as UMass opened the scoring in the second half with Conklin hitting on a 35-yard field-goal, upping their lead to 10-7. Minutes later, Matoin bolted in from 12-yards out and with help from Conklin, the Minutement held a 10 point edge, 17-7.

It was at this juncture that the Falcon offense suddenly began to fire, as Milford, on the strength of two McGrath-to-Roberto connections (one of 50 yards, the other of 68) went from a 10 point deficit to a four point advantage, grabbing the lead at 21-17. The turning point of the game occured after the second Roberto score. Following two UMass penalties, Milford's Mike Giaquinto failed to punch in the two-point conversion, which left the Falcons only ahead by four, instead of by six.

On the ensuing kick from John Ferrigno, Minuteman Craig Colbath bobbled the football, and it went by him and into the hands of Mr. Matoin. The 5'10", 160 pounder from Springvale, Maine sprinted down the left sideline past a host of Falcon defenders and into the endzone to capture the game for the Minutemen that had almost eluded their grasp.

Joe Graham, a freshman who came down from the varsity to play against Milford, was a defensive Stalwart for UMass Friday, with two deflected passes and counted tackles to halt the Falcon attack.

The junior varsity will host Dartmouth this Friday at 2:00 p.m.

Netmen drop two; fall to UVM, BU

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team dropped two straight matches this past weekend, losing first to Vermont, 7-2 Sat. and 8-1 drubbing at the hands of Boston University Mon. The team prior to this past weekend's setbacks was undefeated with wins over Rhode Island and New Hampshire.

Boston University completely dominated the entire day winning 5 of 6 singles matches and sweeping the doubles. It was a brisk cold day and many of the players played with their warmup suits. The results: UMass Dave Nowak No. 1 lost to BU Larry Field 6-4, 3-6, 6-3. UMass No. 2 Sergio Strepman lost to BU's Tom Losponoso, 7-5, 6-1. UMass' No. 3 Mark Huetteman lost to BU Mark Lucdens, 7-5, 6-4. UMass' No. 4 Matt Modlish lost to BU's John Quinn 3-6, 6-2, 6-2. UMass' No. 5 Dan Gallagher lost to Rich Wilson 6-2, 6-1. UMass' No. 6 Neil MacKertish defeated BU's Jack Schecter, 6-1, 6-1.

In the doubles, UMass struggled and lost all three: UMass' Nowak Strepman lost to Field-Losponoso 6-3, 6-2. UMass' No. 2 Huetteman–Modlish lost to Quinn-Wilson, 6-3, 6-3. UMass' No. 3 Gallagher–MacKertish lost to Lucdens-Schecter, 6-1, 6-1.

It was a disappointing afternoon for the Minutemen especially after a dismal performance against Vermont Sat. In that match Strepman was the only singles winner defeating Marc Compognom, 7-5, 7-6. The only doubles victory for UMass was chalked up by Nowak and Strepman downing Compognom and Andy Deery, 6-4, 6-4.

The Minutemen hope to rebound against UConn at Storrs tomorrow or Wednesday. (The athletic dept. at UConn is unsure of the date due to last week's storm.)

Harriers fall to NU; rebound for URI

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Illness proved costly to the UMass men's cross country team as it was defeated by the Northeastern Huskies 27-42. One bright note of the otherwise disappointing afternoon was the Minutemen's routing of the University of Rhode Island 42-61, in the dual meet held Saturday at Boston's Franklin Park.

Senior captain Rick Walls and junior Kevin Molteni were unable to race, due to sickness and harrier coach Ken O'Brien found himself without two of his top runners, turning what should have been an extremely close race into another frustrating loss.

Sophomore Minuteman Paul Beaulieu turned in a fine performance placing second behind Northeastern's All-american Bruce Bickford with a time of 24:54. Bickford's winning time for the five mile course was 24:50. Beaulieu and Bickford ran neck and neck throughout the race with Bickford just pulling ahead in the last few hundred yards.

Junior Mike Doiron placed next for the harriers, finishing eighth with a time of 25:22. Right behind him in the ninth spot was sophomore Paul Kirsky with a time of 25:24. Also placing for UMass were sophomore Chris Omeltochenko and junior Bob Martin placing twelfth and thirteenth respectively.

Aside from Bickford, the Huskies placed Ed Richardson (3), Pat Bickford (6), Jim Doane (7), and John Childs (10) to provide the easy victory.

The Minutemen's next race will be a week from this Saturday when the harriers will be at URI for the Yankee Conference Championships.

Gridders humble NCC Eagles; win rout, 48-7

By DANNY GUIDERA
Collegian Staff

What promised to be a rout materialized into one as the UMass gridders, behind quarterback Mike McEvilly and a sharp defensive unit, throttled the Eagles of North Carolina Central, 48-7 Saturday at Alumni Stadium, setting up next week's Yankee Conference showdown with Boston University.

McEvilly, who passed for 170 yards, hit Kevin O'Connor and Mike Newell for touchdowns while running for a third himself to put the winless Eagles' record at 0 and 4. Halfback Cliff Pedrow, who put the first UMass score on the board, racked up 86 yards on the ground.

Frank DiTomasso shined on defense for the Minutemen with seven tackles including two sacks of Eagles' quarterback Charles Yuille accounting for an NCC loss of twenty yards. Yuille was sacked four times on the day.

The first UMass tally was the result of Pedrow's run of 26 yards from the NCC 29-yard line set up his third touchdown of the season when he dived in from the one, putting the Minutemen on top to stay.

In the second quarter McEvilly called his own number and snuck in from the one-yard line to make the score 14-0 at 8:59. The score was set up by a 45-yard pass play from McEvilly to tight end Marty Paglione. Two minutes and twenty three seconds later after the NCC offense had been shut down, McEvilly hit O'Connor with a perfect pass and the senior wide receiver took it 18 yards for a score. Sandro Vittiello, who kicked six extra points on the day, made the PAT and the Minutemen were up 21-0.

With only 32 seconds elapsed in the second half, NCC struck back for their first and only touchdown of the day. After McEvilly was intercepted, freshman running back Roscoe Burnette scampered in from the seven, scoring the Eagles' first rushing touchdown of the season.

McEvilly capped a 14 play, 80-yard drive midway through the third quarter as he connected with Newell from the 10-yard line making the score UMass 28 North Carolina Central 7. This was McEvilly's fifth touchdown pass of the season.

In the fourth quarter, the Minutemen turned a lop-sided game into a full-fledged rout, thrashing the Eagles with three scores in a period of three minutes and eleven seconds. Kevin Sullivan tipped a Yuille pass into the arms of Peter DiTomasso who ran it into the end zone for the fifth UMass tally of the day.

Lightning struck once again when, a minute and thirty four seconds later, defensive back Todd Powers made a miserable day evern worse for Charles Yuille when he picked off another of the Eagle quarterback's passes and ran it back 45 yards to put the Minutemen up 41-7.

After Peter Stevens recovered a NCC fumble at the Eagle 13, the Minutemen lived up to their name by scoring yet another touchdown in, well, yet another minute. Freshman halfback Richie Jenkins carried the ball to paydirt from the one yard line to tally the seventh (and last, mercifully for the Eagles) touchdown of the day for the Minutemen to make it 48-7.

Saturday's victory was the Minutemen's third consecutive triumph of the season. The Minutemen are currently tied for second in the Yankee Conference with the University of Rhode Island and setting the stage for this Saturday's meeting with the Terriers of Boston university. The game, to be played at Alumni Stadium, is generally considered to be a showdown between the two best teams in the Yankee Conference, although UMass coach Pickett downplayed the importance of the meeting.

"We still have to play the other teams in the conference," said Pickett.

Minuteman halfback Cliff Pedrow (carrying the ball) is pulled down by North Carolina Central University defenders during the Minutemen's 48-7 romp over the Eagles. (Staff photo by Jay Ferrarone).

Coach Pickett was pleased by his defensive squad, tagged "Jimmy Reid's Raiders" in last Friday's Sports Plus section of the Boston Globe. "We're getting better defense all the time," said Pickett. "They looked very impressive. They're a good defensive football team, improving all the time."

Although the game ended in such a debacle for NCC, Pickett praised the Eagles. "Running 200 yards against North Carolina Central is something of an accomplishment."

Pickett also pointed out that the Minutemen (McEvilly and backup quarterback Tim Fontaine) were throwing the ball more than before.

The game ball was presented to senior offensive tackle (6', 270 lbs.) Karl Nyholm.

An interesting note: Charles Yuille and the NCC offense huddled infrequently during the first half, calling many audibles. Yuille was intercepted three times during the game. He has picked off three times as often as he has thrown for TDs this season (9 interceptions, 3 TDs). The attendence at last Saturday's game was 7400.

Spikers swept by Chiefs

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Springfield College swept Umass in women's volleyball Saturday afternoon at the matchbox-like Judd-East Gymnasia on the Springfield College campus.

Both teams played determined volleyball; often, the play was as tight as the gym they played in. It was the home opener for the Chiefs, as they just came from a tournament the weekend before. UMass had a six-match wirtning streak on the line, and both the players and UMass coach Elaine Marasco had expressed optimistically that they were going to play Springfield as best they could and win the match.

Game one saw the Minutewomen take a commanding 6-0 lead, as UMass captain Joyce Gresl led her team with ace serving and setting. However, the Chiefs came back, taking advantage of several UMass mistakes (including several potential spikes that rocketed out-of-bounds). After the Chiefs chaulked up a 10-6 lead, UMass staged a comeback to tie at 10. Springfield then used their fantasic front court to stymie the Minutewomen offense; the Chiefs went on to win, 15-10.

After UMass again jumped to a 6-0 lead, Springfield College again came back. Despite some good digging by Brenda Simmons, Gresl, and Alison Taylor, the Chiefs spiked their way to a 15-8 victory.

For what turned out to be the finale, UMass and Springfield fought it out; neither team assumed any large lead. Both teams locked horns, with no individual standing

Moran's goal tops Cats

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Senior Wayne Moran's shot past onrushing Vermont goalie Bart Farley was all UMass would need Saturday as the Minutemen downed the Catamounts 1-0 to end a two-year domination by the defending Yankee Conference Champions.

Resisting six Vermont corner kicks while producing 17 shots of offense, UMass improves its record to 3-0-2 with a win that will elevate its ranking in the New England College Soccer poll.

Suffering its first loss, Vermont (4-1-3) now faces the possible dashing of is post-season NCAA tournament hopes when the Catamounts face top-ranked URI in Burlington next Saturday.

"This win was long overdue, it's about time we got one," said coach Russ Kidd. In 1977, former UMass star Tasso Koutsoukos missed a penalty kick late in the game after UMass tied the contest after being two goals down. Vermont went on to win the game with two goals in overtime. Last year at Burlington the Catamounts' Brian Fleming scored with six minutes remaining to nip the Minutemen, 2-1.

Flanked by such notables as All-American goalie Bart Farley, the Catamounts again promised to be the toughest opposition for the Minutemen this year. But even tri-captain Farley could not belay the strong midfield play of defensive back Mike St. Martin and halfback Doug White who consistantly beat the opposition to the ball, setting up varying degrees of offensive pressure.

At 27:00 of the first half forward Tony M. Dias was tripped by a Catamount back deep in the Vermont half of the field. St. Martin's ensuing shot off an indirect kick was shanked to the right of the net. Later Dias broke open with the ball, only to have his shot sail over everything.

But Farley himself proved vulnerable at 8:20 of the second half when UMass tri-captain Mark Vassalotti pushed a thru-pass to Moran who had broken across field from his wing position. Moran faked to his right and dribbled left around a Catamount fullback and flicked it past onrushing Farley attempting a slide-tackle.

The goal was Moran's fourth in two games and ties him with Tony M. Dias for the team scoring lead.

"We were all over them, we controlled midfield," said UMass' tri-captain Mike St. Martin. St. Martin and the other backs provided Minutemen netminder Mark Marilla with more than adequate coverage, turning away six corner kicks while allowing only 9 Vermont shots. Though one shot hit the right post, the closest the Catamounts did come to scoring was actually off the foot of a UMass fullback whose attempted clear gained a top-spin and landed between Marilla and an open goal. Marilla dove to his right to tip the ball out of bounds.

BOOTER BANTER: The weather was not a problem on Saturday. Though the field was somewhat muddy, clear skies prevailed for the 1,000 fans who spent the late morning at Boyden Field. The University of Rhode Island, ranked number one in New England, was handed their first defeat of the season last weekend at the hands of last year's national champion San Francisco. Vermont's Bart Farley mixed brilliance with indecision Saturday. The senior made several excellent saves but used poor judgement in his delayed attempted slide-tackle of Wayne Moran. Coach Kidd could not have expected more from halfback Doug White. While contributing to the midfield control, White accounted for seven of the Minutemen's 17 shots.

MALCOLM X CENTER

Food for Thought

This week the CCEBS Board of Directors will be at the Malcolm X Center. People should take advance of this situation to express their concerns. I based this justification on a number of points.

First, a number of people do not understand the purpose of the board. This would also mean that people are not aware of the Board's responsibility to provide an adequate assistance program to CCEBS students. In this case, there needs to be some clarification of the policies governing the CCEBS organization.

Second, since the late 60's when the CCEBS program accepted large numbers of Black and Third World Students, the 1970's have seen a tremendous change. The criticism the program has continued to receive throughout its history, has helped in curbing the number of students attending the university. The fact, that the finanacial aid situation has changed from regular grants, to loans or work-study, has placed an added burden on students. This problem has forced many individuals to find alternative employment in the Amherst, Northampton or Belchertown area. Unfortunately, the force exile has added to assaults on students in the area, and has destroyed many positive ingredients in our community.

Third, the emphasis of the CCEBS program has historical meaning to other vital concerns. Because students have been a strong force in bringing change, the push to get more Black and Third World students at this campus, has provided links to the development of the Black Studies Department in 1970; the increased in student organizations from Harambee, Drum; and Afro Am Society to the addition of the Malcolm X Center (in 1972); Black Mass Communications Project (in 1972); Nummo News (in 1972); Orchard Hills Third World Center; Center for Racial Understanding; Daycare Centers; Office of Third World Affairs; all student caucuses; and etc. But the strength has shifted from the student to the faculty, staff, and administrators. This is not to condone this policy or say that students do not have a stand, but to make new and old students aware of their potential.

In summation, the CCEBS Board meeting has a special concern for every Black and Third World student on campus. The principles of how far staff and administrator can go have some limitations. Students in the past, have been able to stretch those boundaries. This has provided stability and growth in our community. With the addition of new brothers and sisters on campus, it is time to bring this focus out again.

Derek Davis

As a Coordinator of the Center, I try to make sure that the Umass community as well as the Third World community is served.

DEREK DAVIS

Interview With Derek Davis by Sartreina Cooper

Derek Davis, Co-coordinator of the Malcolm X Center, was interviewed on issues concerning the Malcolm X Center. Derek expressed the goals and job of the center. According to Derek, Malcolm X Center is a multi-purposed center located in the basement of Berkshire Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area. Its job is to provide a diversity of services to its Southwest, Third World students. For the students enjoyment, there are many Black educational magazines at their disposal. There is also a library of Black novelists, a typewriter, pool table, ping pong table, sewing machine, color telivision, and a stereo. The Malcolm X Center is a place where students can come and escape the pressures of the university. The center is open from 12pm-11pm from Monday through Friday and from 12pm to 8pm on Sundays.

Sartreina: Who is on the staff at the center and what are their positions?

Derek: The co-coordinators are myself and Wayne Malcolm. Neil Grant is the staff supervisor, Crystal Banks, Academic Coordinator; Gary Williams, Communications Coordinator; Michael Nauls and Joe Hilton, Social Events Coordinator; Nancy Brooks, Treasurer; Keith Johnson, communications Coordinator; Farid Asim, Librarian; and Denise Miles, T.A. I am encouraging all freshman to seek positions in the future ?

Sartreina: As coordinator of the Malcolm X Center what is your job and what is the main thing that you hope to accomplish ?

Derek: As coordinator of the Malcolm X Center, I would like to pull all of the members of the Third World community together. I would like especially to let the freshman know that they are a part of this community. My job is also to attend Southwest Assembly meetings to chair the meetings. As a co-coordinator of the Center, I try to make sure that the UMass community as well as the Third World Community is served Sartreina: What events do the Malcolm X Center have planned for the coming year ?

Derek: The center has many events plannd for the coming year. We will be having a lecture series featuring Chester Davis from the Afro-AM Department; Arthur Jackson, Financial Aid Department; Bobby Daniels, Student Activities Office; andCarol Carter, Director of CCEBS. There will be a film series, an art exhibition, a Minority Engineers Workshop sponsored by BMCP, and parties. There also will be a course taught next semester by John Bracey. The date and time will be announced later.

Sartreina: Do you think that the Malcolm X Center will run into conflict with the plans and goals of any of the other Third World organizations at this university?

Derek: No. I think that all of the Third World Organizations should work together and do events in conjunction due to budget cuts. I feel the need for all of the coordinators of all of the Third World Organizations to hold a meeting to keep from bumping heads, clear up any problems, and plan an annual program together.

Lastly, I would like to urge more Third World people to come out and enjoy the Center. Third World doesn't just mean Black People!

SUPPLEMENT TO THE COLLEGIAN

The Famine In Vietnam And Cambodia.

James Lewis, Jr.

The Famine in Vietnam and Cambodia can be attributed to the destruction of the countryside by U.S. bombing in the Vietnam War. This part of the world is facing some of the worst human misery and suffering known to mankind today. These are millions of Cambodian and Vietnamese refugees leaving their homes to live anywhere else or die. Agriculture has always been the mainstay of these people, and their lifestyle has been destroyed.

Vietnam is 128,401 square miles in size, which is 30,000 square miles smaller than the state of California. "October, 1968, U.S. forces had dropped in both the European and Asian theatres during World War II, according to Lawrence S. Wittner in "Cold War America." By the end of the 1972 the tonnage of U.S. munitions dropped or shot on Indochina since 1965 reached more than 15 million, including 3.5 times the tonnage of bombs and 28 times the amount of napalm bombs used by the U.S. in World War II is the bloodiest war in human history.. there had been about 1.5 million civilian casualties in North and South Vietnam alone. Between 1965 and the end of 1972 the Indochina War consumed more than $128 billion in official U.S. military appropriations and 56,000 American lives leaving 303,000 Americans wounded and approximately 100,000 others as drug addicts."

In Total, nearly 5 million Vietnamese were killed or wounded. In Cambodia the population was numbered between 7 and 8 million people, now believed to total only 4 million to 5 million people. Three million people face starvation.

The irony of Cambodia is that it was a neutral country. On March 18, 1970, a right-wing military coup ousted the neutralist government of Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia. The Nixon Administration immediately began giving military assistance insurgents against the pro-U.S. government in Cambodia and Vietnam.

It is indeed a wonder that any people still exist in these areas. Cambodia has only 70,000 square miles of area and the U.S. defoliation projects in Vietnam and Cambodia destroyed much of any vegetation in those areas, but one chemical, Agent Orange, is now said to cause cancer, The U.S. spent about $200 billion on the Vietnam War

This summer ABC news announced that Vietnam would be short 4 million tons (8 billion pounds) of rice this year. In Cambodia, a minimum of 600 tons of rice a day would be need to prevent the situation from becoming as bad as the one in Biafra. Eighty percent of the people are suffering from malaria and 75 percent are gravely undernourished.

In Cambodia, by law the U.S. is prohibited from any direct aid, but the U.S. can give through U.N., Red Cross and other international organizations.

Due to the devastated uninhabitable lands and heavy rains the crops didn't grow. There are 277,000 boat people, Vietnamese and Cambodian people who simply decided to live on boats or anywhere in the world where they will be accepted. Almost half of these people drown. This is their choice. Their numbers steadily increase. The total effects of the Vietnam War have yet to be realized.

A PAWN IN PLACE

By proclaiming the independence of the Venda reserve on September 13, South Africa has completed yet another part of the intricate puzzle of racial division outlined in the theory of apartheid. Like the two previous 'homelands' to raise their own flags—Transkei in 1976 and Bophuthatswana in 1977—Venda seems destined to seek diplomatic support in vain. But with or without a favorable reaction from international opinion, the territory's strategic location—in the far north of South Africa's Transvaal province—will make it a valuable piece on South Africa's military chessboard. (see map)

Venda, which consists of two pieces of land after adjustments with neighboring reserves and white areas, is now separated from the Zimbabwe border along the Limpopo River by a 6-mile-wide strip of 'white' land. The major economic activity of its resident population of 320,000, settled in an area half the size of Connecticut, is subsistence farming. Remarkably, over 70% of gross national income in 1978 came from some 62,000 migrants working in South Africa, mostly in the Pretoria-Johannesburg area, and some 50% of the food comes from outside the territory. Under the independence terms these workers, as well as other Venda who reside outside the 'homeland,' lose South African citizenship, following the same pattern as Transkei and Bophuthatswana

But the territory will have even less hope for economic viability than its predecessors, lacking the coastal access of the Transkei or the mining and gambling income of Bophuthatswana. Venda's per capita income is only $25/month, and the infant mortality rate is 118/1000. Officials now talk of distant prospects for coal mining. Tea, coffee and tropical fruits, meanwhile, are being raised for sale. With no railway links, and only 79 miles of paved road—joining the town of Louis Trichardt with the Kruger game park—is lacking in Venda. Pretoria provided over $34 million of the 1978-79 budget of $42 million, and followed up with an 'independence' subsidy of $20 million, which has gone to such purposes as a presidential palace costing some $700,000. A Rand Afrikaans University study, however, estimates that some $84 million a year for 21 years would be necessary to provide minimal infrastructure development—a level of investment no one expects the rural territory to attract.

Command of the new Venda National Force goes to T. R. Mulautzi, a black police veteran with 20 years experience in South Africa. In practice the South African Defense Force (SADF) will be integrating Venda's security organization into its own larger efforts to block stepped-up guerrilla infiltration. In the last two years a series of incidents, most of them attributed to the African National Congress, have demonstrated that South Africa is vulnerable, and the prospect of an independent Zimbabwe sympathetic to guerrilla struggle only heightens the preoccupations of defense planners.

Christian Science Monitor correspondent Gary Thatcher visited the South African-Rhodesian border area this August, and reported a heavy buildup of patrols by 'Citizen Force' servicemen. Ex-servicemen are also being encouraged to settle on absentee-owned farms in the area, where in some zones as many as 25% of the farms have no white residents. A Military Area Radio Network is going into service to link farmers and defense forces and, Thatcher noted, a 50-foot-wide wall of sisal plants, with thorns that can penetrate an ordinary leather shoe, already stretches hundreds of miles adjoining the border.

South Africa is also depending on building up the percentage of blacks in the armed forces, not only through the armies of the independent homelands but also in the SADF itself. The all-black 21st batallion and other black units now number some 1.3% of South African's troops. One appeal is the regular pay the army provides, but there is also an ideological pitch. "Motivation is no problem in the 21st battallion," comments the September issue of the SADF monthly Paratus, portraying "A Day in the Life" of the black soldier. "They know that the greatest danger for our country is Marxism." The recruitment of black forces, however, bears its own dangers. The successful May attack on a Soweto police station by ANC guerrillas, say South African authorities, was carried out by three men, two of whom were former policemen.

CABBS On The Move

Raymond Young

The Committee for the Advancement of Black Business Students is a new organization that was started this semester.

"The idea for CABBS was formulated last semester and was recognized as an RSO group (recognized student organization) this semester," said treasurer Raymond Young.

The organization was the brainchild of former Black Business students Paul Campell and Alex Perry.

"The reason for CABBS was to get more Black representation in the business school in terms of faculty and students," said Young.

"Last year there was a scarce number of Blacks in the business school and we see this as a problem, so the organization is there to eleviate the lack of Black faculty and to recruit more students into the business school and also to make sure they stay once they are in the school," said Young.

According to Raymond, CABBS has recently opened up an office in the SBA building and students are welcome to drop by for advice and counselling about courses.

CABBS is a recognized student organization, however, they are not funded by student activities fund since they are an academic organization.

Because we are not funded as an RSO group "We are going to sponsor various fund raisers during the course of the semester such as a fashion show, cabaret and a movie to raise money to purchase neccesities like office equipment," he said.

Some of the other activites that are going to be sponsored by CABBS this semester are workshops given twice a month by the Placement Service on resume writing, interiew techniques ect. A workshop on admissions to the business school will be held November 8.

Cabbs holds their meetings every Thursday at 7p in the New Africa House their is a fee to become a member, however. But this enable you to attend all the workshops for free and gives you voting power.

Swapping Energy

South Africa is working hard to guarantee itself access to new technology being developed by US scientist which may reduce the cost of turning coal into oil. Western technology has helped make apartheid almost self-sufficient in weapons production. The same thing may be happening with energy.

by David McGloin

With the advent of gas lines in the United States in May, Congress and the administration have launched crash programs to develop synthetic fuels from coal that are dangerous and ill-conceived. They are likely to be costly to the environment, to the taxpayer, and to US political credibility in Africa. The Carter administration is quietly promoting closer collaboration between South Africa and major US corporations that will be a boon for apartheid South Africa's political fortunes.

South Africa, which is oil-poor but coal-rich, has been producing oil from coal since 1955. Production was on a small scale until 1973, when all OPEC members except Iran placed an embargo on oil to South Africa. Since then, South Africa has actively sought to expand alternatives to imported oil. Following the Iran oil cut-off in early 1979, South Africa has been forced to pay up to $40 per barrel of oil on the world spot market. The oil squeeze and the threat of United Nations sanctions have caused South Africa to look for ways to increase its energy self-sufficiency. One answer is to make oil from coal.

Overall expenditure on SASOL—the state-owned South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation project to transform coal to oil—will reach $6.7 billion by 1983. SASOL supplies less than 10 percent of South Africa's oil needs today, but by 1983, Pretoria hopes the oil from coal process will satisfy 30-50 percent of its requirements.

On April 25, 1979, the Department of Energy announced that it had obtained State Department clearance to offer to buy the SASOL I data bank from any private corporation that could arrange a deal with the South African parastatal corporation. The Department of Energy was unwilling to buy the data directly because it did not want to be involved in extensive negotiations with South African authorities. It has also refused to disclose any specifics of its offer, but, in April the Johannesburg Star reported that the decision is "likely to earn SASOL millions of rands in license fees for its various processes." The data bank which has been accumulated over the last twenty years of operations, consists of SASOL's collection of data on its fine tuning of the Fisher-Tropsch, coal-to-oil process.

African journalist wrote an editorial-page column on the importance of the SASOL project for the US in the Wall Street Journal on July 23, and Representative Moorhead of Pittsburgh who had lobbied for the Department of Energy decision claimed that it was "the most encouraging news the American people had had in weeks." Moorhead probably sensed the political bounty of being out front in the rush to save the US consumer the long wait in the gas lines. In addition Moorhead's district borders on large coal reserves and is also the headquarters of Allegheny Ludlum Steel, a corporation whose management has been an active proponent of continued business ties with South Africa.

South Africa and its advocates are naturally delighted with the favorable publicity for SASOL. It helps them build a picture of US dependency on South Africa for resources and even technology—the reverse of the more common (and accurate) view of the US-South Africa relationship.

Old Technology

The SASOL contribution is not as significant as Moorhead or the South Africans contend. SASOL technology is relatively simple. It was developed in the early 1900's by German scientists. The method, which was developed by Lurgi, a subsidiary of Germany's Metall Gesellschaft, is an indirect one which turns coal into gas and then into oil. According to a US Department of Energy 1977 fact sheet, "That coal can be used in this way (to supplement our supplies of oil) is of no doubt. Whether it will be is not so much a question of technology as of economics."

South Africa has made SASOL economically viable by forcing every gasoline service station to carry SASOL products equivalent in value to 10 percent of its overall sales. This means that there is a substantial forced subsidy paid by the consumer or by the gasoline dealer. The gasoline dealer must pay for the 10 percent SASOL products whether they are sold or not.

US Department of Energy willingness to deal even indirectly with the South Africans was widely heralded in South Africa and by some business interests in the United States. An April 25 Rand Daily Mail article declared, "The United States dramatically brushed aside scruples yesterday and decided to allow American firms to seek vitally needed oil-from-coal technology from South Africa." On April 28, the Johannesburg Star ran the headline, "World Wants SASOL Processes."

Pretoria's spokesmen were soon insisting that South African know-how could make a valuable contribution to the West. Said Minister of Finance Owen Horwood, "Many overseas countries were interested in South Africa's SASOL projects and were asking themselves why they had not thought of doing the same thing." A South

UNITED STATES

The United States, in a delicate diplomatic communique, has informed Mexico it will provide no more funding for spraying marijuana fields with the herbicide paraquat, administration sources said Sunday.

But US officials say the move aimed at protecting Americans from health hazards of ingesting the herbicide may have little effect and could mean a setback for a separate, more critical campaign against herion.

They are hoping a compromise worked out on Capital Hill last week will at least avoid a castrophe for the heroin program.

CHINA

China toasted the future Sunday night at a huge banquet marking 30 years of Communist rule but included no memtion of Mao Tse-tung, the man who proclaimed the birth of the People's Republic.

Communist Party Chairman and Premier Hua Guofeng praised all sectors of the population, from lumberjacks to scientists, but evoked Mao only when he said that three decades ago "the Chinese people stood up." This phrase was used by Mao at the time, but he was given no credit Sunday for being its author.

The silence about Mao contrasted drastically with the banquet on the 29th anniversary, when Mr. Hua three times mentioned the name of the late Communist Party leader and told the nation the "we must hold high the banner of Chairman Mao." Mr. Hua had mentioned Mao seven times the year before that.

IRAN

Guerillas blew up a microwave station in southwestern Iran Sunday, cutting off telephone communication with the country's largest port and the oil refinery town of Abadan, the official Pars News Agency said.

The report said "counterrevolutionaries" had planted a time bomb at a microwave station 25 miles from Iran's largest port, Khorramshahr, on the road to the oil center of Ahvaz

The station's 300-foot-tall red and white steel antenna had collapsed, Pars said, adding that a team of specialists had been sent to repair the damage. It was hoped the damage would be repaired within five days or so.

Tehran, Iran

Iran's first civilian Defense Minister, Mustafa Ali Chamran, said Sunday he would purge the armed forces, starting at the top. In his first interview since his appointment two days ago, the 48-year old former guerrilla told a Tehran daily, Kayhan, that the purge was intended to bring the armed forces up to Islamic and revolutionary standards.

Dr. Chamran, who as a deputy premier was responsible for setting up revolutionary Iran's new intelligence agency, said: "The purge will start from the top and will later reach lower levels."

A CHALLENGE TO LIMANN

The presidential campaign that preceded Ghana's first elections in some ten years was by most accounts a contest of personalities remarkably lacking in debate on issues and programs. With his administration now in office, however, Ghanaian President Hilla Limann will be expected to act quickly to meet head-on some of the nation's most pressing problems, such as 100 percent inflation.

Limann and his lieutenants have, of course, promised to continue with the 'housecleaning' exercise begun by the latest of the three military juntas to rule in Ghana, the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC). Under the leadership of junior officers, the AFRC mounted a turbulent mutiny against corrupt senior commanders in June, and moved on to investigate and punish corruption in the civil service and the private sector in subsequent months before turning over power to Limann last week.

Since the AFRC housecleaning was popular with most Ghanaians, Limann and his People's National Party (PNP), will not abandon it altogether, but they are likely to limit the scope of the investigations and thus avoid alienating the powerful business interests that backed the party.

On this and other matters, the government's relationship with the military will be particuplarly delicate. For one thing, AFRC chairman Rawlings has become a folk hero to ordinary Ghanaians, and the possibility that the junior officers might once again attempt to seize power cannot be discounted altogether. But if there is a reason for Limann to heed sentiment among Rawlings' group, there will also be pressure from other quarters to punish the AFRC ringleaders and ensure that control of the army rests with the senior officers who were in some cases humiliated during the June revolt. There has even been talk of bringing in foreign troops to "pacify" the lower ranks.

The AFRC has left many with axes to grind, perhaps first among them the families of the eight officers who were executed. Hundreds more were targeted in the anti-corruption sweep, prosecuted for mishandling their duties, taking bribes, witholding taxes and similar offences. Within the last month alone the AFRC dissolved the Cocoa Marketing Board and the Ministry of Cocoa Affairs, put top officials from those agencies on trial in the 'people's courts,' dismissed several officials of the Ghana National Trading Company, and destroyed by demolition the black market currency exchange in Kumasi known as the "French Line".

At Limann's swearing-in ceremony, Rawlings pledged his support to the new government and promised that the soldiers will return to the barracks. At the same time, however, he called upon Limann and company to "continue the revolution." Some weeks ago, in fact, Rawlings commented, "I can see waves of revolution worse than what is happening in the country right now should the incoming administration undermine the revolutionary intelligence of the Ghanaian and take him for a ride."

The PNP's economic policies may put that forecast to the test. The nation is bankrupt, and observers believe that Limann is planning to alleviate Ghana's scarcities by borrowing money from friendly countries and the IMF. This in turn would necessitate certain monetary policies the IMF generally insists upon, measures such as wage freezes, the lifting of price controls and reduced government spending. As Ghanaian journalist Nii Bentsi-Enchill notes in a recent issue of West Africa, however, "the real problem facing Dr. Limann and the PNP administration is that they will not have a military force to underwrite their policies when those policies are clearly unpopular."

Bentsi-Enchill points out that the Akuffo government, the junta that preceeded Rawlings' AFRC, unsucessfully tried to meet the IMF conditions for credit by imposing a wage freeze in August 1978. By November Akuffo was forced to declare a state of emergency because of widespread strikes.

The AFRC, by contrast, was able to maintain wage controls, largely because working class Ghanaians supported other aspect of government policy, such as the strict enforcement of price controls.

Whatever steps the Limann administration takes in the short run to combat inflation and ease commodity shortages, experts believe that Ghana's trade deficit is chronic and can only be resolved by diversification of the agricultural and commerical base. Writes Bentsi-Enchill: "There has not been any indication that the incoming government recognizes the structural nature of the economic crisis. Even if it could import consumer goods in impressive quantities once or twice (especially at Christmas), it would soon be having to deal with a population that cannot pay the prices being asked for goods and services."

LIBYA

The Department of Justice has been investigating allegations of a bribery plot aimed at securing Carter administration approval for selling airplanes to Libya, the New York Times reported Sunday.

The report, quoting Justice officials said the probe began when an informant told the government of a conspiracy, involving fugitive financier Robert Vesco, to pay $30 million in bribes to win approval for the sale of military and commercial planes to Libya.

Among those named by the newspaper in the investigation were John C. White, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and unidentified senior White House officials.

But the Justice Department "is almost certain, on the basis of evidence gathered to date, that no bribes were taken by Mr. White or White House officials," the Times report said.

Mr. White told the Times he had not been offered any bribes.

NIGERIA

Abidjan, Ivory Coast

Nigerian President Elect Shehu Shagari was to take over control from the military Monday in Africa's wealthiest independent country, ending more than 13 years of Army rule. Maj. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo and his team of senior Army officers were handing over power formally to the president and an elected federal house of representatives in a ceremony in the capital of Lagos

ZIMBABWE

Zimbabwe Rhodesian security forces pressed on with their raid on Patriotic Front guerrilla targets in neighboring Mozambique for the fourth day Sunday.

A spokesman for military headquarters said the operation-one of the longest cross-border missions ever mounted-was continuing, but he declined to give further details. He said a military communique might be issued later.

The only communique on the raid so far was released at midday on Thursday. It said the forces had attacked targets of the Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army of Robert Mugabe about 25 miles northeast of the border city of Umtali. Informed sources said it was mainly a ground forces operation aimed at the group's forward bases.

FRANCE/AFRICA

A Widening Role

By ALEXANDER RONDOS

The repertoire of French policies and activities related to Africa is impressive in its variety. The last 18 months have seen a concentration of these actions. Yet there has been little attempt, once the ritual expressions of applause or impotent indignation have been made, to place France's Africa policies in their real perspective. France has intervened with specially trained troops in three regions of Africa in this period; it maintains economic links with its former colonies which form the platform of its penetration into the continent. It associates openly with South Africa. There is, as there always has been, a profound influence of the French mind on many of the ruling groups in African countries sympathetic to the perpetuation of French presence in Africa. There is nothing new about these observations, which is why France's policies have tended to be predictable, even if they are not condoned. At the same time, this predictability has diverted people from a closer appreciation of the implications of French policy and the subtle shifts in priority that have occurred in the course of the last decade which have significantly altered the nature of French presence in Africa. Fundamental to this point is an understanding of Charles de Gaulle's vision of Africa's role in French history, economy, and diplomacy.

France and a number of African regimes, former colonies of France, are therefore the two main actors in the relationship, and they are the core of all French relations in Africa. It will be seen, as should be obvious anyway, that they are all deeply involved, associated, or concerned with the list of French actions which one draws from the experience of the last two years.

The greatest éclat has been caused by the French interventions in Chad, Mauritania, and Zaire. Twice, in 1977 and 1978, the Shaba Province in southern Zaire, once the Katanga, has been attacked by rebels, ostensibly trained by Eastern bloc advisers in Angola. Special units of the French Foreign Legion bases in the south of France and Corsica were dispatched last year to Kolwezi, where whites were being killed. It has been the recurrent justification by French authorities in all their military actions, that French lives were at stake.

In Chad, France has, with some vicissitudes, supported regimes that have ated by economic structures which give them a common currency — which is invalid on the international market except when converted to the French franc — and close similarities in tariff structures. They have provided a remarkably secure field for the French investor — to the exclusion of most others.

consistently neglected, in fact discriminated against, the diverse Muslim populations of the north. Now that a southern-dominated regime under General Felix Malloum has been overthrown, France has reduced its presence in Chad to some 2,000 men in attempts to keep the peace between the rival victorious groupings — the Front for the National Liberation of Chad (FROLINAT) and the Armed Forces of the North (FAN). They, in turn, are threatened by Libya in the north, which is also supporting secessionists in the south, and have requested that the French stay in the country.

Mauritania, which had military agreements with France, decided to invoke them when attacks from the Polisario Front fighting for the liberation of the Western Sahara began to wreak havoc on the Mauritanian economy, especially on its iron ore exports. France sent Jaguar aircraft over Mauritanian territory to track down and destroy the Polisario columns.

In each case a regime had failed in its task of governing the country adequately, and as a result of this self-inflicted weakness, called upon France to come to its assistance. In each case, the regime in question had been threatened by an attack or by an organized series of incursions from beyond the frontiers of the country in question, and the attackers were associated with regimes thought to be radical, Marxist, or whatever. In the case of Zaire, the opponent was seen as Angola; in Chad it has been Libya; while in Mauritania it was Algeria.

In the last year, there has been an almost contradictory diplomatic offensive by France in which radical, and once antagonistic, regimes have been wooed, and through which France has extended its horizons beyond the Francophone states. The most impressive note was struck in the French reconciliation with President Sekou Toure's regime in Guinea. After 20 years of estrangement between the two countries and Guinea's self-imposed isolation from most Western states, Guinea has emerged to welcome the prospect of greater investment from Western countries. In January this year, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing paid a state visit to Guinea.

Third Dictator in Five Months Fall s

It has been a bad year ror tyrants in Africa. Uganda's Idi Amin fell in April, Macias Nguema Biyogo of Equatorial Guinea was ousted in August, and now Emperor Bokassa has been dethroned in the Central African Empire.

All three men had long been an embarrassment to Africa and its friends because of their megalomania and gross disregard for human rights. They admired each other, though, and, according to the Tanzania Daily News, Bokassa once suggested Amin as a model of what an African statesman should be. Africa's detractors often took advantage of their presence on the scene, using one or more of the three in support of arguments about African incompetence and inhumanity when allowed self-rule.

Although the three rulers took power in nations with different colonial histories and varying economic potential and social structures, each left his country in a shambles, amassing a personal fortune and granting favors to friends while suppressing opposition through arrest, torture, and the ruthless killing of enemies real and imaginary. Divisions and distrust mushroomed, and all three economies took a nosedive.

In none of these countries, however, did the exiled opposition coalesce into a coherent unified force. Uganda has made the best attempt a coalition, but its UNLF is too diverse to exert strong leadership, and already some of the coalition partners have defected to form a new opposition. In the other two nations the exiled groups were not party to the coups and it is unclear what role, if any, they will now play in their countries political futures.

What follows is an update on current events in each of these nations.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

' For 13 years, the country has been exploited by he who declared himself emperor and denigrated our homeland in the eyes of the world by his excessed, his ridicule and follies of grandeur. He has entirely ruined the country. The economy is destroyed."

With these words, spoken in a radio broadcast to Central African citizens just before midnight on September 20, former president David Dacko announced the ouster of Emperor Jean Bedel Bokassa in a bloodless coup. As new head of state, Dacko declared that the country would reassume the name of the Central African Republic, and that elections would be held in several months.

Bokassa faced mounting pressure after Amnesty International disclosed his role in the gruesome murders of approximately 140 schoolchildren in April. A five-nation African investigation substantiated these charges and its report led to a suspension of non-humanitarian French aid to the former colony.

Dacko says the coup was planned with the help of France and approved by several African presidents, including Gabon's Bongo, Ivory Coast's Houphouet-Boigny, Senegal's Senghor, and Zaire's Monbutu. Dacko himself flew in form Libreville, Gabon, aboard a French army jet to execute the coup, returning to his country after a two-month absence in France. Within hours after the midnight radio broadcast France had dispatched some 1200 troops to Bangui, the Central African capital.

Bokassa's Prime Minister Henry Maidou apparently cleared the way for the coup internally by informing France and Dacko of the Emperor's official visit to Libya.

Mobutu's alleged involvement in Bokassa's overthrow is surprising, since the two leaders were allies and personal friends. It has been reported, however, that Dacko and Mobutu are also financial partners, which may have influenced Zaire's leader to support the empire's overthrow.

After the coup, Bokassa left Libya and flew to Paris in his private jet, creating yet another embarassing situation for France. His entourage sat in his jet on an airport runway for 56 hours, while Bokassa demanded entry into the country, claiming rights as a French citizen by birth, and pointing to his service in the army. His demand was refused, but eventually the Ivory Coast agreed to provide Bokassa with political asylum for "humanitarian reasons."

French officials have enthusiastically decribed Dacko as a liberal, moderate, intelligent man." Some observers, however, are already branding Dacko's rule an interim measure. Ange Patasse, a former prime minister who became an opposition leader after Bokassa removed him, has called for Dacko's overthrow. He was prevented last week by French authorities from leaving Paris for the Central African Republic, and later took refuge in the Ligyan embassy in Paris.

Students have held demonstrations in Bangui demanding that Dacko purge his cabinet of figures closedly tied to Bokassa and try these officials for "crimes against humanity." Maidou, who has been appointed vice president in the new government, would rank high on the students' list.

David Dacko ruled the Central African Republic from 1959 until his cousin Bokassa overthrew him on New Years Eve, 1965. During his rule Dacko abolished all opposition parties and trade unions. Bokassa cited government corruption and economic mismangement as cause for his military coup but particularly criticized the large aid package Dacko had recently negotiated from Peking.

In one of his first press conferences, Dacko announced that he would establish official relations with South Africa because it was the best county to help develop Central Africa's natural resources the diamonds and uranium that France has long been involved in exploiting. The next day, however, Dacko recanted, saying, "After what we have been through we need to relax, and it was a serious joke."

Any move towards South Africa would alienate other black African leaders. It would also flout France's current strategy of promoting closer ties with African countries by honoring the ban against relation with South Africa, as exemplified by the recent cancellation of the French tour of the Springboks, a South African rugby team.

When asked whether he would maintain the covert business links to South Afritca established during Bokassa's rule, however, Dacko replied, "I don't know. I might," and refused to elaborate.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

The trial of Macias Nguema Biyogo began September 23 in Malabo, with Spanish security experts helping local forces keep control of crowds that tried to see or hear the proceedings.

Loudspeakers broadcast events of the trial to waiting crowds kept outside at some distance. Authorities feared that any sign of lax security might prompt a lynch mob to bring an abrupt end to the proceedings or spur supporters of the former dictator to try to free him.

The charges against Macias are mass killings, grave violations of human rights and embezzlement of state funds. The Spanish legal code, still operative in Equatorial Guinea, would require the death penalty for either of the first two charge.

The main prosecutor is a lawyer whom Macias had jailed, and those of the former president's colleagues, who are on trial with him have turned state's evidence in efforts to deflect attention from themselves and minimize their punishment. They say Macias personally ordered many killings and the burning of villages where he believed his opposition lived. A former prison supervisor added that Macias frequently visited the jails to verify that his orders had been carried out, although the execution orders were never given in writing.

Macias calls the charges "nonsense" and suggests his record is good in building roads, schools, and housing projects, but the trial is expected to be short and result in the rormer presidents's execution.

Political activity is currently forbidden in Equatorial Guinea, and the army will for the time being supervise everything, according to the new head of state Teodoro Nguema Mba Nzogo, who adds that civilians may be asked to participate in the government.

First priority is revitalization of the economy. The European Economic Community and Spain have already begun to help, sending food, medicine, technicians, and advisors. European confidence in the new government is likely to be strengthened by the reopening of the nation's churches and promises to return property confiscated during the Macias years.

Although much effort is going into reestablishing links to the West, especially Spain, Tiodoro Nguema has told his countrymen that cordial ties will also be maintained with such countries as Cuba, China and the USSR, which have helped the country in the past.

UGANDA

It has taken six months but Uganda seems finally to be beginning to get the much-needed aid sought since the overthrow of Idi Amin in April. United Nations agencies such as the Development Program, UNICEF, FAO, and WHO were most prompt in responding, and in late September the European Economic Community granted $26 million for economic development, as well as several vehicles and sorely-needed medical supplies.

Although the United States and Britain have both promised aid, the amounts disbursed are far smaller than the requests and consignments are slow in arriving. After the U.S. Congress lifted the prohibition aid to Uganda on September 21, some $6 million in immediate aid was shifted to Uganda out of the current budget which ends September 30. According to U.S. government sources, only slightly more will go to Uganda next year.

To the chagrin of Uganda's leadership, a thriving black market remains a yet unconquered barrier to the proper distribution of aid. An August article in the Economist says that "Red Cross milk powder, newly-donated school books and West German government drugs are openly on sale in Kampala." Because the continuing shortage of many consumer goods helps the black market flourish, both local production and trade, as well as aid, must pick up before the problem will be solved.

Both diplomatic and internal sources, meanwhile, report and improved security situation in Kampala since the imposition of a curfew. Authorities even freed 237 detained former Amin-supporters in mid-September, though thousands more remain in prison. Many of these will face trial in new tribunals set up for that purpose.

Bob Astles, British-born aide to the former dictator, is already on trial, facing numerous murder and theft charges. Everybody expects Astles to be convicted and executed.

'Adapt or Die'

By announcing additional labor law changes and raising the possibility of abolishing restrictions on interracial sex and marriage, Botha has taken his political program one step further.

Having warned right-wing white Nationalists to "adapt or die" in a "bloodbath before breakfast," he has demanded that the party back his efforts to create a contented black middleclass as insurance against rebellion.

When the Wiehahn Commission's report calling for major labor reforms was followed in June by legislation which stopped short of the commission's recommendations, reaction both domestically and internationally was highly critical. The changes announced last week, however, will bring the law into line with Wiehahn when they are made official.

Minister of Manpower Utilization S.P. (Fanie) Botha has now extended trade union rights to all blacks working in South Africa, except those from foreign countries like Mozambique, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland.

Workers from the independent homelands - Venda, Bophuthatswana, and Transkei – are specifically included in the extension. They will be allowed to join unions even if homeland leaders oppose the idea.

Although the move was welcomed by National Clothing Workers President Lucy Mvubelo, other black labor leaders expressed reservations. The government has the authority to withdraw organizing rights from any particular union whenever it wishes, for example. And the new provisions for registration of black unions gives the government extensive powers of control.

Many independent black unions are holding back on registration, awaiting clarifications of the announced changes or refusing to act until forced to do so.

In other actions, the government has lifted restrictions on several labor activists, including Americanborn Jean Tyacke, her husband Eric, and a third white, Loet Douwes Dekker. They were among some two dozen persons banned in 1976, apparently for worker-related activities.

The government has also selected the heads of the two new labor bodies called for by the Wiehahn Commission. The National Manpower Commission will be chaired by Hennie Reynders, and the all-powerful industrial Court will be presided over by Professor Nic Wiehahn, the commission chairman.

Under Reynders, a former executive director of the Federated Chambers of Industry, the Manpower Commission will oversee the workings of the new system and register new unions. The Industrial Court, for its part, will settle disputes and, in effect, control the pace of change. It will be empowered, for example, to determine what is 'unfair labor practice' in cases where white workers maintain their interests are threatened by the advancement of blacks.

PLATICA CON JORGE PALACIOS: ANALISIS A LA EXPERIENCIA POLITICA DE CHILE.

Por: Jose G. Trejo.

El chileno Jorge Palacios es un escritor, filósofo y político-exiliado por sus principios marxistas-leninistas-maoistas. Actualmente esta haciendo una gira por varias ciudades de Estados Unidos presentando pláticas analíticas de la experiencia política de Chile después de la caída de Allende. El 3 de Octubre el se dirigió a una audiencia de unos 30 estudiantes de UMASS, donde expuso su tésis política de la situación de su país, y descrita en mucho mas detalle en su libro;"Chile: Un Compromiso Histórico."

Jorge comenzó su plática dando datos numéricos de la población chilena afectada por el golpe. El nos dijo que Chile es un país con 10 millones de habitantes, y que en las primeras semanas del golpe 30,000 personas fueron asesinadas, que 150,000 personas han sido encarceladas y muchas de ellas horriblemente torturadas, y que hasta la fecha hay como un millón de personas exiladas, repartidas en varios paises del mundo. El también nos informó que desde entonces la junta ha disuelto las instituciones burguesas, ha desmembrado los sindicatos, ha cerrado el Parlamento, ha anulado por completo la prensa de oposición, y ha reprimido toda libertad de expresión. De tal modo continuó diciendo Jorge, que el repudio en contra de la junta militar se ha hecho sentir en todos los ámbitos políticos del mundo entero.

Jorge Palacios nos explicó que las experiencias del golpe han sido muchas y como ejemplos nos citó que la "ferocidad e hipocrecía" de los " sectores reaccionarios" usaron todos los medios posibles para derrocar a Allende. Ellos promovieron el mercado negro e incitaron el sabotage en el campo para desquiciar a la economía nacional y así crear una crisis económica que destabilizara la administración del gobierno. Todas estas actividades fueron principalmente planeadas y financiadas por la CIA. Jorge nos dijo que esos "sectores reaccionarios" organizaron desfiles protestando por los problemas que ellos mismos habían creado en un principio. Que los tribunales de justicia del país también jugaron un importante papel en contra de Allende, condenando a los campesinos que se ponían en huelga e invadian latifundios y por otro lado condonando y dejando en libertad a los encarecedores, acaparadores, y saboteadores de los sectores opositores. Aún mas, que el mismo Parlamento bajo la dirección de las "fuerzas reaccionarias" rechazaron proyectos de ley que condenaban a los acaparadores y encarecedores que promovían el mercado negro. Y como prueba de ello citó que inmediatamente después del golpe, todos esos productos que estaban encarecidos en el mercado negro, aparecieron en abundancia y a precios mucho mas bajos.

La junta militar ahora enmienda la constitución por decreto , nos aseveró Jorge, y nos explicó también el "carácter de clase" de las fuerzas armadas, diciendo que ellos no son equánimes e imparciales con el pueblo sino que estan apegados a la burguesía que controla el poder. Y que uno de los errores mas graves de Allende, fué el de considerar a los militares apolíticos, ya que desde antes de ser electo, ya se habían hecho tres propuestas separadas para un golpe de estado en caso de que Allende ganara. Incluso que la CIA tuvo problemas en controlar y unificar a los golpistas. Ya después de haber sido electo, hubo en total 6 intentos de golpe anteriores al último que lo derrocó y le costo la vida.

" el fracaso del socialismo en Chile y el éxito de las revoluciones de Nicaragua e Irán, está basado en que las dos últimas han sido auténticos movimientos revolucionarios que tuvieron el apoyo armado y total del pueblo..."

Jorge también nos informó, que por otro lado el partido Comunista auspiciado por el "imperialismo-social" de la Unión Soviética, desempeñó una extrana alianza con el partido de la Democracia Cristiana auspiciado por el "imperialismo yanqui", los cuales también sabotearon al régimen de Allende en varios sectores del país. Las razones que nos dió Jorge, del origen de esta alianza fué que la Unión Soviética no tenía ningún interés en que Allende tuviera éxito en su empresa política hacia el socialismo. Incluso mencionó que los rusos le negaron a Allende un importante crédito por 500 millones de dólares que urgían a la economía de Chile. Es decir que la indiferencia económica de los soviéticos, unida a la negativa de vender armas al país y las actividades traidoras del partido Comunista, cooperaron de un modo contundente a la caída de Allende.

Después del asesinato, la política económica cambió radicalmente. Cuando Allende estuvo en el poder, asevero Jorge, el favoreció a los sectores medios, combatió la cesantía, bajo la expropiación de los bancos otorgó créditos amplios para promover la economía, aumentó los salarios y con ello el poder adquisitivo de los obreros. Sin embargo después del golpe, la junta "promovió la superexplotación del pueblo" y que devolvió los latifundios a sus dueños anteriores, otorgando todas las garantías a los "sectores reaccionarios".

Según Jorge Palacios, toda esta experiencia nos demuestra que "el proletariado solo puede hacer una revolución total para poder tomar el poder y defenderlo en contra de las superpotencias". Con esto se refirió a los americanos con su imperialismo yanqui y a los soviéticos con su "imperialismo social". Que los dos fueron considerados como enemigos de Allende y que formaron una extrana alianza que impidió a Allende a gobernar y usar todas sus facultades de poder que su cargo de primer magistrado le otorgaba bajo la constitución nacional.

Esta plática con Jorge terminó con un período de preguntas que la audiencia dirigió al conferenciante. Las preguntas fueron de carácter general y clarificaciones en cuanto a la alianza de las superpotencias para derrocar a Allende.

Como resumen de esta plática sobre la experiencia chilena, se desprenden tres conclusiones principalmente:

Primero: Para que exista una revolución total del proletariado, las armas deben ser entragadas al pueblo para que tome el poder completamente y lo defienda. Así como ocurrió en Irán y Nicaragua.

Segundo: El imperialismo yanqui con todos sus medios legales e ilegales de intervención en la política interna de otros paises, debe ser rechachazado categóricamente y combatido incansablemente:

Y tercero: El imperialismo social de los soviéticos y sus aliados, también deben ser tratados enérgicamente y en la misma forma que los anteriores, en cualquier insinuación de intervención, legal o ilegal, directa o indirecta. Sólo asi puede existir completa libertad, independencia y soberanía en una nación.

Finalmente para terminar este análisis, podemos concluir en una sola frase que; el fracazo del socialismo en Chile y el éxito de las revoluciones de Nicaragua e Irán, está basado en que las dos últimas han sido auténticos movimientos revolucionarios que tuvieron el apoyo armado y total del pueblo que supo rechazar toda intervención del capitalismo americano y del comunismo soviético. Fundamentalmente esto es lo que nosotros entendemos por una solución política TERCERMUNDISTA.

EL SALVADOR:

SAN SALVADOR ___

Six leftist gunmen kidnapped a prominent Salvadoran banker Saturday from his home in the affluent western section of the capital, family members said.

Luis Escalante Arcé, 65, president of El Salvador's Banco Agricola Comericial, was apparently shot and wounded during the abduction when he tried to resist.

Mrs. Marta Sol de Escalante, the banker's wife, told police she and her husband were in bed when the abductors forced their way into their home. She said her husband, startled by the intruders, went into the living room to investigate.

She said she then heard five shots, but by the time she entered the living room, the gunmen had already left with her husband.

Mrs Escalante said there was blood in the living room and the entrance to the home.

A gardner working at the Escalante residence said there were six gunmen involved in the abduction.

None of the leftist political groups active in the violence-torn Central American nation immediately claimed responsibility for the abduction.

Sources close to Escalant described him as a millionaire who owns a number of businesses in El Salvador.

In another development Saturday, arsonists set fire to three businesses in San Salvador, authorities said.

They said the fires, set almost simultaneously, erupted in the Adoc shoe factory, a branch of the Banco Credito Popular and a jewelry store. The jewelry store is three blocks from the national palace.

Authorities said the extent of damage from the blazes was not immediately determinied. They said no group had claimed responsibility for the fires.

ARGENTINA:

NEWSPAPER FADES EDITOR ARRESTED

When Jacobo Timerman was arrested by Argentine authorities in 1977, his newspaper, La Opinion, was one of the most respected independent voices in all of Latin America.

Now, as he is released from still unexplained house arrest and allowed to emigrate to Israel, La Opinion has become a pale shell of its one – time independent, out spoken self.

No longer in Mr. Timerman's hands, the paper's able staff has been dispersed and its facilities taken over by Argentina's military government.

With freedom of the press a precious commodity in much of Latin America, the sage of La Opinion and the plight of Mr. Timerman, particularly during the military dictatorship under which Argentines currently live, provide dramatic evidence that the public's right to know is seldom respected under a dictatorship.

Yet for a brief period, from its founding in 1971 until Mr. Timerman was arrested on April 15, 1977, La Opinion gave Argentines a heavy diet of world news, along with trenchant political analysis and commentary.

The paper was molded after Paris's Le Monde. A tabloid, it rejected the sensationalism of some Buenos Aires newspapers, choosing instead to concentrate on both international and national affairs. It pushed a moderate leftist line in its editorials, but there was room in its columns for contrary opinion.

Regarded by Argentine journalists as a hard – working colleague, Mr. Timerman gathered around him some of the ablest newsmen in Argentina. He attracted others from abroad. By the time the military came to power in March, 1976, La Opinion was easily the best Spanish – language newspaper in Argentina, having edged the traditional papers, La Prensa, La Nacion, and La Razon, and the mass – circulation fellow tabloid, Clarin, for acclaim.

La Opinion and Mr. Timerman had their critics-some of whom accused Mr. Timerman of being less than honest in some of his dealings outside the paper. A Russian – born Jew, he was brought to Argentina when three years old in 1924. He later developed friendships with other members of Argentina's Jewish community, such as banker David Graiver, who has been accused of bankrolling some of Argentina's terrorists.

At one point, after he was arrested, the Argentine military actually linked Mr Timerman with Mr. Graiver, who was reported killed in a 1976 plane crash in Mexico. Being Jewish may well have had something to do with his troubles, for there has long been a thinly veiled antiSemitic attitude on the part of many Argentines, including some military men.

But Mr. Timerman's real problems stem from his newspaper's staunch human – rights stand, which angered the Argentine military. When Edgardo Sajon, graphics director of La Opinion vanished without a trace on his way to work April [illegible] the newpaper began vigorously probing even more deeply, ignoring what many saw as a warning to La Opinion to drop its human – rights campaign.

Fifteen days later, Mr. Timerman was arrested.

Although charged with crimes against Argentina, no proof was ever given, nor was he brought to trial. Moreover, the Argentine Supreme Court ruled twice that the country's military had no right to keep Mr. Timerman under detention.

Twoweeks ago, the court again ordered him freed, saying the act under which he was held "lacks the proper legal foundation."

THE PAST BETEEN MEXICO AND THE U.S.

The Other Side of the Coin. (Part II)

By: Philip Russell.

Further US expansion at Mexican expense took place with the Gadsden Purchase in 1853. This area, in what today is southern Arizona and New Mexico, was secured for its mineral resources, the building of an east-west railroad, and to pave the way for further expansion toward the Gulf of California. The purchase of the area was facilitated by bribes. The spirit of the negotiations leading up to the sale is indicated by the American negotiator who stated, "If Mexico doesn't sell the area, we shall take it."

From the time of the Gadsden Purchase until the American Civil War there was constant pressure for further expansion into Mexico. In 1857 the American Ambassador to Mexico said, "Give us what we ask for,...or we'll take it ourselves." In 1858 President Buchanan addressed Congress and stated that parts of Mexican terriroty should be occupied in order to collect the Mexican debt, and that if the debt wasn't paid, the territory should be annexed.

Given its involvement with a Civil War, the US couldn't play a major role in the struggle between Maximillian and Juarez. Offically the United States embargoed shipment of arms to either party since they were needed for the war effort and there was fear that exported arms might fall into the hands of the Confederacy. Despite the embargo, there was a flow of American arms to both sides of the Mexican conflict.

Generally the US was pro-Jujarez since it saw Maximilian as a threat to further US expansions. On April 4, 1864 the Congress passed a resolution saying "it does not accord with the policy of the United States to acknowledge a monarchial government, erected on the ruins of any republican government in America, under the auspices of any European power. Once the American Civil War was over, US veterans crossed into Mexico and served on both sides. The tendency was for Confederates to fight for Maximilian and for Union veterans to fight with Juarez. At this time the US embargo was lifted and arms be gan to flow to Juarez's forces. The shipments included modern rifles and artillery used in Juarez southward march.

After the war there was a major shift in the relations between the US and Mexico. The dominant liberals in Mexico not only welcomed foreign trade, but were in a much better position to resist further American terriroti al expansion. Americans saw that there was more than one way to profit from Mexico. Secretary of State Seward voiced this opinion when he stated that Americans should "value dollars more, and domination less." and that business expansion into Mexico would lead to its peaceful annexation.

In exchange for recognizing Profirio Diaz's government, the United States received concession to build railroads in Mexico. This opened up Mexico to pervasive American influence. The north of Mexico came under especially strong American control. William Randolf Hearst alone had 3 million hectares there. By the end of the Portiriato, Mexico accounted for two-thirds of all American investment in Latin America. This led to widespread anti-Americanism. Mexicans were excluded from choice jobs with American companies. American conductors and ticket sellers working for US railroads often did not speak Spanish. The degree of American involvement in Mexico is indicated by the fact that the American embassy in Mexico produced more diplomatic correspondence than any other embassy, often a third of all diplomatic corresponce.

Near the end of the Porfiriato the US saw that Diaz was destined to fall, regardless of American policy. The US then began to try to have Diaz replaced and eliminate the possibility of a social revolution. US support shifted from Diaz to other figures in the government, and them to Madero, who was not seen as a threat to US interests. As a result Madero was allowed to openly carry out his efforts to topple Diaz from US soil. In addition, fearing for Mexican sovereignty, Diaz began to favor British over American interests. It was felt that Madero would reverse this trend. Madero was financed by various American businessmen, such as oilman Henry K. Pierce who gave him $685,000 in hopes that he would be repaid with oil concessions once Madero was in power. US Ambassador Wilson said, "The United States hasn't the slightest interest in intervening in Mexico, as long as the present government doesn't fall, or it is not replaced by irresponsible elements."

Once in office Madero began to lose US support. He was never able to effectively control the whole country, and was thus unable to guarantee the safety of American interests. For the first time in Mexico. In addition his inability to smash Zapata's rebellion worried the US government. US policies with regard to Madero were not well coordinated, and President Taft, the State Department and Ambassador Wilson often had conflicting positions.

Once in power Huerta began to have problems with the US. Initially the US tried to squeeze concessions in exchange for recognition. Failing to get the desired compensation for losses suffered by US citizens and concessions on other points, the US postponed recognizing Huerta until after the inauguration of President Woodrow Wilson.

Once Wilson took office he began to apply his moral notions of government to the Mexican situtaton. He declined to recognize Mexico since the Huerta government lacked "constitutional legitimacy."Furthermore Huerta favored British investment over American investment, further antagonizing US interests.

In February 1914 Wilson lifted the embargo on arms shipped to Mexico. This enabled the Constitutionalists to receive arms shipments by land. Huerta was already receiving arms by sea. Soon afterward American money began to flow to Carranza and oil companies refused to pay taxes to Huerta. As resistance to Huerta strengthened in Mexican head of state more favorably disposed to the US, and (3) end the internal strife which was endangering American investments.

To help push Huerta out the United States launched an invasion of Mexico. The pretext chosen for the intervention was the arrest for one and a half hours of eight Americans from the cruiser Dolphin. They had gone into a restricted area at the Port of Tampico. When the port commander only apologized for their arrest, but wouldn't fire a 21-gun salute. President Wilson took this as excuse to intervene. The invasion force landed at Veracruz, the destination of a load of weapons for Huerta which was arriving on a German ship. On April 21,1914, American troops landed. There were some 19 Americans killed in the invasion, and at least 200 Mexicans, including caea the naval academy, whose resistance was silenced by naval cannons firing on the city. The occupation of Veracruz inflamed anti-Americanism throughout the country and resulted in the stoning of American hotels, newspapers and consulates, and attacks on Americans.

The attack backfired in that Huerta used the invasion to rally people around him in defense of the nation. Carranza, Huerta's foe, even denounced the invasion as an affront to Mexican national sovereignty. For that remark, Wilson ordered that arms once again be embargoed to the Constitutionalists. The US occupation hastened Huerta's downfall, not depriving him of arms, but by depriving him of customs's receipts. With Huerta gone, the US had no pretext for turther occupation of the port, and the US forces withdrew in NOvermber 1914.

With Huerta gone the US put its support behind Carranza, seeing him as preferable to the peasant leaders Villa and Zapata. an outstanding example of the support thrown to Carranza was the US premitting Carranza's troops to be carried by rail through US territory to launch an attack on Villa's forces at Agua Prieta, across the border from Douglas, Arizona.

Perhaps in response to this, on March 9, 1916 Villa's forces launched an attack on the town of Columbus, New Mexico, killing 15 Us citizens. A week later General John Pershing marched into Mexico on his "punitive" expedition in an attempt to find Villa. Pershing's troops fought a few indecisive skirmishes with both Villista and Carrancista forces, but never achieved their stated aim of "punishing Villa." Had not the US's options been limited by the coming WW I, perhaps the US would have pressed the attack more vigorously. As it was, Pershing's forces were withdrawn February 5, 1917.

Once Carranza consolidated power he became something of a disappointment to the US. He tripled oil taxes and revised mining legislation to eliminate foreign monopolies. This was followed by the 1917 Constitution which gave the government control over mineral resources. This rather mild assertion of national soverignty over mineral wealth brought forth cries for US intervention. World War I however blocked any possible action.

Carranza's attitude toward foreign investment was that foreign investments were not only welcome, but they were the key to Mexican prosperity. However he did not want investments to be concentrated in isolated enclaves producing raw materials, but rather to be in industry and commerce. Furthermore he wanted investors to be under Mexican law and not to expect protection by the armed forces of their country of origin. Carranza saw that a complete break with the US would be suicidal and never contemplated it.

The coup in 1920 opened up a whole new ball game. The US had recognized Carranza to strengthen him in his fight against the radical peasant leaders. By 1920 however there were no threats from the left, so the US could afford to pressure Obregon in exchange for recognizing him. Obregon stalled for three years rather than yielding to US demands to back down on the nationalist provisions in the 1917 Constitution. It was only after the US cut of credit and threatened to support a rival army faction that Obregon backed down. In order to obtain US recognition Obregon signed the Bucareli agreements in August 1923. These agreements limited Mexican government control over foreign interests, especially oil, and extablished that (1) expropriated US haciendas could be paid for in bonds (2) a size limit would be placed on the amount of land which could be taken from US citizens by the agrarian reform, (3) oil lands acquired and improved before the 1917 Constitution was ratified were to remain in the hands of oil companies, and (4) a claims commission was to be set up for handling claims by Americans for war damage or past expropriation. The payoff for these concessions was quick. Not only was the Obregon government recognized, but the US supported Obregon government recognized, but the US supported Obregon in putting down the 1924 coup attempt by Adolfo de la Huerta, who had the backing of 60 percent of the army. This support included 17 planes piloted by Americans, 15,000 rifles, and five million cartridges, all on credit.

From the Treaty of Bucareli until the Cardenas administration there was an era of good feelings were largely a result of Mexico not threatening US interest. On June 17, 1925 US Secretary of State Kellogg stated: It must be perfectly clear that this government will continue maintaining the present government in Mexico only so long as it protects American lives and the rights of Americans and lives up to international agreements and oblications.

The constant threat of US intervention during the 1920's led to the de-radicalization of the workers' movement since it was accepted that if workers became radical, the US would intervene.

The US continued to pull Mexico to the right, especially when US Ambassador Dewight Morrow arrived and became a good friend of President Calles.

Relations with the US have not only changed, but have changed radically and are now on a plane of President Calles. In 1928 Calles said in his State of the Union message that his government was mexico, underpopulated and extensive, has opened its door to all foreigners who have no humiliationg superiority complexes, nor desire anti-social privileges and who come to our soil to further agriculture, industry, science or the arts with their labor, their capital, or their scientific knowledge, which can then enter our way of life and penetrate our collective soul.

Relations detiorated again during the Cardenas administraion, especially after the 1938 oil nationalization. However they never reached the acrimonious state they did during the 1910-7 period. President Roosevelt's Good Neighbor Policy channeled response into boycotts instead of the open intervention of a generation earlier. The fact that most of the following nationalization fulfilled Carranza's goal of putting foreign investors on equal footing with Mexican industry and commerce, and preventing the uncontrolled exploitation of raw materials by foreigners. Two months after the oil nationalization Cardenas stated?

Once the US accepted these ground rules, it found that by competing on an equal footing with Mexicans, it could enter industry and commerce and manage to do better than it had before.

In 1940 Sinclair was the first US oil company to break ranks and accept $8.5 million for its expropriated oil holdings. In 1941, with W W II looming on the horizon, US Mexican relations were again smoothed over. Mexico agreed to settle outstanding claims by Americans for $40 million, sign a new trade treaty, and in the process obtain credit to purchase machinery. A claims commission was set up to arbitrate the value of the expropriated oil holdings. In 1942 idt set compensation for US oil companies at 123.995,991 (Britain settled for $81 million in 1948).

As a result of the boycott which followed the nationalization of the oil industry. Mexico was forced to barter oil to Germany for manufactured goods. However as relations improved with the US, Mexican tankers were sunk by German subs in the Gulf of Mexico and Mexico declared war on Germany. Mexico's main contributions to the war effort were raw materials shipped to the US and 200,00 Mexicans who came to the US to work in agriculture and railroad maintenance. Mexico also sent a squadron of pilots to fight the Japanese.

President Aleman set the tone for post-war US Mexican relations. Truman and Aleman visited each other's capitals, a first for either an American or a Mexican president. Under Aleman US investment in Mexican economy, the distinctive feature of post World War II US Mexican relations, began its rapid rise. This growth of American investment in Mexico is indicated by these figures:

1943	$268 MILLION
1950	$415 MILLION
1960	$795 MILLION
1970	$1797 MILLION
1973	$1993 MILLION

The Third World Womans center invites all Third World Women to attend the organization's first meeting of the semester. Thursday at 7:00 p.m. at New Africa House.

CCEBS Board Gathering

The CCEBS students are invited to an informal meeting with the CCEBS Board of Directors on Thursday evening, Octobrt 11, 7:00-9:30pm at the Maclcom X Center (Southwest Residential College). This meeting is being held in response to students' requests to meet the Board of Directors to discuss their concerns and provide input into the CCEBS program. The meeting will be devoted mainly to students' questions and comments.

The CCEBS board includes faculty, students, and staff. The faculty members are from the departments of Math, Engineering, Sociology, Health Sciences, Afro-Am, Sports Sciences, Communication Disorders, Music, Education, etc. Interested students will have the opportunity to talk with any of these members about their own departments.

This meeting is a good opportunity for CCEBS students to meet the Board members, learn more about the program, and provide recommendations to the Board for CCEBS policy.

THIRD WORLD THEATER SERIES

Smith College Events

Among the public lectures at Smith College next week (October 8-13) will be talks on scientific, historical, and pliticial topics.

Vera Kistiakowshy of the laboratory of nuclear science at Massachusetts Institute of Technology will speak Monday at 7:30pm in Seelye Hall 10 about "The Current Status of Women in Science."

Helen Suzman, member of the South African Parliament and foe of her government's apartheid policies, will give the second talk in her siries as a distinguished visiting lecturer at Smith, "The South African Watergate: The Information Scandal," Tuesday at 4:30pm in Seelye Hall 10.

The college's annual Blakeslee lecture, Tuesday at 8pm in Wright Hall, will feataure two psychology professors who will discuss "Teaching Sign Language to Chimpanzee."

at Massachusetts Institute of Technology will speak Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Seelye Hall 10 about "The Current Status of Women in Science."

R. Allen Gardner and Beatrice Gardner challenged the assumption that the use of language is the ultimate behavioral basis for distinguishing people from animals with their work with Washoe, a female chimpanzee to whom they taught Ameslan (American Sign Language) starting when she was 11 months old.

Washoe learned over 132 signs from simple words to complete sentences in 51 months and eventually was signing herself, other chimps, humans, even cats and dogs.

The Gardners who are on the faculty at the University of Nevada, will discuss the research and findings of Project Washoe and their current project in which several chimpanzees are being exposed to sign language at birth.

Martha Ackelsberg and Donna Devine of the Smith department of government will talk about "Recovering Women's History, Notes from the Mediterranean, "Wednesday at 4 p.m. in Seelye Hall 10.

Hugues Ryser, M.D., professor of pathology and pharmacology at Boston University School of Medicine, will present the second lecture in a series on the etiology of cancer co-sponsored by the Massachusetts division of the American Cancer Society and the department of the biological sciences at Smith, Friday, at 4:30 p.m. in McConnell Hall, Room B 05. His topic will be "Mechanisms of Chemical Carcinogenesis."

Dr. Ryser, who has taught pharmacology at HarvardMedical School and the University of Maryland School of Medicine speaks frequently for the American Cancer Society on cancer-causing substances in the environment.

The 25th anniversary celebration of the establishment of Helen Hills Chapel at Smith College will continue next week (October 7-13) with three lectures and a panel discussion on topics related to the celebration's theme, "The Impact of Pluralism on American Religious Communities."

James Forbes, associate professor of worship and homiletics, Union Theological Seminary, New York, will discuss "Pluralism: The View from the Black Pentecostal Tradition" Sunday at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall.

Mr. Forbes, who was educated at Howard University, Union Theological Seminary, and Colgate-Rochester Divinity School and received a clinical pastoral education certificate at the Medical College of Virginia, has written and spoken widely on the subjects of preaching, spiritual renewal, church mission, and evangelism. He has been pastor of several churches, including St. John's United Holy Church of America, Richmond, Virginia.

Rabbi Reuven Kimelman, assistant professor of Talmud and Midrash in the department of Near Eastern and Judaic studies at Brandeis University, will speak Monday at 8 p.m. in Writht Hall on "Pluralism: The View From Judaism."

He was educated at Columbia University and the Jewish Theological Seminary and Yale University, and has written a number of articles, including "Nonviolence in the Talmud" and "The Rabbinic Ethics of Protest."

The third lecturer in the chapel series will be Sister Mary Luke Tobin, a member of the congregation of the Sisters of Loretto of which she was President from 1958 until 1979. She will speak about "Pluralism: The View from Catholicism" Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Seelye Hall 10.

Sister Mary Luke, a noted peace activist, is founder of the Thomas Merton Center in Denver and is a former president of the leadership Conference of Women Religious. She has served as a member of several international peace missions including delegations that traveled to Vietnam and to Paris on fact-finding and peace-seeking trips.

The week's three speakers along with Rosemary Haughton, British theologian and founder of Lothlorien, an international community in Scotland, will present a panel discussion of the "Perils and Promises of Pluralism" Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall.

Staff Position Available at AFSC

Introduction: The American Friends Service Committee is a sixty-two year old Quaker Organization which seeks to express the testimonies and principles of the Society of Friends through the implementation of service, social change and education programs in the U.S. and abroad. AFSC work is founded on a commitment to nonviolence, eliminating racism and sexism, sharing the world's resources, and developing institutions based on social and economic justice.

Western Mass. AFSC: The Western Mass. office of AFSC is staffed by one full-time person and one part-time staff assistant (for which there is a job opening.) This office works principally on issues of reversing the arms race, southern Africa and global justice-right sharing of the world's resources.

Job Description: The staff assistant position is for three days or twenty-one hours of work per week. Clerical skills such as typing, bookkeeping and filing are necessary, as well as writing skills and an ability to do some graphics work. Reports, press releases, letters to legislators and io newspapers, leaflets and flyers, as well as basic office correspondence, comprise much of the work.

The staff assistant must have a firm belief in nonviolence, must be interested in community involvement and should have some history of involvement in social change.

A two year commitment to the job is required. Candidates should know the area; use of a car would be beneficial. A base salary of $4500 is offered, negotiable according to qualifications and experience.

Affirmative Action: AFSC is committed to an Affirmative Action hiring policy and will make a vigorous effort to recruit candidates from the following groups: Third World, women, open gay, handicapped, ex-prisoners and members of the Society of friends.

Deadline for Application: Applications will be taken until October 18, 1979.

For more information or an application, contact Frances Crowe, 3 Langworthy Road, Northampton, Ma. 01060, 413-584-8975.

Power struggle

The energy showdown continues, as New England activists are demanding a voice in future decisions

The Seabrook clash: 'force met with force'

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

HAMPTON, N.H. — Police picked up and threw aside stubborn anti-nuclear activists yesterday who blocked a sheriff's van carrying 12 protesters that had been arrested during three days of demonstrations at the Seabrook atomic power plant.

The protesters slashed tires on two police vans and blocked a sheriff's van being used to transport the 12 demonstrators back to jail, police said.

"Force was met with force, as much as was needed," said Hampton Police Chief Robert Mark.

About 150 demonstrators, the remnants of an estimated 1,500 who tried unsuccessfully to occupy the nearby Seabrook construction site all weekend, gathered in chilling rain at the wood-frame Hampton District Courthouse to protest the arraignment of the 12.

State and local police then moved in, grabbing demonstrators and flinging them out of the way.The protesters, who were passive when police used Mace, tear gas and riot clubs to force them away from the plant, this time fought back, kicking and swinging.

In 15 minutes, the way was cleared, and the van pulled away, one demonstrator clinging to the bumper for a short time.

An unidentified woman from New York was treated at Exeter Hospital for a possible fractured ankle. Janice Betteman, 31, of Cleveland, her left ear bandaged and dried blood on her collar, said: "They were making a mockery of the court system and our rights. We can't let them get away with it. The police have gotten mean, and we can do the same."

Most of the demonstrators who were arrested during the weekend refused to give their names to police.

Valley march planned to raise energy awareness

ByJEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

In an effort to raise public energy consciousness, area citizens will walk from Mt. Toby in Sunderland to the Amherst Common this Sunday is a Safe Enefgy Walk.

Sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research group, a consumer advocate organization, the walk will end with a Safe Energy Fair on the common, where local energy experts will speak.

The walkers have been soliciting pledges for each mile walked to raise money for future MassPIRG projects, MassPIRG staffer John Pepi said. The group hopes sponsors will pledge $1 per mile walked to raise an estimated $2,000 to $4,000 for Mass PIRG projects, Pepi said.

The walk begins at 11:00 a.m., outside bridal stables near Mt. Toby. The walk will follow Rt. 63 into Amherst with walkers scheduled to arrive at the common by 4 p.m. The walk is being held in conjunction with a similar MassPIRG walk, originating at Walden Pond in Concord.

MassPIRG staff coordinator Malcolm Quint said fair speakers include state Rep. Rick Roche, D-Springfield, who will discuss small-scale hydroelectric projects in Massachusetts. Quint also said UMass Prof. William Heronomus will speak on wind and energy research.

The fair will also feature music and energy exhibits, by such local groups as the Energy Conservation Analysis Project.

The walk was planned to enlighten the community about energy alternatives and to provide more detailed education on energy issues for those participating in the walk, Pepi said.

New England Electric may lower costs

By CHRISTOPHER LINDSAY
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — New England's second-largest electric utility unveiled a 15- year plan yesterday it says will save its customers $1.2 billion.

New England Electric System Cos., with a million customers in the region, made the announcement at simultaneous news conferences in Concord, Boston and Providence, R.I.

The system has abandoned the "traditional utility planning methods" of forecasting demands and building power plants to meet that estimate, said Russell Holden, president of Granite State Electric Co., which has 25,000 New Hampshire customers, and is one of three utilities in the system.

New England Electric also operates Massachusetts Electric Co., with 750,000 customers; and Narragansett Electric Co., which has 265,000 customers in Rhode Island.

"The conventional approach has been to build nuclear plants to meet our basic energy needs," and use hydro for peak demand, Holden said. But that approach has failed to win necessary public support," he pointed out.

Thus, the system intends to reduce its projected annual increase in demand from 3.1 percent to 1.9 percent and reduce its use of imported oil for power production from 73 percent to 10 percent, Holden said.The system would encourage conservation to reduce some of the peak demand. It would also employ its patented system that shuts down by remote control "electricity guzzlers" such as water heaters, air conditioners and electric heat.

The proposed system would shut down by remote control "electricity guzzlers" such as water heaters, air conditioners and electric heat just enough to level out daily peak demand periods.

The interruption would be brief, he said, just enough to level out daily peak demand periods.

The remote system is not now in place, but the utility said it will seek voluntary cooperation from consumers and regulatory authority to implement the plan.

Because electricity can't be stored, leveling out the load would spare the utility from building generating capacity that is only used "for a few short hours" each day, said Robert Bigelow, the system's vice president for planning.

The system planned to sharply reduce its consumption of foreign oil by investing $335 million to:

—Reconvert six of its oil-fired generating units at power plants in Salem and Somerset, Mass., to coal.

—Expand a domestic oil and gas exploration program in which it owns one-half interest.

—Build facilities for additional hydroelectric power.

—Build a wood-fueled power plant somewhere in its region.

—Build or buy a wind or other alternative energy plant.

—Continue its investment in nuclear plants under construction in Seabrook; Waterford, Conn.; and Salem, Mass.

Pope inspires Walpole vigil

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — A group of relatives and friends of Walpole State Prison inmates used Pope John Paul II's visit as an inspiration for a candlelight vigil outside the prison walls yesterday night to demand more humane conditions.

"It was very peaceful," said a prison spokesman after the group of about 25 disbanded their hour-long protest.

The group, using microphones and amplifiers, read poems and prayers and sang songs to the inmates, "to let the inmates know that we do care," said Dolores Cummings Campion, whose son Steven is an inmate.

Gasohol sold in Boston area

READING, Mass. (AP) — Twenty-three Texaco stations scattered throughout the Boston area began selling gasohol yesterday to test consumer reaction.

Texaco officials held a ceremony at a Reading service station to announce the sales, but said no special promotion of the gasoline-alcohol mixture was planned.

"This is just a test. We don't have any sales targets," said H. G. "Top" Ingram, Texaco spokesman for the Northeast.

Ingram said some drivers may experience better gas mileage with gasohol, but added that Texaco is not making any claims in that regard.

Although the federal government exempts gasohol from its usual four-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax, the product is selling here at $1.06.8 a gallon.

Mass Legislature may OK white collar pay increases

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Legislature has cleared the way for a bill which would authorize a $30 million pay raise benefiting 6,000 white-collar state workers.

A bill enacted in both the House and Senate yesterday without any debate gives the King administration the money it needs to advance several categories of professional employees by one pay grade. Among workers to enjoy the promotion are state attorneys, engineers, auditors, physicians, draftsmen and bank examiners.

The employees are represented by the National Association of Government Employees (NAGE) and the Massachusetts Organization of State Engineers and Scientists (MOSES). Their last contract expired in June 1977.

Some Republican lawmakers have criticized the pay grade feature, warning that other state unions will demand a similar improvement in their next round of bargaining.

However, John Sullivan, Gov. Edward J. King's director of employee relations, said the pay grade proposal dated back to a factfinder's report issued during the Dukakis administration. Sullivan said the factfinder had recommended moving the MOSES workers up two grades but the King administration cut the advance to one. The MOSES benefit then was extended to the NAGE, Sullivan said, to honor a commitment made by Dukakis' bargainers.

Grad senate OKs gay funding

By LAURA SMITH
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate voted 11-7 last night to allocate $550.00 to the People's Gay Alliance, and also approved 13-2-1 a motion to endorse a nationally-sponsored "Abortion Action Week" in October.

After lengthy debate, the senate approved funding the People's Gay Alliance with $300 to match an Arts Council grant and $250 for operating expenses. Alliance spokesman Kevin George presented the group's argument to the Senate, saying the Alliance needs extra funding to continue such services as counselling and functions. The Alliance also wants to use some of the operational money for work study positions, George said.

The Senate had not allotted budget funds for the Alliance last May because it appeared it would have sufficient funds from the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The Alliance currently faces additional expense burdens incurred by the Quonset Disco lawsuit and the National March on Washington. The Alliance is also faced with a $75 fee attached by the Campus Center for activities, George said.

Many of the senators seemed concerned with where money to fund the Alliance would come from. The actual amount of money currently available in the graduate senate budget cannot be determined, since the number of graduate students who have paid the Graduate Student Tax is unknown.

Jack Delmond, a senator representing the Anthropology Department, spoke in favor of the Alliance. Because of "homophobia" in the society, he pointed out, it is difficult for the Alliance to raise money through conventional methods.

In other business, the Senate approved a motion recognizing and endorsing the week of Oct. 22-29 as Abortion Action Week.

In cooperation with the nationally sponsored activity, the UMass Socialist Feminist Collective is sponsoring a number of workshops dealing with sterilization abuse, occupational health, the effect of the new right on reproductive rights, moral issues of abortion, and women - the state and reproductive rights.

State Treasurer Tiziana Rota said it is important that the Senate endorse this activity for women's rights, especially in light of the Pope's recent visit in which he sounded out against birth control.

Selectmen support rezoning

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night voiced its support for an article to be considered at next week's town meeting, which calls for re-zoning a historic building originally owned by Emily Dickinson's family.

Under the new article, the Dickinson-Baggs Tavern at Southeast and Main Streets would be renovated and converted into office space.

According to Selectwoman Diana Romer, the board was "reluctant to vote formally before checking with the planning board."

Frederick Luddy, one of four joint owners of the building, presented the board with a plan to renovate it into office space for professional use. The renovation would involve rebuilding the chimneys with the original brick and reroofing the entire building.

The three-quarter acre lot on which the tavern stands is currently designated as a residential zoning area, and the tavern violates that definition.

The tavern, which was built in 1772, was the home of the poetess Emily Dickinson's family, although she never actually lived in it. It is one of the oldest buildings in town.

The tavern operated from the 1780's throughout much of the nineteenth century, and in 1826 it was the headquarters of the first Democratic party in Amherst, according to Luddy. It was also a Probate Court in the early nineteenth century.

Luddy said he is planning to spend up to $50,000 on renovation costs and then will try to have the building placed on the National Register for Historic Buildings. He said he plans to build an annex onto the back of the house. The renovation is expected to be completed by early spring.

Luddy will present the rezoning proposal before the Amherst Planning Board tonight.

Judge: Pope platform illegal

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union said yesterday "the city illegally built a church" when it constructed a platform on which Pope John Paul II celebrated a Mass last week.

"The purpose was exclusively religious," attorney Henry Sawyer told U.S. District Judge Raymond Broderick. He asked that Broderick order the Philadelphia Catholic Archdiocese to pay the cost because use of city funds violated the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Broderick, who took the case under advisement, directed the city to provide all bills within 10 days. He gave no indication when he might have a decision on the constitutional question.

Mayor Frank L. Rizzo had directed the platform be built over a fountain on Logan Circle, outside the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul, and said it was a legitimate expense of the city in welcoming the pope as a head of state.

Sawyer said that "under U.S. law the pope is not a chief of state, he is a religious leader" and "you cannot spend public funds to support a religion."

Defending the platform, which cost more than $200,000, City Solicitor Sheldon Albert said, "It was constructed for safety, for security and for visibility by a million persons."

Albert insisted that the sole purpose of the 41-foot-high platform "was to allow all citizens to see a world-renowned figure, not to foster the advancement of religion." He added:

"The pope's visit was essentially ecumenical. The fact that he performed a Muss on that platform does not make the use of city funds unconstitutional.

"What is really the objection here? The pope preached love, peace on earth, good will to all men. The event transcended theology."

Witnesses testified that tickets for the outdoor mass were distributed exclusively by the Catholic Church.

Motion 79-S273 will stop irregularities

The motion to remove the appointment power of the presidents for the Attorney General position is based on a long period of irregularities that have occured. The basis of the problem is rooted in the loss of confidence in the manner in which candidates have been selected and how they have performed in their respective "permanent" and "acting" positions.

The use of investigations for political purposes caused the permanent Attorney General Robin Adams to be expunged from the Senate March 7th, 1979. A move was made to appeal the request to recind Adams' motion of confirmation, the appeal lost 44-21. In the same meeting on March 7th, then co-president, John Hensleigh appointed Larry Mandell Acting Attorney General.

Having obtained these facts from the official Senate minutes, it was peculiar that Larry Mandell's "acting" status was never recalled in the next Senate meeting of March 29, and Will Pierce was appointed as Hensleigh's last official appointment. It was also at this meeting that the search committee was appointed.

According to the Constitution, Chapter 5, Article II, Section C., the Attorney General is to be removed within three weeks of the election of a new president. Therefore, on April 25, it was moved that Will Pierce was appointed Acting Attorney General for three weeks. However, other significant facts transpired before this at that April 25th meeting.

Brian Burke, the new co-president succeeding Tyson/Hensleigh, moved to appoint Ann Bolger as Attorney General rather than Julie Robertson, was accepted as a candidate by a unanimous vote. The personal association of the candidate to the co-president LaVoice and the lack of background on her qualifications initiated a very lengthy debate in Senate. The end result was Bolger's appointment was defeated 39-4. Later that evening, LaVoice expressed his satisfaction over the leadership of the search. Yet, after having commended the search process, he claimed that "under the present circumstances a new search committee will be formed." The question here is why? If the search committee "had done such a great job" why wasn't Julie Robertson chosen? Many of the Third World Caucus members felt that she was not considered because of the controversy last year in the Southwest Assembly over the Center for Racial Studies in which she actively participated in its defense. Rich LaVoice was Chair of the Assembly at the time.

It appeared that a motion was necessary for Larry Mandell's resignation as Acting Attorney General before Pierce's appointment the following week. Yet, no mention of it is made in the minutes. Hensleigh's record of appointments was full of irregularities. They continued into the next administration.

With the Bolger appointment by Burke defeated and a new search committee formed, the co-president, LaVoice then appoints Will Pierce as chairperson of the Attorney General Search Committee (Pierce also worked actively for LaVoice's campaign as President). Having noted these irregularities a motion by the Third World Caucus was presented by Gary Lee that sought to take the appointment power of the Presidents and place it in the hands of the Senate upon recommendations from the search committee.

May 9th, Pierce was referred to in Senate minutes as acting Attorney General and there was a motion passed that read: "move that Acting Attorney General, Will Pierce work through the summer." This clearly implied he was not only Acting Attorney General, but Chair of that position's search committee as well. It also made it plain that the motion should have been called out of order, since Pierce's position as acting Attorney General expired May 16th. His reappointment past the three weeks should have been specifically moved since the May 9th meeting was the last. The motion was passed under misleading circumstances according to the minutes.

The main point to note here is, even if the summer appointment was deemed proper despite the aformentioned ommission of fact, he (Pierce) still has no Senate approval past the summer, yet he is on the payroll presently. We therefore have one non-existent Attorney General on pay and one Attorney General in Exile.

The motion 70-S273 as amended at the October 3rd Senate meeting is in our opinion the only way in which we can secure that the Attorney General selection process can proceed without political and manipulative interference. It should be noted that the Constitutuion has not been revised by any of these acting persons as required by the Constitution, the financial investigations that were crucial (Sweney Ford, U.R.S.) were not handled by the A.G., nor were there any known opinions rendered. Much of the work has been done by someone who has never even been considered by co-presidents. This is our case, what is your verdict?

Britain Gives Zimbabwe 48 Hours To Compromise

LONDON (AP) - Britain on Tuesday gave the guerillas at the Zimbabwe Rhodesia peace talks 48 hours to change their minds and accept a compromise constitution for independence.

The future of the five-week-old conference hung in the balance as the Patriotic Front guerilla alliance responded that the British demand was "absurd," reiterated its objections to key areas of the constitution and said it could give no final verdict until all sided agreed on who will control the government and the guns during a transition to British-granted independence.

The Patriotic Front's objections to the British draft center on strict property, pension and citizenship rights entrenched for 10 years in a bill of rights, which they maintain preserves white-minority privilege.

The guerilla alliance rejects provisions compelling a new black administration to pay compensation for nationalized land, grant citizenship automatically to people settled after the white government's 1965 unilateral break from Britain, and guarantee pensions to officials and army commanders of the present administration.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Richard Arrington, hopes to be the first black mayor of Birmingham, Ala. He is running against incumbent mayor, David Vann.

Carrington made the demand Tuesday morning as the Patriotic Front and the opposing delegation led by Zimbabwe Rhodesian Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa faced each other again at the Lancaster House conference center after four weeks of constitutional argument. Muzorewa has already accepted the British draft.

The foreign secretary did not say what he would do if the guerillas did not respond in the allotted time.

Patriotic Front co-leader Joshua Nkomo urged that the "spirit of discussion" should continue, and Carrington replied "there comes a time when the spirit of decision must take over," officials reported after the 30-minute closed-door session.

Britain has insisted from the start a constitution must be finalized first if this latest bid to end the seven-year-old war and bring an internationally accepted black government to the nation of 7 million blacks and 230,000 whites is to have any hope of success.

Task force will hold pot-luck dinner

On Thursday, October 11 at 6:30 pm the Third World Women's Task Force is sponsoring an open house pot luck dinner for women from the African-American, Asian Hispanic and African community. The dinner will be at Yvonne's Place on the main level of New Africa House. Anyone interested in becoming a member, bring your favorite dish and come share your ideas, concerns and views with us. For more information contact, Suman Bohm, the Third World Advocate, at 545-0883.

The Third World Women's Task Force is a community based group composed of mothers, housewives, students and workers (both women and men) who are concerned with combatting the various forms of oppression the Third World community has been subjected to. We believe that the emancipation of women is a necessary part of the struggle for social change and that the liberation of women should be an integral part of the revolutionary ideology of all oppressed people. Our struggle is the revolution within the revolution. While our primary focus is on women-related issues and the mobilization of women to play a full role in the liberation struggle, we do realize that for true social change we must work as a unified whole — women, men and children together. That is, the liberation of women becomes a reality only when taken up by women themselves; but at the same time, it is only one facet of the total revolution and not isolated from it. Therefore, we welcome the support and participation of our men and children in the activities of the group.

The Third World Women's Task Force believes in direct action and we have spent the last year putting pressure on University of Massachusetts and Pioneer Valley officials in order to move them to take steps to end the continuing violence against Third World people. Some of our proposed objectives for the coming year are:

1. To organize, promote and support educational seminars and other events related to issues of concern to the Third World community.
2. To continue the pursuit of justice in the Seta Rampersad case.
3. To develop outreach activities which will foster the creation of linkages with other Third World communities and organizations, particularly in the Pioneer Valley.
4. To enable women to develop organizational, leadership and decision-making skills.

Thoughts

We have set out on a quest for true humanity and somewhere on the distant horizon we can see the glittering prize. Let us march forth with courage and determination, drawing strength from our common plight and brotherhood. In time we shall be in a position to bestow...the greatest gift possible—a more human face.

The snowball effect

Within the period of a week, the home of W. E. B. Dubois will be dedicated in Great Barrington an anti-pornography march will take place in New York City, and Ted Kennedy and Jimmy Carter will come together at the dedication of the J.F.K. Library at UMass-Boston. But the Collegian cannot afford to cover these events.

Budgetary cuts, a history of poor bookkeeping in the Student Activities system, and prohibitive budgetting are all the cause of this.

Today the Collegian faces more budget cuts on the floor of the Undergraduate Student Senate. Without these funds the Collegian's ability to cover pertinent events will be hampered.

At the same time, the Collegian needs funds to remain in the black and reverse a trend of deficit spending.

The UMass community must be informed. Historic dedications, political confrontations and events to raise the public consciousness are events of which the community must be made aware.

By not giving the Collegian funds, the senate is simply acting to perpetuate a deficit system.

We realize all students will suffer because of past financial negligence in the Student Activities system, but news coverage must not.

For by what other means will the students be able to monitor further mistakes?

Editorial/Opinion

Famine, bombs in Indochina

James Lewis

Monday night on NBC news it was announced from the United Nations at least 2 million Cambodians will die this fall of starvation, one half their population. There is a similar famine going on in Vietnam. These are due to the United States—Vietnam War.

The peoples of these countries exist on an agrarian economy; they grew rice. This had been their system of acquiring food for centuries, a system that evolved in harmony with nature over thousands of years.

The United States dropped 3.5 times the tonnage of bombs on Vietnam and Cambodia than they did on both theaters of Europe and Asia during World War II. By the end of 1972, the U.S. dropped more than 12 million tons of bombs and munitions. Vietnam is smaller than California and Cambodia is slightly more than half the size of Vietnam.

No two countries have ever been bombed so much in the history of mankind.

The type of warfare the United States employed in Vietnam and Cambodia caused the famine. Specifically, the many defoliation projects of the United States that were designed to wipe out any vegetation in the area. The amount of bombs dropped on these two countries leaves one wondering why there is any life in those areas at all. The United States dropped 28 times more napalm on Vietnam and Cambodia than they did in the World War. Vietnam is short 8 billion pounds of rice this year.

In Cambodia a minimum of 600 tons of rice per day would be needed to prevent the situation from becoming as bad as the one in Biafra.

The cost: the U.S. spent more than $128 billion in official U.S. military appropiations, 56,000 dead Americans, 303,000 wounded Americans, and 100,000 drug addicts. There were 1.5 million CIVILIAN casualties in North and South Vietnam alone. In total, nearly 5 million Vietnamese were killed and wounded.

The irony of Cambodia is that it was a neutral country. On March 18, 1970, a right-wing military coup ousted the neutralist government of Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia. The Nixon Administration immediately began giving military assistance against the insurgents. Because of the illegal bombing by the Nixon Administration and the defoliation projects, the vegetation of the country has been wiped out and the rice crops failed. Eighty percent of the people are suffering from malaria and 75 percent are gravely undernourished.

As a result Vietnamese and Cambodian peoples are leaving their homes en masse. The refugees will go wherever they can, to Thailand, Laos, Burma, China or anywhere that will accept them. Most of these countries have already closed their doors on these people. There are 277,000 boat people, and their numbers steadily increase. Half of them die, drowning. The reason they leave is because there is no life for them left where they lived.

Vietnam had almost 50 million people in population. Cambodia had five or six million people. Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees are leaving by the millions now, by foot, carrying their belongings with them and dying in their paths.

The information is this article about U.S. military tonnage was provided by Lawrence S. Wittner in "Cold War America".

Wiggle and giggle at strangers

Richard Card

Wave on it's a crazy feeling
And I know you got me reeling
When you say; I love you
Wave on, Wave on

(West, Tilghman, Petty)

Whether you know it or not, I am a closet introvert, and, though I speak out in class so much that some teachers have scheduled separate discussion sections just for me and I sing so loudly in the shower that many wild animals have made their way to the sound of my voice only to be disappointed when I was not a three-toed sloth's errent mate or a skunk's partner in lovemaking, I am shyer than externalities would indicate.

When I am alone I am very quiet around myself; when I think a girl may like me because she looks to where I am, I instantly immerse myself in studying my fingernails; she, though I never look, must also be a closet introvert and do the same.

You can't be too coy in front of a prospective friend, and because of this flaw in human nature, this column is written. Humanity has survived because it has learned to control its flaws so, witness here the process of evolution, I present my proposal to overcome demure - specifically in regards to the opposite sex:

Wave. Wave in your classroom, wave in the Bluewall, wave in the busses, wave in the dining commons; just wave to a person of the opposite sex you might like to meet. Here is an example:

There was a girl with red hair standing in the campus shuttle bus one day wearing white cordoroy pants and a white cordoroy jacket; in fact, she looked like a lighted cordoroy cigarette, but prettier so I waved to her. Research has indicated that the world is filled with closet introverts and I think this girl was another example because she gazed around her; perhaps she thought I had waved to someone else; but you could tell by the look in her eyes that she wanted to wave back. So, shyly, I lifted my fingers and wiggled them a bit, and shyly she wiggled her fingers back. We dated for a time. It she were not a lesbian, we might have married. Just what I needed - a closet introvert lesbian. Perhaps another example:

By this time I had developed into a more confident wave, so when I spied another girl studying between bites of a dining commons cheeseburger, I waved to her sanguinely: another closet introvert; she studied her books and fingernails. Emerging from my own introspection, I hopped up on a chair and waved to her from across the room. Cheeseburger and tuna salad smells filled the room and she continued her studies; I waved, you would have thought I was a traffic policeman: students with trays of food stopped then proceeded, and took left and right turns directed by my random wavings, but I finally attracted her attention. She grinned and waved back. Study break.

So, you see, there is a single simple solution which eases the strain of meeting a member of the opposite sex; waving to a prospective friend is much easier than mumbling to each other about your classes or where you live or how the band is (depending on where you are); if you wave and the prospective friend waves back avoid trivialities; you can discuss the implications of love at first wave, and can a marriage based on waving really survive in today's society, while avoiding the usual getting-to-know-you murmurs. Waving takes a smaller risk than the conventional groping for words; you can wave and if the prospective friend pretends to study his/her fingernails just keep waving and walk right past as if you knew someone behind the original prospect.

But in this world I think there is nothing more beautiful than two shy people who wiggled their fingers at each other and discovered you really can wave in today's feverish society.

It is unfortunate that those who heard Jane Fonda did not listen to her because they were attempting to determine in which school of acting her speech could best be categorized.

Letter offers sight to blind

To the Editor

Nothing would please me more than to know that I had helped lead even one of my fellow UMass students out of despair, illusion and confusion onto the road of spiritual adventure. The tip is this: There is a non-university course being offered in Amherst on the subject of natural eyesight improvement. So, if you feel that your eyeglasses are things you'd just as soon not "see," then why not call 549-6370 and find out more? That's gospel.

Trailers aid tornado victims

WINDSOR, Conn. [AP] —After being delayed on state highways by Massachusetts police, the first of more than 50 mobile homes slated as temporary dwellings for tornado victims arrived late Tuesday while the cleanup of smashed homes and fallen trees forged ahead.

The first home, arriving later than scheduled, was delivered before dusk to Edward Dembkoski, whose 42-year-old wife, Carole, was one of the two persons killed by last week's twister.

The Dembkoski home was leveled by the tornado, which left more than 300 injured and hundreds homeless. The storm caused damage estimated at $184 million.

Five mobile homes were being transported yesterday to the tornado damage scene in Windsor and neighboring Windsor Locks. But officials said Massachusetts state police had been stopping the trailer haulers and ticketing them for pulling overweight loads on the state's highways.

Gov. Ella Grasso, at the scene awaiting arrival of the first mobile home, reacted to word of the difficulty by immediately telephoning Massachusetts Gov. Edward King.

Using a telephone in the devastated shell of one tornadosmashed home, Mrs. Grasso asked King to instruct his state police to let the other mobile homes go through the state without being stopped.

There was no immediate indication of King's response.

Receiving word of weight violation problems with mobile homes being hauled through New York state, Mrs. Grasso also phoned New York Gov. Hugh Carey, but he was not in his office.

The cost of the temporary homes, complete with furnishings and other necessities, will be covered by the federal government if a resident's insurance does not cover it, said Phil Cogan of the federal Emergency Management Agency.

Mrs. Grasso said 52 applications already had been processed — and others were being received — for the mobile homes from residents who want to remain on their property while demolished homes are being rebuilt.

However, Mrs. Grasso said the state would acquire more of the trailer-homes from the federal government to accommodate homeless residents.

Demonstrators who gave their names to police were released.

Some of the demonstrators injured yesterday said they thought the tactics used by police would help the anti-nuclear cause.

"To stop nukes we've got to show we're willing to bleed. We've shown that in Seabrook. The police clubs won't keep us from closing the plant," said Finn Ridder, 24, of Boston, his chin bandaged and lip cut.

Nearby, a state trooper displaying a black and blue eye and a swollen hand, responded, "If they're nonviolent, they've got a real funny way of showing it."

Before the melee outside the courthouse, two demonstrators who identified themselves as John Doe, were arraigned on criminal mischief charges, court clerk John Clark said. However, the two then locked arms with other protesters in the courtroom and refused to leave with police, Clark said. Police picked up the two and carried them out.

"We want the walkers to discuss energy issues with the public as they solicit pledges," he said, adding he was pleased with UMass student response to the walk.

"The involvement shown so far has been great," he said. "Many of the people who rode the bus to New York City for the Sept. 23rd anti-nuclear rally have signed up as walkers or sponsors." Most of the funds raised Sunday will be earmarked for campus and community teach-ins on energy issues, Pepi said.

Baez studies Asian "holocaust"

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press

HONG KONG – American folk singer Joan Baez embarked yesterday on a tour through Indochinese refugee camps to study firsthand what she called the "massive form of holocaust going on" in Southeast Asia. She said she doesn't care what actress Jane Fonda thinks about her.

"At home in the United States, people don't really want to pay much attention" to the refugee situation, Ms. Baez said at a news conference after arriving here from San Francisco.

"I think we have to really call on the wealthy nations to shell out. It's a huge disaster and people don't want to face up to it and think about it." The plight of the refugees, she added, was "a massive form of holocaust" on par with the Nazi extermination of Jews.

Ms. Baez said she expected to talk to Vietnamese refugees and ask them why, "after living through Japanese invasions and famine and war ... They are leaving now."

The American folk singer, who has recently denounced Hanoi for expelling ethnic Chinese, has been criticized for those statements by Ms. Fonda and other members of the Far Left.

"They feel betrayed, but I was trying to end the war for everyone who was being killed, not just for one-half" of the Vietnamese population, she said.

She said she wasn't making the trip to prove to her critics that she was right in circulating an open letter criticizing the Hanoi regime.

"I'm not really interested in the Far Left at this point, who really hate what I'm doing, and the Far Right who say 'nyah, nyah, we told you so, we should have stayed there and bombed the hell out of them'," Ms. Baez said.

Ms. Baez said that during her travels through the area, including stops in Thailand and Malaysia where she will give a concert, she also hoped to educate Americans and others about the "faceless" land refugees from Cambodia and Laos and the famine facing those still in Cambodia.

Asked if she had ever thought there would be mass expulsions from Vietnam when she was working to halt the fighting, Ms. Baez said:

"I think all of us who worked to end the war in Vietnam hoped there would be some kind of relief."

She said she had been invited to make a return trip to Hanoi, which she visited as an antiwar crusader in 1972. "But I think it's the wrong place to go to find out things the government probably doesn't want me nosing into."

Following visits with the refugees, Ms. Baez said she will take a swing through Europe to meet with leaders of the "New Left" there, including French author Jean-Paul Sartre.

Women booters dealt first loss by Cats

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

For the first time since its creation as a varsity team, the UMass women's soccer team has fallen in defeat. This second-year squad lost to the women Catamounts of Vermont, 6-2, Saturday afternoon at Montpelier.

The women Cats took little time in telling the Minutewomen of their speed and solid defense, as they struck first at 5:00 of the first half. After scoring their second goal, UMass came back briefly, with a Nina Holmstrom penalty shot and an unassisted tally by Nancy Feldman. The half ended with the score at two.

Then Vermont, led by Hillary Henisch (last week's New England Player of the Week) and Kathy Jamoula, took the game away from UMass; the Cats scored four times, as UMass was stopped by Vermont's aggressive play.

UMass Coach Arnie Morse had praise for the Cats, saying, "They're a very talented team, with good team speed. They defended us very well. We weren't ready for Vermont's level of competition and aggressiveness."

"The loss wasn't good, but we are now aware of what we have to do against teams like Vermont and Cortland State, who's next on the schedule. We need to get to the ball, instead of waiting for the pass, and overall, we have to get tougher and quicker. Vermont taught us a lesson about that. Cortland State is a running team, like Vermont; we're preparing as well as we can."

Now with a season record of 4-1-1 (and their first loss in 21 games), the Minutewomen will try to rebound, as they host Cortland State Saturday on the lower NOPE fields. Game time is 3:00 PM.

The Cortland game begins a four-game home stand, with Williams, Mount Holyoke, and Brown University the visitors.

Women harriers edge UConn by two points

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Back from their strong fourth place showing at the Rutgers Invitational on Saturday, a confident women's cross-country team narrowly defeated UConn 27-29 yesterday at Boyden Field.

"We took the UConn meet lightly. It was closer than I thought it would be, but we won, and that's what counts," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said.

UMass sophomore Cathy Petrick was the top finisher on yesterday's rain soaked course with a time of 18:32 for the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) race. "I felt great today, much better than Saturday;" said Petrick. At Rutgers Petrick finished 19th in a field of 114 and was the second Minutewomen across the line.

Finishing fourth overall yesterday and second for UMass was Sophomore Julie Burke. Burke, just recovered from an injury, also fared well at Rutgers where she placed 25th in the field. She was the third Minutewomen at Rutgers. "I was pleased that Julie could come back so strong," Pfitzinger said.

Pfitzinger kept the Minutewomen's top runner, sophomore Judy McCrone, out of yesterday's race in order to save her for the New Englands on October 20. "She'll be among the top five or six in the New Englands," Pfitzinger said. McCrone was the first UMass finisher across the line at Rutgers and place tenth overall in the field of 114 on Saturday.

"I'm pointing for the New Englands and the Easterns. I'm glad I didn't have to run, but if we lost, I would have been mad," McCrone said. She will begin working on speed training along with the rest of the team to prepare for the important meets later in the season.

Other top finishers in yesterday's meet were sophomores Tricia Moores (6) and Robyn Dally (7), junior Linda Welzel (8) and senior 'Dill' Wilson (10). Both Moores and Welzel ran well at Rutgers, placing 25th and 35th respectively.

"We just ran to win. Before the race the UConn coach told me that they were just going to run the race as a workout. When someone tells you that, it generally means two things — that they'll run it as a workout, or that they're really psyched to win. As it turned out, they were really psyched to win. We just went through the motions and won anyway," Pfitzinger said.

At the Rutgers Invitational the Minutewomen had to deal with 16 of the top teams in the East. "We went all out at Rutgers," Piftzinger said. UMass placed fourth behind Maryland, Florida State, and Princeton, who placed first through third in that order. "It was a good test of where we stand. Our team is in good shape and we will continue to improve with our speed training. We didn't run as hard today as we did at Rutgers," Pfitzinger said.

The Minutewomen's next meet will be at home this Saturday at Boyden field at 1:00 p.m. The course begins and ends on Boyden Field near the track. There is no admittance fee and spectators are encouraged to attend.

Rescheduled for tonight

World Series opener rained out

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The opening game of the 1979 World Series between Baltimore Orioles and Pittsburgh Pirates was postponed by a torrential rain storm last night.

It was the first time the opening game of the seven-game Series was called off because of rain.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn called the game at 8:33 p.m. EDT and it was rescheduled for tonight. Game Two of the Series will be played Thursday night, and the Series then shifts to Pittsburgh Friday night, as previously scheduled.

The travel day originally set for Thursday was eliminated.

Gloomy, dark skies hung low over Baltimore most of Tuesday, and the rain began at about 5 p.m. — 3¼ hours before the scheduled start of play.

Tarps covered the Memorial Stadium infield, but puddles quickly developed in left and right field.

The condition of the field already had been a concern because of the National Football League game between the Baltimore Colts and New York Jets, played Sunday. The ColtsJets game was the fifth football contest played this season at Memorial Stadium.

The rainout was the first for a World Series game since 1975, when the sixth game between the Boston Red Sox and Cincinnati Reds was postponed two days by the weather in Boston.

Mother Nature cast her evil rain spell rendering Baltimore's Memorial Stadium unplayable for last night's World Series opener. (AP Laserphoto)

The pre-game warmups of Orioles pitchers Sammy Stewart (left) and Don Stanhouse went all for naught as heavy rains caused the postponement of game number one of the World Series. The game has been rescheduled for tonight. (AP Laserphoto)

Wildcats blank Minutemen, 2-0

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

It must have seemed like a long bus ride home for the previously unbeaten Minutemen soccer team yesterday after it was upset by the University of New Hampshire, 2-0.

UMass went into the game ranked fourth in New England and psyched up after handing the University of Vermont it's first loss of the season last Saturday. But unranked UNH didn't appear too impressed with UMass' achievements. UMass is now 3-1-2; UNH, 3-2-1.

UNH sports information director Bill Knight called it "a very physical game" in which UMass was assessed 23 fouls and the Wildcats were called on 22. Minuteman goalie Matt Esteves, starting his first game of the year, was ejected late in the game for fighting with Wildcatter Mike Cloutier.

According to Mr. Knight, UMass' regular goalie Mark Marilla, did not travel with the team because of his class schedule.

The game was scoreless at the end of one half but the Wildcats put their first tally on the board less than seven minutes into the second stanza at 39:38. Dave Douglas was the scorer with an assist by Cloutier. Dick Tiernan added the insurance with 2:15 remaining in the game. It was an unassisted goal.

UMass put the pressure on the UNH goalie Gordie Tuttle, forcing him to make 11 saves on 16 shots on goal. Esteves was tried with 21 shots on goal, making 10 saves.

UMass reportedly had 12 corner kicks as compared to the home team's 2.

New Hampshire is not unfamiliar with the role of the spoiler. Earlier this year they handed Boston University (5-3-1) a 2-1 upset. The Wildcats also defeated Gordon College, tied Brandeis, and lost to Keene State and Boston College.

UMass will travel to B.U. on Sunday for a one o'clock contest.

Stickers postponed

The long awaited match yesterday between the UMass field hockey team (sixth ranked nationally) and the University of Connecticut squad (third ranked nationally) was postponed to October 17 at NOPE. The field resembled a swamp and was deemed unplayable. Coach Pam Hixon's team faces a strong Yale squad today to NOPE (3:30 p.m.) and would like to keep their undefeated season going strongly.

Mark Marchand

Puck predictions

Bobby Orr is a special assistant to league president John Zeigler, four WHA teams have been absorbed, Don Cherry has left the Bruins, and Scotty Bowman has ended his long reign at the helm of the Canadiens.

Yet, the old saying of "the more things change, the more they remain the same" has no better application then in the modern day version of the National Hockey League. With all the above changes, and a lot more too numerous to be mentioned here, the balance of power in the NHL has not undergone a noticeable shift. Teams like Montreal, Boston, New York Islanders, and Philadelphia will still dominate the rest of the league during the 1979-80 season.

But, enough about the monotony. The season's about to start and I humbly submit to you my picks for the divisional races.

Cambell Conference
Patrick Division

1. New York Islanders—Still the best two-goalie system in the league (Resch and Smith) which should put Al Arbour's team on top in the toughest division.

2. Rangers—One last big season for Espo with the tutelage of Fred Shero giving the guys on the Island a battle.

3. Philadelphia—The Flyers have lost a lot of the talent that gave them the two Cups but don't count them out.

4. Atlanta—The Flames will round out the toughest four team race in the league and end up with a playoff spot.

5. Washington—Well, at least the politicians in D.C. are assured of some entertainment.

Smythe Division

1. Winnipeg—The Jets are the best of the new WHA entries and will probably end the Blackhawk's string of division wins with .500 or less records.

2. Chicago—Tony Esposito will be back in goal (what, again?) but the Blackhawks won't do any better than second in the league's weakest division.

3. Colorado—The Rockies are generating a lot of hockey interest in Denver with Former Bruin coach Don Cherry, but they've still got a way to go.

4. Vancouver—Well, at least they've got the league's weirdest uniforms.

5. St. Louis—Gary Unger is the only bright spot on this otherwise talent-less Blues squad.

6. Edmonton—The Oilers should be thankful that they were saved from the WHA and take what they can get.

Wales Conference
Adams Division

1. Boston—If new coach Fred Creighton sticks with Gilbert in goal, the Bruins can repeat last year's performance.

2. Buffalo—The Sabres have the best puck handler in the league in Gil Pereault and will give the B's a battle.

3. Toronto—Rounding out this three-team race will be the Sittler-MacDonald attack of the Maple Leafs.

4. Minnesota—The North Stars are vastly improved but can't hope to do better than the three in front of them.

5. Quebec—The Nordiques will bring one of hockey's most prolific scorers into the league from the WHA in the person of Marc Tarfiff who carries the offense.

Norris Division

1. Montreal—No Scotty Bowman, no Ken Dryden, yet they're still my pick to win it all again.

2. Detroit—Vachon just may play goal like he knows how this year and if a defense centered around Dale McCourt remains healthy, the Red Wings may be the biggest surprise of the year.

3. Hartford—The Whalers are one of my favorites from the WHA. They're finally going to retire Johnny "Pie" McKenzie and I hope they stop hiring from the geriatric ward because they'll be the laughing stock of the league if they keep it up.

4. Los Angeles—It's hard to tell with these guys. A solid effort from Ron Graham in goal could give them a boost.

5. Pittsburgh—The Penquins are like their namesake, they just can't fly.

Snow in October?

Surprising snowfall sets new first in state records

By DEBRA ROTH
Collegian Staff

If overworked students wondered yesterday whether they misinterpreted the date or even the month when they saw that white stuff coming down from the clouds, their surprise was warranted—a record was set for the earliest snowfall in the state in 95 years of record-keeping at the Blue Hills Observatory in Milton.

Snow began falling in Amherst at about 1 p.m. and continued throughout the evening, though only about an inch of wet snow accumulated. (According to the Associated Press, The National Weather Service predicted as much as five inches of snow yesterday for the western hills of the state.)

State Registrar of Motor Vehicles Richard McLaughlin announced yesterday motorists who use studded snow tires may put them on immediately instead of waiting for the Nov. 1 state deadline, AP reported. McLaughlin said he authorized use of the tires under an escape clause in state law which normally limits use between Nov. 1 and the following May 1.

No problems were reported in the area because of the storm, although a spokesman from the Amherst Police Dept. last night said there were four "fender-benders."

(AP reported data from Weather Services Corp., a private forecasting service in Bedford, that the earliest snow on record in Massachusetts was on Oct. 2, in 1886 and the earliest measurable snowfall, 0.4 inches, occurred on Oct. 14 in1913.)

But the October snow may dampen prospects for bright colorful foliage expected to peak soon—foliage already damaged by much rain and wind this month, according to Dr. Carl Swanson of the UMass Botany Dept. Swanson said cool, crisp nights cause chlorophyll to break down and leaves to change colors. But heavy precipitaiton and wind can cause the leaves to drop before they turn, he said.

Predictions vary for today and tomorrow. AP reported possible rain and temperatures in the 50s for today, and local television stations reported possible snow for tomorrow.

Student Senate finalizes fiscal year budget

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved final changes for its fiscal year 1980 budget.

The senate voted to cut nearly all Recognized Student Organization budgets by 7 percent to liquidate the senate's $149,695 deficit. It also voted to exempt from these cuts Transit Services, the Office of Third World Affairs, and funds for capital equipment, stabilization, presidential campaign and deficit liquidation budgets.

The senate granted partial exemption, 3 percent budget cuts, to the RSO Office, the Legal Services Office, Index, WMUA, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

The percentage cuts and the exemptions were included in a four-point amendment to an original motion, introduced three weeks ago, calling for an across-the-board 12 percent cut of all RSO groups.

The senate also elected William Fitzgerald as SGA treasurer.

The budget cuts were necessary to comply with a UMass Board of Trustees' order that the senate liquidate at least $100,000 of its deficit this year and completely by next year, Fitzgerald said. The senate last spring allocated a $60,000 liquidation fund, so the cuts would produce more than the remaining $40,000 necessary for this year's liquidation, Fitzgerald explained.

"The way I look at it, things can only get better," Fitzgerald said of the liquidation plan's effect on senate budgeting.

The $60,000 is being used to reduce a Collegian deficit of $74,700.43 to $14,790.43, Fitzgerald said. The Collegian's new deficit will not be affected by the 7 per cent in the newspaper's budget, but the cut will reduce the paper's operating budget by $2,800, said Collegian Business Manager Laura Bassett.

A three and one-half hour debate deilberated the decisions to cut and exempt the various budgets.

The senate voted to grant the Collegian and WMUA emergency funds for major equipment breakdowns.

Requesting a partial exemption for BCP, senator Nelson Acosta said the program is the onlu one of its kind on campus that provides tutoring services to non-English-speaking students.

"If it wasn't for the services of this program, I wouldn't be here," Acosta said.

SGA Speaker David Barenberg earlier told the senate that senate control over RSO budgets is "valuable" but that several campus administrators are attempting "to hamper tje effectiveness of the (SGA) system" by "attacking the integrity of the system."

Fed's rate hike may affect student loans

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Interest charges on student loans could rise following action this week by the Federal Reserve Board in Washington to raise the prime lending rate to 14.5 percent.

The rate—the interest charged by the Federal Reserve to its member banks—will not directly cause state- and federally-funded guaranteed loans to rise, but could indirectly force hikes in the future. But non-state or federally-funded guaranteed loans,—private personal loans used to pay the cost of schooling—do appear likely to rise in coming months.

Though the action by the board does not guarantee that banks will raise their private interest rates, financial institutions watch the rate closely and often follow the Fed's lead. Several Boston banks raised their rates yesterday.

At UMass, some 11,000 students receive loans from either the federal National Direct Student Loan program, or through the Higher Education Loan Plan administered by students' local banks, according to figures from the University Financial Aid Office.

"At this point, it shouldn't really have any effect," said Director Edward Apodaca yesterday. "The loans are still at the same rate."

The NDSL program, using federal funds chanelled through the Financial Aid Office, loans at 3 percent, while the HELP program, where local banks loan funds with government guarantees, makes loans at 7 percent.

Nearly $2.5 million in NDSL funds were loaned to UMass students last year, and $12-15 million in loans were made with HELP funds, said Apodaca.

But, he said, the raise by the board "might have some problems later on. Guaranteed students loans are being re-examined for inflation."

Currently, he said, there are three proposals before Congress which could push up the interest rate on guaranteed student loans. In most cases, the proposed revisions would impose new eligibility restrictions, alter repayment terms, or institute separate interest rates for "needy" and "non-needy" recipients, Apodaca said. He said proposals for reconsideration of present rules were advanced in light of the current boom in inflation.

Interest charge increases appear most likely on direct private loans, according to a survey of local banking officials.

"We don't know what our position would be right now," said Gene Keegan, a loan officer for First National Bank of Amherst. "We'll be watching the other institutions to see what they do." Personal loans there, he said, now are made at 15 percent.

The Fed's action signals a more determined effort to try and tighten credit and slow the growth of the nation's money supply. In recent months, the Fed's prime rate has nearly doubled. In trying to tighten the money supply, the board hopes in theory to cool consumer and business spending, and put a damper on inflation.

Some economists, though, say the action will do little to stem spending, in light of what they call the proliferation of "money substitutes," such as credit cards and long-term payment plans. Though currency may be tight, the economists say, consumers will still be able to make purchases using the "substitutes."

Stock traders on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange keep track of the market's fall yesterday, as prices plummeted in tumultuous trading. (AP Laserphoto)

Stock market values drop sharply

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market fell sharply in an avalanche of trading today as investors felt the impact of Federal Reserve moves that drove up interest rates and increased worries about the possibility of a deep recession.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials stood at 832.76 at 2 p.m., down 24.83 from Tuesday's close.

New York Stock Exchange volume was a record 62.91 million at 2 p.m., causing the tape of stock prices to run more than an hour late, a record for the high-speed ticker.

Analysts said much of the drop was due to selling by traders who bought their shares on borrowed money and who are growing reluc tant to pay interest rates well above 15 percent.

Musician charged in 'gun rape'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Composer and record producer Jack Nitzsche made a brief, silent court appearance Tuesday and was ordered to return Oct. 22 for a hearing on charges that he raped actress Carrie Snodgress with the barrel of a gun.

The Nitzsche case is expected to test a new California "rape by instrumentality" law which carries a five-year prison sentence.

The musician is one of only three people to face charges in Los Angeles County under the statute since it took affect last Jan. 1.

Prostitute 'johns' to be named

NEW YORK (AP) — The names of men convicted of patronizing prostitutes will soon be made public over the city's broadcasting system, Mayor Edward I. Koch said Tuesday.

"We're going to call it the 'John Hour,'" Koch said.

The city operates radio stations WNYC-AM and FM and a television station, WNYC-TV. The mayor said he hoped newspapers would also use the names.

"I believe that it is unfair that we assess criminal penalties for prostitutes, but that we don't assess criminal penalties against the johns, the men who use prostitutes," Koch said.

Koch said he believed the best way to deter people from committing some crimes was to bring them to public attention and pressure.

Minister asks new rape trial

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Roy Leo, the former Greenfield minister who was denied an appeal in August of his 1978 rape conviction, has requested a new trial.

Leo claimed he just found out his attorney previously represented the father of the alleged rape victim, who was a member of a church youth group led by Leo.

Leo is serving a 6-to-10-year prison sentence at Hampshire County House of Correction after his conviction in February 1978 on two counts of unnatural sexual intercourse, abuse of a female under 16 and assault and battery on a child.

Truck-cleaning wastes taint well

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP) — A Belchertown couple, claiming their well has been polluted by chemical waste, has filed a $150,000 damage suit against a truck washing firm.

James and Marjorie Audette charged that Belchertown Bulk Carriers has negligently dumped chemical wastes into the ground, forcing the family to stop using its well. The Audettes say their property value has dropped and they have "incurred damage to themselves."

Eva Beaudoin, who owns the company with her husband, Claude, declined comment.

The suit, filed Friday in Hampshire Superior Court, followed a report last week by state officials indicating that harmful chemcials were found on the same side of a brook as the truck washing firm. Officials of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, while saying the chemicals appear to have come from the truck washing firm, have not pinpointed the origin.

Frost interviews Kissinger on NBC special program

By TOM JORY
Associated Press

NEW YORK — NBC decided to go ahead with its scheduled broadcast tomorrow night of "Henry Kissinger: An Interview with David Frost," despite Frost's withdrawal from the project shortly before air time.

Frost, perhaps best known in this country for his series of interviews with former President Richard M. Nixon, aired in May 1977, pulled out of the project Saturday, two days after taping the interview with the former diplomat.

The British television personality said NBC executives had agreed to give Kissinger additional time to comment on one phase of the interview dealing with United States policy toward Cambodia.

The interview was conducted Oct. 3-4, and NBC acknowledged a third session was arranged for Saturday, Oct. 8, after Kissinger said that he needed additional time to check materials quoted by Frost.

William Small, the new president of NBC News, said the network had given Kissinger no assurance the additional response would be included in the hour-long special.

Kissinger last year signed a five-year contract with NBC, reportedly worth $1 million, to provide occasional services to the network.

Frost, who could not be reached after the dispute broke, said after the second taping session that although Kissinger had been out of government for nearly three years, "in terms of his views on current issues, I think has remained in the headlines in a remarkable, almost mysterious way. His SALT testimony seemed nearly as important as that of the current secretary of state.

King promises low-income families subsidies available at month's end

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King said yesterday he hopes to make fuel subsidies available to low income Massachusetts families by the end of the month.

However, King added the program depends on action by either the federal government or the state Legislature.

Last winter, Massachusetts community action agencies paid nearly $9 million toward the fuel bills of the poor through the federal government's Crisis Intervention Program, CIP. However, because of delays at the federal level, it was springtime before many oil and gas suppliers were paid.

With snow pelting eastern Massachusetts for the first time this fall, King told a news conference he would work to prevent a similar delay this time around.

King said a $400 million CIP proposal was making progress in Washington, and he was "reasonably confident" the state would have its share — about $17 million — before November. Later on, he said, the federal government may add another $51 million for the Bay State if President Carter gets his oil windfall profits tax approved by Congress.

However, in case a snag develops, King said he planned to ask the Legislature for a $9 million advance from state funds to get the program underway. That money would be reimbursed later by the federal government, he said.

The plan outlined by the governor calls for giving poor households credit of up to $400 each toward their heat and utility bills. No money would be paid directly to the families; instead, community action agencies would direct the funds to the families' fuel suppliers and utilities.

Several state legislators, led by Rep. Emanuel Gus Serra, DBoston, and Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, have called for making the program available to the "working poor" — those families whose income is 26 to 50 percent higher than the federal poverty level. To do that, they want the state to provide $10 million of its own funds, in addition to whatever aid Washington contributes.

If it's sick to love a pen, then the world's going crazy.

It happened to secretaries first. Then lawyers, bookkeepers, waitresses, cabbies, housewives, and businessmen succumbed to the beauty of our Pilot Razor Point and Fineliner pens.

Some people felt it was sick to get so emotionally involved with our pens. But is it really so crazy to love a Pilot Razor Point pen that writes with a sharp smooth line and costs a mere 79¢? Is it nuts to flip over its unique little metal collar that smartly helps to keep its point from going squish?

If it is crazy, it's going to surprise a whole lot of people. In fact, we understand that Pilot Razor Point even has what it takes to score extra points with football players.

It also comes to our attention that many coaches are fans of the Pilot Fineliner. Along with all the other Razor Point features, the 69¢ Pilot Fineliner has the strength and drive to go through carbons.

It's hard to resist a pen that holds the line like a Pilot.

Nuclear physicist challenges anti-nukers

Dr. Arno Penzias.

By DEBRA ROTH
Collegian Staff

A visiting nuclear physicist at UMass yesterday afternoon challenged a student selling anti-nuke t-shirts in the Campus Center Concourse and proceeded to entertain about 50 milling students with a free lecture advocating nuclear power.

"Why don't you sell t-shirts that say 'safenukes' instead," he asked.

In a later interview in the Graduate Research Center, Dr. Arno Penzias said, "There appears to be a shortage of pro-nuke people on campus. At least, they're not so vocal."

Penzias was invited to UMass by the astronomy and physics departments to lecture yesterday on an unrelated subject, astrophysics. Considered an expert in this field, he has received a Nobel Prize in physics for tightening a theory on the origin of the universe. The theory linked the origin to leftover hot air from the first "big blast." He is a physicist at Bell Labs, N.J. and teaches at Princeton University.

Students gathered around the United Christian Foundation table, selling the shirts, did not get involved in the debate with Penzias. But Penzias' views entertained students seeking warmth inside on a snowy day and provided another viewpoint for a campus lately bombarded with anti-nuclear opinions.

"Many campus anti-nukers are intelligent but some claim to be experts and they prejudge the outcome beforehand," Penzias said.

"It's important to make nuclear power safe. Solar power is not enough. Coal is lethal and oil is expensive. Nuclear power is uncertain. It'd be nice if there were other alternatives. Nuclear power is the alternative to burning all our fossil fuels," he said.

"I'd like to see a balanced approach," he said. "Unemployment is a very big part of this thing. The poor people were not at Seabrook because they couldn't get off work. What do they think?"

"I didn't debate because I'm an expert, but because I'm a concerned citizen."

Campus' dead birds may be killing selves

By PETER SMERDON
Collegian Staff

Some light was shed yesterday on the cause of recent deaths of wild birds around the UMass campus. Whether this explains the whole phenomenon remains to be seen.

Zoology Prof. Lawrence M. Bartlett said yesterday he suspected the birds have been killing themselves by flying into obstructions. "In the fall there are a lot of young, inexperienced birds migrating," he said, "and they often fly into windows and such like on campus."

Bartlett said birds are especially attracted to night lights coming from glassed-in walkways—such as those between Thompson and Machmer Halls, and at the Engineering East Building.

"You always find a lot of dead birds around such places at this time of the year", he said.

Bartlett also said he doubted the birds were being poisoned, since he said there is no spraying during this season.

Referring to the recent appearance of many dead birds, Bartlett said it was not uncommon to see blood on the bills of dead birds which had hit buildings and windows.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality, a student group here, also reports concern about birds flying into objects. David Gagnon, a member of the CEQ steering committee, said they hope to hang silhouettes of hawks and bright paper in windows to prevent the birds from hitting them.

Research also has shown the riddle of dead birds at UMass is not as extraordinary as it at first appears. In July of 1978, several people around campus reported pigeons flying crazily, and writhing and vomiting on the ground. It was then reported that the Physical Plant was responsible.

According to reports, the Physical Plant officials said fifteen months ago they were using a bird repellent, brand name "Avitrol," to treat corn which they put out for pigeons.

Kenton H. Billings, head of buildings and grounds at Physical Plant, explained that Avitrol was a "flock alarming device" to keep the area around the Groesman clear "for a couple of years, on and off," from pigeon droppings.

According to Al Sorenson of the campus Department of Environmental Health and Safety (however) Avitrol was registered with the Environmental Protection Agency. Sorenson also said it had "no ill-effects and is not a poison."

Albert D. Potter, a section head at Physical Plant, said yesterday the Physical Plant was "not to my knowledge using anything in regard to pigeons."

Women's media group changing

By ANNE MERCIER
Collegian Staff

Plans for improvements and new development of the Women's Media Netwoek (WMN) are in the air, according to Network member Joan Scovill who met Tuesday night with WMN members.

The Network is a collective responsible for the Thursday night, WMUA broadcasting of the Women's Media Project, a radio show including women's music, public affairs programs, interviews and feminist-oriented news.

Also discussed in the meeting were an upcoming women's film series, the Valley Women's Voice (a locally published free feminist newspaper), office staffing, the process of 'networking,' and budget issues.

Judy Gold, who has been on the air on WMUA with the Women's Media Project for nearly a year and a half, said she "would like to lighten up on the radio show, and open up the show to other women, like Third World women." She suggested having three disc jockeys on the air per night with one training, and to have two public affairs slots per night, one from 8:30-9, and another from 9:30-10, Gold said.

"I would also like as many 'remotes' as possible on the show," Gold said, referring to tapes of feminist speakers living in or visiting the Pioneer Valley.

News anchorer Cathy Barber said, "The idea of the women's news show is to get out more information—what's not reported in the paper." She said newspapers tend to use the exceptional woman kind of story, but she would rather use stories such as the increase of women in lower status jobs.

Barber said she gathers the news by calling the AP wires and going through the 'straight' press. But she said she also relies on feminist journals, radical weeklies and monthlies, and special interest publications.

"I would like more first-hand investigative reporting and more coverage of local events...and meeting with other women interested in news," Barber said.

Area women interested in learning radio and video skills are encouraged to join the Women's Media Network, located in the Student UNion, room 415A. WMN is currently formalizing plans for training sessions at WMUA, and both introductory and advanced workshops in radio skills.

Karen Olch, another member of WMN, has put together a women's film series to show free in the Campus Center on consecutive Tuesday nights at 8 p.m. The series will begin October 23rd with "Blow for Blow," a film about a French working woman.

Olch said she "chose as broad a range of films that time and money allowed." The films' subjects include lesbian mothers and child custody cases, women artists, a conference on female spirituality and a photo and music collage.

The Commuter Collective donated some funds for the free film series, and WMN is also trying to get funding from the Lesbian Union, Olch said.

Marcia Black and Elizabeth Dworan of the Valley Women's Voice, located in Wilder Hall, discussed their budgetary problems in publishing the feminist newspaper.

Black, one of the co-founders of the publication, said the newspaper and the Women's Media Network have a "tricky connection" because they need funding through the University.

"Money is the connection, and that's bad," saod Black. "It is a continuous ongoing hassle, it has nothing to do with people, it has to do with the University bureaucracy," she said.

Black and Dworan suggested the two groups pool their efforts. They asked Cathy Barber to share her news material with the Valley Women's Voice, since they have a "weak spot" in the news brief section of the paper. Black also said they were adding a new feature to their paper—a monthly tally of incidences of violence against women. The tally would be obtained by contacting local police.

Scovill spoke about plans for developing the Women's Media Network. They are drafting a letter to be sent to other women's media collectives and communications schools asking about structure, organization, funding, and distribution of materials.

Resources for Valley women also are offered by WMN, said Susan Hoffman. WMN subscribes to monthly periodicals for women, available in the office, and has a bulletin for local happenings and important issues, she said.

Peking students demand army leave camps

By JOHN RODERICK
AP Special Correspondent

PEKING — More than 2,000 shouting, banner-waving students staged a sit-in at government gates Wednesday to demand that the army move out of their university campus.

"Give us back our school!" they shouted. "We will not go to school while the army remains! Give us back our dormitories and our kitchens!"

The students, carrying huge banners and hand pennants, marched up and down Peking's main boulevard, Changan, circled around Tien An Men square, the country's largest, and returned to the ornate red and gold gates of Chungnanhai — headquarters of the Communist Party and government.

The People's University students, relatively restrained and well-organized, insisted the Second Artillery force move out of university facilities.

The school was closed in 1972 and occupied by the soldiers. It was reopened last year and the army was to have left by August 1978. The soldiers, plagued by a shortage of living space in the capital, are reluctant to leave.

The army has yielded about one-third of the campus, mostly classrooms, but remains in the dormitories, which the students want to use.

There was no official comment or explanation of the occupation.

It was the largest protest of the year at the doorstep to the Forbidden City, where several hundred paupers from the provinces had camped off and on during the summer, appealing for improvement in their standard of living.

Security expected tight for Castro U.N. trip

NEW YORK (AP) — Fidel Castro is expected to arrive in New York today for a visit that has spawned an extraordinary security operation to protect the controversial Cuban president.

U.N. spokesman Rudolf Stajduhar said Castro will address the U.N. General Assembly at noon Friday. Other details of the visit — including Castro's arrival time and the length of his stay — were being discussed, and would be made public as they are decided, he said.

Plans for the visit have been shrouded in secrecy, partly due to the security problems associated with the Cuban leader.

U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim was not apprised of the visit until last Friday, and Castro's arrival date was not announced until Wednesday.

Stajduhar told reporters that Cuban Foreign Minister Isadoro Malmierca had revealed Castro's plans when he spoke to Waldheim shortly before noon Wednesday. He was accompanied by Cuba's U.N. ambassador, Raul Roa Kouri.

Castro will be speaking to the 152-nation assembly both as Cuba's head of state and as chairman of the 90-member non-aligned nations movement.

Stajduhar said he assumed that Castro would also address the non-aligned group.

Sexton—confessional poet

By KAREN ANGELINE
Collegian Staff

October 4th was the fifth anniversary of the suicide death of poet Anne Sexton, who according to fellow poet and admirer Maralee Gibson of Amherst, gave occasional readings at UMass and in the Pioneer Valley area before her death.

Sexton, who won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry in 1967, was a poet of the confessional school, and lived most of her life in Weston, Massachusetts. She was critically acclaimed throughout much of her career.

Born in Newton, Massachusetts, on November 9, 1928, she was the third and last daughter. She wrote of her childhood as unhappy, and it became a prevalent factor in her poetry. Sexton said she didn't like school. "I learned nothing, and see no point in mentioning places where my body sat at a desk and my soul was elsewhere," she wrote.

At 19, she eloped with Alfred M. Sexton. By 1956, they had two children. Shortly after the birth of the second, Sexton had her first nervous breakdown.

It was at this point that she began to write. Her confessional style seemed to develop rapidly. "I was often told that my poetry was too personal, too private. But the art, though it be suicide or murder, chooses you," she said.

In 1960, her first work, To Bedlam and Part Way Back, was published. Most of the book concerned her recovery from mental illness. Writing about previously undiscussed subjects, she caused controversy which continued throughout her career. Some critics said her poetry was a "terribly serious and determined soap opera." Others said there was "great breadth of style and mood, and diversity of image," and "great psychological insight."

Influences by her former teacher, Robert Lowell and poet W.D. Snodgrass, both of whom were concerned with personal experience, were evident in Sexton's works. However, she is generally seen as a less formal poet than Lowell; trying to decrease the alienation between herself and her readers through a lyrical style.

Much is said about the relationship between Sexton and Sylvia Plath. Both were "confessional" writers from New England, and both committed suicide. They met in 1958 while attending a seminar at Boston University taught by Robert Lowell. Sexton later wrote of afternoons spent at

Women's Issues Team supports Q.R. suit

To the Editor

In regard to the question of discrimination in the Bruce Goodchild/Byron Canney suit against the Q.R. Disco; the SCERA's Women's Issues Team wishes to publicly support Goodchild/Canney. We also urge individuals and groups throughout the campus and community to offer their support. We agree with the editorial by Jim Moran of Oct. 10 in that this case has the potential to test discrimination laws involving lesbians and gays, particularly in this valley. Whatever the state laws ambiguously say (or fail to say) the problem we are ultimately faced with is a denial of basic human rights: freedom to enjoy an evening with whomever one wants to, regardless of their sex. It is not only gay men who are constantly harassed, but lesbians as well, and now is the time for this harassment to end. Again, we urge your support of Goodchild and Canney in their struggle against discrimination and oppression.

Van the man couldn't rock a little 'baby'

To the Editor

In response to your October 4th article entited "Van rocks the cage": we feel that Van's performance could not have rocked a baby's cradle. Van's performance was as exciting as watching grass grow. His stage manner was far from captivating. As far as his guitar playing goes, my ten-year-old sister knows more notes and my sixty-year-old grandmother can jam better.

All seriousness aside, we're not saying the music didn't sound good. The trumpet player had a few good moments and the sax was enjoyable in spots, but the most exciting part of the concert occured when one player jumped up on a speaker and danced. Sorry, Van, you just can't cut it with the current rocksters. We were Van Morrison fans until we saw this concert. Van we've got some sound advice for you; Lawrence Welk is making a comeback and he wants you to star on his show, take it.

'Moaning' gays rights condoning immorality

To the Editor

I am writing this letter in reply to Jim Moran's article which appeared in Tuesday's Collegian (cleverly entitled "Archaic laws for gays stink: must alter them"). My first question to Mr. Moran is, "what is wrong with morals?" He says that we are strongly influenced by values of hard work and a family-oriented upbringing. Would he advocate slothfulness and the disappearance of the family? He says that we are being conditioned, but I would like to know in what way? Is it that we're "scared straight" by social pressures?

Human beings are alone in the animal kngdom in that they are the only creatures who are in a constant state of heat. All other sexually-reproducing animals have a mating season, and none of them exhibit homosexual behavior. Why is man alone in this perversion? I agree with Mr. Moran in that we are being conditioned, but this conditioning is not an overemphasis of morals but, rather, an overemphasis of sex. This conditioning lies at the heart of many of our society's problems, not the least of these being rape and the problem of homosexuality. The issue which we should concern ourselves with is not the rights of gays, but, instead, the presence of homosexuality.

Mr. Moran makes reference to the Fourteenth Amendment which concerns the equal protection of persons under the law. These laws, (the "darling little ditties of decency" as Mr. Moran so insipidly terms them) were arrived at through the due process which is also guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, and just because they have been around for over 350 years, does this mean they must be changed? Laws against murder have been around a lot longer. Does Mr. Moran condone murder?

To compare the civil rights struggle of the blacks with the moanings for gay rights is an insult to blacks. The gays don't want to "sit in the front of the bus." They want to hijack it to a rest area on Route 91 where they can engage in sick sexual activities. Uncle Sam doesn't have to invade their bedrooms. All he has to do is go to the Boston Public Library.

Mr. Moran says that Anita Bryant should limit her thoughts to oranges. I assert that he should limit his views to what he knows—nothing.

Karen Angeline's story missed a point

To the Editor

Karen Angeline's article on verbal abuse made some good points, but I think it is incorrect to suggest that dressing differently will make a difference. Angeline implies that if you are wearing clothes that are considered "suggestive" that you will be harrassed. From my experience this simply isn't so. A woman wearing a perfectly suitable and modest outfit is just as likely to be pestered as the "chick" in high heels and a slit skirt.

The object here, as in rape, is power, not sex. Trying to dress so that you won't look "like you were asking for it" only acknowledges the power that lies with the harrasser to do whatever he pleases, and points up the second class status that women in this society continue to hold.

Editorial/Opinion

In the 'red...'

L. A. Ross

The 1980 politicking season is getting underway and we can expect once again to see the two-party electoral coin flipped again—the same coin as the last time, and the time before, and the time before...

The right and "left" wings of the established order are already trading shots in the media, in hopes of attracting enough of what remains of voter support to become the next administrators/representatives of the system—the same system as before, no coins here. Among the major criticisms leveled at the liberal "left" (usually associated with the northeast, parts of the midwest, and the Democratic Party) by the conservative right (ditto southern Democrats and western Republicans) are those of "big government" and "creeping socialism."

The right points to certain positions taken by liberals on issues such as tax levels, government spending on social services, regulation of industry, and the like, and , taking these policies to their logical conclusion, claims liberals seek to move the U.S. in the same direction as Britain was moved by the Labor Party, or Sweden by the Social Democrats, before these parties were ousted—by election.

Some rightists go beyond logic to assert that liberals are in fact socialists and dream of setting up a new Kremlin in Washington, D.C. These views involve some basic distortions of fact and logic.

To begin with, LIBERALS ARE NOT SOCIALISTS. And welfare states are not socialist states. The "founder" of welfare capitalism in the U.S., Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, acted under the historical conditions of the Great Depression—the result of pre-welfare "free enterprise"—to save the capitalist system, and he did so with the backing of Big Business, despite unfavorable publicity from the conservative press.

The "socialist" governments in Sweden, Britain, etc., are welfare governments (like the New Deal Democrats of the thirties) which are elected because the people are sick and tired of the gross condition in which capitalism—left to itself—leaves society: with a growing gap between rich and poor, with heightening levels of involuntary unemployment and employment discrimination that shifts capitalism's abuse disproportionately upon women and non-WASP minorities. In other words, the capitalist system—"free enterprise"—failed to live up to its promises, and capitalists, faced with growing popular discontent and a possible revolutionary situation during depressions, decided that a liberal welfare state was better (for them) than a (real) socialist revolution. Especially considering the fat contracts coming their way from the government—why, the military-industrial complex actually LIKED welfare capitalism. And—best of all—Big Business doesn't even have to foot the bill, since they can soak the people for it all. How? By the simple tactic of raising prices enough to cover any corporate "tax" that they "pay."

The welfare "dole" and government "make-work" jobs have no place in a socialist society, because there is no unemployment. This is where the right wing's assertion that "socialism is for the lazy" and belief in the principle of "a day's pay for a day's work" become really ironical, since none other than Karl Marx defined one major feature of socialism as being "from each according to ability, to each according to work" Indeed, if "socialism is for the lazy" why are people all over the world fighting and dying for a socialist revolution? Certainly not because they believe in a free lunch.

Think—if capitalism is so beautiful, why does it give us such good deals as recessions with inflation ripping along at 10-13%, "good times" with 6% (official) unemployment (over 10% for nonwhites), obviously monopoly pricing in major industries, and, of course, Three Mile Island and more? And in the Third World (where the vast majority of people who live under capitalism—and military dictatorship—live) the inhuman working and living conditions that Europe and North America went through the last century prevail, with no end in sight.

Capitalism has gotten by (such as it is) in the U.S., Europe amd Japan only through its relation to the Third World as an exploiter of cheap labor, by preventing those nations from developing themselves. As nation after nation liberates itself from this imperialism, capitalism's basis gets shakier and shakier and the system goes into a crisis. Capitalists such as David Rockefeller (who is a liberal, by the way) think it has already begun, and have formed the Trilateral Commission (U.S.—Europe—Japan) to preserve the system—at the expense of people everywhere. Conservatives and liberals, even European Social Democrats, work on this organization to save capitalism. So the lines are drawn.

But the crisis will come anyway, and when it does, don't be surprised if people start seeing red, even HERE. Even if we don't dump the rich (conservative and liberal) this time, there will be other crises—all it takes is once and they'll be gone, gone, gone...maybe as far as the USSR, even, which is about due for another socialist revolution as well. Or maybe to outer space, to find some other world to literally rob. Or maybe into the dustbin of history, where we will finally be rid of their corporate ripoffs and state bureaucracy for good.

Lawrence M. Wright

I am writing in response to letters by Mr. Collins and Mr. Bolgen in the 10/2 Collegian. While Mr. Nojeim's article of 9/26, "Why Teddy," shows faults, his only major problem is that he did not state the moral issue involved in this case. I shall state it. Capitalism is the only system that upholds the rights of the individual. Socialism, and all other totalitarian systems, do not. The issue and the choice you must make is between individualism and collectivism. Anyone who tries to equate Fascism with Capitalism is either a moron or is trying desperately to cloud the issue. At this point, I cannot decide whether Mr. Collins is merely moronic, or whether he is more dangerous than that.

It is true that Socialism does not advocate an equal share for everyone. Socialism is much more rapacious than that; there are no objective standards or rights at all. The appropriate phrase is, "..from each according to his ability, to each according to his need." Who decided what your abilities are, or what job you should hold?

According to Mr. Collins, the "people" do. Who decided what your needs are? Again the "people" or "society as a whole." Who are the "people"? Who represents "society as a whole"? Senator Kennedy! Who is one of the most powerful politicians in Washington? Who benefits from such an arbitrary, meaningless standard? Senator Kennedy!

In an economy free of governmental controls, a capitalist economy, the Kennedys would not have been able to amass their loot, for they got rich by pull, by governmental control.

This, Mr. Bolgen, is why Senator Kennedy has a vested interest in arbitrary, meaningless, evil codes. He is the voice of the "people."

This is why Ted Kennedy is a Socialist.

And he is a Socialist!

A Socialist advocates the "equalization of wealth." What do you suppose "National Health Insurance" is designed to do?

Yes, Mr. Collins, the issue is "fairness", but in relation to what moral code? What kind of society eats some of its members in order for others to survive? What kind of moral cannibal are you to advocate my sacrifice to someone else's need? The question is not "Who should society help?", the question is "By what right or moral code do you propose to rob me of my money?"

Beware, achievers! Who do you think is going to pay for "National Health Insurance"? You are! Who will your sweat and toil benefit? Where will the rewards for your foresight go? To the lazy and incomnetent, who did not do the work, but who "need" you!

In conclusion, Mr. Collins, it is obvious that you have refused to consider what made the U.S. the great and wealthy nation it is today, in spite of totalitarians like you!

The sun also rises

Charles Bagli

When the sun rose above the trees Saturday morning it revealed a beautiful sight. Two thousand people moving across the marshes towards the Seabrook nuclear power station. After finally marching throught he forest in darkness for two hours we could see each other. rs we made attempts to broach the fence surrounding the Seabrook site from the north, south and western points. In a few short hours we experienced everything that every social movement that has gone through the "powers that be" has experienced.

The state police and national guard used water hoses, mace, and tear gas and their clubs against us. We had on our side, our determination, commitment, and organization based on our understanding of the dangers of nuclear power.

Sunday we used what we learned from the previous day. We were better organized and more together. We realized the police were going to do everything in their power, including violence, not to arrest us and clog up their court system.

On Sunday we went into a section of the storage area but were brutally forced to retreat. But we kept moving, we did not run away with our tails between our legs.

At thoss point it was decided to take our message out into the public eye. Marching down Route 1 through the middle of the town of Seabrook was truly heartwarming. People of all ages came out on their porches to shout encouragement. The cars driving up and down Route 1 defiantly honked their support loud and clear. The town of Seabrook forbade the state police and national guard from coming on town property to interfere with protestors.

As we came to the North Gate entrance to the nuke plant in the middle of town it was like a celebration! There was honking and cheering. We were elated to have stuck together through everything they threw at us. We would not be driven away. And the townspeople, old and young alike, were with us.

Late afternoon Sunday and all day Monday we picketed and sat in at the gate. Some people were still coming in from outside areas to show their support. The more than 400 press people took our action around the world. Seabrook, an international anti-nuke symbol, was not a dead issue.

Although the Seabrook nuke plant was not occupied protestors still all had smiles on their weary faces. It was a smile of victory at having accomplished something together.

The success of the occupation attempt has to be measured in many ways. The object was to take another step in closing down the Seabrook plant.

For three days the plant was closed and its usual 24 hour, seven days a week construction schedule was halted. That cost and estimated $2 million for an already financially shaky operation.

In the prepatory work leading up to the occupation many new people were educated to the dangers of the profit-seeking nuclear industry. New students have been drawn into the anti-nuke/alternative energy movement.

They will not stop here.

And in unity there is power to change the world. We learned that it is possible to take direct action and rely on ourselves, without falling apart.

We were heartened that our message and determination cannot be drowned in water, mace, or the violent clubs of the police. We will be back.

Carter vs. Kennedy

Support groups face off

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

Battle lines are forming in the as-yet-unofficial contest between President Jimmy Carter and Senator Edward M. Kennedy for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States. Volunteer recruitment and fundraising campaigns are being staged, with emphasis on two early primary states – Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Locally, two Amherst legislators, Sen. John Olver and Rep. James G. Collins have announced their support for the draft-Kennedy efforts and have begun organizational meetings in the area.

On campus, former student trustee, Herbert Tyson and Erik Andersen have scheduled a meeting for seven o-clock tonight to organize a five-college chapter of the "Democrats for Change in 1980," a draft-Kennedy group. Andersen said yesterday, "The thrust of the campaign will be to recruit student volunteers for New Hampshire and Massachusetts primaries, in addition to fundraising and canvassing efforts."

In New Hampshire, student volunteers are being organized to work for Kennedy, where he must enter before December 27th to get in the state's first-in-the-nation primary held on February 26th. Robin Rhodes, an undergraduate student at Georgetown University is coordinating the student activities in the Granite State. He said last week the draft-Kennedy movement there, termed the "Democrats for Change in 1980," was formed with the intentions of running an uncommitted slate for the state's 17 delegate spots at the Democratic National Convention.

"But it soon became apparent that this effort was snowballing and we switched to a write-in for Kennedy campaign," Rhodes said. He added he hoped the senator would announce his candidacy in time to get on the New Hampshire ballot. He did not exclude the possibility that Kennedy might "wait it out" and let California Governor Jerry Brown "spoil" the President. This would be a similar situation to the challenge posed to Lyndon Johnson by Eugene McCarthy in 1968.

In the Carter camp, New Hampshire press spokesman Ellis Woodward said last week the Carter-Mondale headquarters is running its campaign on two fronts: 1) grass-roots organizing of volunteers via the "dreaded three by five card system," and 2) personal appearances by Rosalynn and Chip Carter, as well as by Vice-President Walter F. Mondale.

The Christian Science Monitor reported on September 27th that Carter would announce his re-election bid on October 15. Woodward denied this, saying, "The First Lady knows exactly when the President will announce and rumor has it that it will be sometime in early December."

A source who asked to be unidentified said, "There was a rift between the Carter people from Georgia and the Washington Carter supporters. The Washington group wanted him to announce early, but the Georgia group wanted him to appear presidential and hold off to a later date. Apparently, the Georgia group won out."

Woodward spoke of a split among New Hampshire Democrats, with Governor Hugh Gallen supporting Carter and Senator John Durkin backing Kennedy.

Group forms to block Ted's unannounced candidacy

COLUMBUS, Ohio [AP] – The sole goal of the Stop Teddy On Presidency Committee is to see that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., is not elected president, the group's chairman told followers Tuesday night.

Daniel Bayes of Columbus said STOP isn't supporting anyone for president. "This committee will not endorse a candidate," he told about 75 people at the group's first public meeting.

Bayes said the committee will not campaign against Kennedy on moral issues. Trying to judge the senator's morals would backfire on the committee, he said.

But Kennedy's action following the Chappaquiddick accident is fair game, Bayes said. "I'm suggesting to you that a man who reacts that way doesn't have the ability to lead the U.S."

The committee, begun Sept. 11 by Bayes and several friends, already has raised about $9,000 and has opened an office here.

Bayes said he has received requests for help in forming STOP committees in Odessa and Dallas, Tex.; Memphis, Tenn.; Philadelphia, Pa., and Denver, Colo.

The committee now has about 500 members, according to Charles Grover, its treasurer.

Bayes expressed a belief that Kennedy is a liberal who stands for more government and whose views do not reflect those of the majority of the American people.

He said the committee differs from Kennedy on a long list of issues, including gun control and national health care.

San Francisco sniper hangs himself in jail

By FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Civic Center sniper Wayne Cullinane hanged himself in his jail cell before dawn Tuesday, three days after he terrorized downtown San Francisco with a 23-hour siege of random shooting.

The lifeless body of the 22-year-old Rhode Island native was discovered shortly after 6:30 a.m., dangling from a strip of bedsheet tied on the highest bars of his cell, according to the sheriff's department. The body was found by a jail trusty delivering breakfast who called a medical attendant to cut down the body.

Sheriff Eugene Brown, appearing nervous, told a news conference Cullinane was last checked at 3:15 a.m. or 3:30 a.m., three hours before discovery of the body. Brown's departmental policy is that inmates get checked every hour. Brown, who as sheriff is responsible for jail security, refused to answer repeated questions on why Cullinane wasn't checked hourly.

Brown said his psychiatric team had decided that Cullinane "was not suicidal." He said he did not believe any departmental negligence was involved in the suicide "so far."

Police said Cullinane's maximum-security isolation cell was around the corner from a medical station. The cell, they said, was not visible without walking at least 10 yards down a corridor.

After Cullinane's arrest Saturday afternoon, psychologist Dr. Chris Hatcher, who headed the team of negotiators trying to get Cullinane to let his 55-year-old female hostage go and give himself up, warned: "He's more suicidal than homicidal."

Coroner Boyd Stephens reported an autopsy disclosed asphyxiation by strangulation sometime between 4:30 a.m. and 5 a.m. He indicated the prisoner should have been under constant observation since inmates such as Cullinane often attempt suicide during their first days in jail.

the Ritz-Carlton in Boston, working on their poetry and talking about suicide. In "Sylvia's Death," Sexton writes of, "the death we drank to, the motives and the quiet deed." However, the two women were not in close contact through most of their careers.

Sexton wrote eight books, and taught at Boston University and Colgate University. She gave frequent readings, and received numerous awards.

She struggled wth mental illness for most of her life. Friends and family later said her 1974 suicide was not really a surprise, as she had planned it carefully. The book Anne Sexton: A Self Portrait in Letters, gives insight to the complexities of her nature. Sexton's poetry is brutally honest. She said, "Poetry should be a shock to the senses. It should almost hurt."

The First Move to an NSA Career Is Yours.

The National Security Agency is seeking top graduating students in Liberal Arts, Business and Mathematics to meet the challenges of exciting, demanding careers.

The first move is yours! To qualify for consideration, you must compete successfully on the Professional Qualification Test (PQT). The PQT will be given on campuses throughout the nation on November 17, 1979. You must, however, register for the test by November 3, 1979.

By scoring well on the PQT, you will be contacted regarding an interview with an NSA representative. We will discuss the specific role you will play in furthering this country's communications security or producing vital foreign intelligence information.

The PQT helps to measure your potential for career opportunities in such diverse fields as:

Programming — NSA's vast communications analysis projects need the management of people who are intimately involved with the latest developments in computer hardware/software.

Languages — Foreign languages are valuable, vital tools used at NSA for research and analysis. Advanced training can be anticipated as well as the possibility of learning another language.

Information Science — A field, drawing upon a multiplicity of disciplines, involving the collection, storage, retrieval, interpretation and dissemination of information.

Communications — Scientifically devised, tested and managed cryptographic systems ensure the maximum degree of security in transmitting sensitive information around the globe. Since cryptography is a rather unique pursuit, the training of new employees is extensive and esoteric.

Other Opportunities — A limited number of applicants may be selected for management support areas such as Personnel, Security, Logistics and Resources Management.

Register Now For The PQT

Pick up a PQT bulletin at your college placement office. Fill out the registration form and mail it before November 3 in order to take the test on November 17. There is no registration fee.

Those individuals graduating with a Bachelors or Masters degree in Electronic Engineering, Computer Science or Slavic, Near Eastern or Far Eastern languages may interview without taking the PQT. Mathematicians, at the Masters degree level, are also exempt from having to qualify on the PQT and may sign up for an interview.

For NSA career positions, U.S. citizenship, a thorough background investigation, and a medical examination are required.

Bad news for 'Bad News'

SAN DIEGO (AP) - For the second time in two years, Marvin Barnes has been put on waivers, this time by the injury-ridden San Diego Clippers. With their National Basketball Association season opener two days away, the Clippers reduced their liability a bit by waiving Barnes, the 6-foot-9 forward signed less than two weeks ago. Both his knees have been swollen with fluid.

Barnes, a former Providence College basketball star, was put on waivers last year by the Boston Celtics.

The waivers for Barnes put the Clippers strength at 13 with the deadline for getting down to 11 at 3 p.m. today.

Meanwhile, All-Pro center Bill Walton was on crutches, his backup Sven Nater treating a thigh bruise and guard Brian Taylor nursing a persistent headache after a mild concussion.

Spikers split tri-match at ENC

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team continues to have some difficulty after losing a tough match to Springfield College last Saturday. The Minutewomen managed to split a tri-match against Eastern Nazarene College and Salem State Tuesday night at ENC.

UMass first played Eastern Nazarene. Even tough ENC had "no real offense" according to UMass coach Elaine Marasco, the Minutewomen could not time their blocking; ENC swept the Minutewomen, 8-15, 14-16.

Against Salem State College, UMass wrested away a sweep 15-10, 15-11, as the UMass offense got kicking again with some key plays.

"It was a tough time," said Marasco, "our blocking couldn't get together with their offense. Also, both Eastern Nazarene and Salem State were 'up' for us; we weren't 'up' for either match. We've learned a lot over the past week, and the team has played under some very trying circumstances. I think the team has been improving, and will be ready for the game against MIT."

That match, at MIT, will be on Saturday; it will be an afternoon game.

Coming along with the varsity will be the junior varsity, who came off a fine but futile showing against the Springfield JVs.

The record for UMass women's volleyball currently stands at 8-3 (not counting their opener against Warsaw Academy), with 16 matches remaining on the regular season.

Celts axe Stacom

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics trimmed their roster to the 11-man maximum yesterday by cutting three guards, including National Basketball Association veteran Kevin Stacom.

Also waived were free agent Ricky Marsh, a starter for the Golden State Warriors two years ago, and rookie Wayne Kreklow of Drake, Boston's first draft choice this year, in the third round.

The three players become free agents if they are not claimed by another team within 48 hours.

Stacom, a Celtics secondround draft pick from Providence College in 1974, played four years with Boston, signed with the Indiana Pacers a year ago as a free agent and then returned to the Celtics at midseason. He was a member of Boston's NBA championship squad in 1975-76.

Fred Creighton debuts as Bruin head coach

BOSTON (AP) — It's a tough act to follow, according to Fred Creighton, and the new Boston Bruins coach moves to center stage tonight as the National Hockey League team opens its 1979-80 season.

Creighton, who replaced popular Don Cherry last summer, knows the ex-coach's fans will be watching his every move, beginning tonight at Boston Garden against the Winnipeg Jets.

Also watching with more than detached interest will be Bruins General Manager Harry Sinden, who set Cherry free and hired Creighton.

Boston tallied 100 points in winning the Adams Division title last season under Cherry, now coaching the Colorado Rockies.

The team under Creighton — the former Atlanta Flames bench boss — looks pretty much the same as a year ago, except for the addition of two No. 1 draft picks, defensemen Ray Bourque and Brad McCrimmon.

Veteran goalie Gerry Cheevers is back along with Gilles Gilbert, who had threatened to sign with another team as a free agent.

Defenseman Brad Park, who missed 40 games last year with a knee injury, is sidelined again by the same ailment. Gary Doak, another oldster on defense, also is out with a cracked knuckle.

The starting lineup was undecided yesterday. The Bruins were 5-4-1 in exhibitions as Creighton experimented with a variety of player combinations.

Bourque, only 18, has teamed with veteran Dick Redmond, while McCrimmon, 20, has worked with Mike Milbury on defense.

The Jets were champions of the World Hockey Association before their admittance with three other WHA clubs to the NHL. Coached by Tom McVie, the team still is hoping to lure superstar Bobby Hull out of retirement. Hull is thinking it over.

The Jets goaltenders are 6- foot-4 Gary Smith, who helped Winnipeg beat Edmonton in the WHA playoff finals, and Pierre Hamel, formerly of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Rimshots

The first snowfall has graced the UMass campus signifying that winter has arrived and along with winter comes roundball. Tomorrow night begins the long 82-game journey known as the regular season.

Only slightly more than half of the 22 team league (12) will make the playoffs, making the NBA's regular season that much more intriguing (ha-ha).

With this in mind, I do here put forth my annual basketball predictions.

Eastern Conference
Atlantic Division

1. Washington—Bullets coach Dick Motta and the Fat Lady have a good thing going.
2. Philadelphia—Hypothesis: Darryl Dawkins has certain mental drawbacks. Solution: Electro-shock therapy. Result: Second place.
3. Boston—A Bird in the hand is worth—third place. Respectability finds its way back to the Boston Garden.
4. New York—Rub out the "Human Eraser" (Marvin Webster). The future of this team lies in rookies Sly Williams, Bill Cartwright, and Larry Demic.
5. New Jersey—Welcome to the big time, John Gianelli.

Central Division

1. San Antonio—With George Gervin and Larry Kenon around, all too few realize the importance of Wiley Peck.
2. Atlanta—Neither snow, nor rain, nor Ted Turner can stop the Hawks from having another good year.
3. Houston—Hooray!!! Rick Barry is on the bench. Welcome to the starting lineup, Robert Reid.
4. Detroit—What can you say about a team that lusted for Bob McAdoo?
5. Utah—Why in hell is a team from Utah playing in the Central Division?
6. Cleveland—The Cavs traded starting center Jim Chones for Dave Rubbish, er, Robisch. How can they be anything but last?

Western Conference
Midwest Division

1. Denver—This prediction is based on the premise that Chuck Fairbanks will not appear at McNichols Arena.
2. Milwaukee—Will the loss of John Gianelli be felt? No.
3. Chicago—On one hand the Bulls have Artis Gilmore and Reggie Theus. On the other hand they have sweat.
4. Kansas City—The Kings are one of the few possessors of a Ford that doesn't die on the road.
5. Indiana—Oh how the Pacers long for the good old days of the ABA with Mel Daniels and Roger Brown.

Pacific Division

1. Los Angeles—In a single off season, the Lakers have put together an A-1 starting lineup (Jabbar, Nixon, Magic Johnson, Wilkes, and Haywood) with a A-1 bench (Ford, Carr, Boone, and Chones).
2. Seattle—Lonnie Shelton and Vinnie Johnson, return to New York! You forgot to say "May I?"
3. San Diego—Hello, Bill Walton. Goodbye, Marvin Barnes.
4. Phoenix—Only a total team effort and a pocketful of miracles can make the Suns rise.
5. Portland—Hello, Kermit Washington. Goodbye, Bill Walton.
6. Golden State—The Warriors are doing their part to make 1979 a total athletic lobotomy in San Francisco.

So there you have it. And when the dust clears in June, and the playoffs are finally over, look for the Lakers to be smiling. The Los Angeles front office has put together the strongest team in Laker history since Wilt Chamberlain was thumping up and down the court.

Five-run first inning holds up for Orioles

A five run outburst in the bottom of the first inning was all the Orioles needed, as Baltimore staved off a game long Pittsburgh rally, downing the Pirates by a score of 5-4.

Bruce Kison picked up the loss for the Bucs and Mike Flanagan went the distance for the Orioles in picking up the win. Kison was relieved by Jim Rooker, Enrique Romo, Don Robinson, and Grant Jackson, all of whom turned in shutout performances.

Home runs in the game were struck by Baltimore's Doug DeCinces in the bottom of the first, a two-run blast and Willie Stargell of the Pirates hit a solo shot in the seventh to pull the Pirates to within a run, 5-4.

In the top of the ninth, with one out Pittsburgh's Dave Parker, four for five on the night, banged out his third single. With Bill Robinson at the plate, Parker broke for second and was caught dead to rights on a throw from Orioles first baseman Eddie Murray.

But Parker managed top kick the ball out of Belanger's glove. Unfortunately for the Pirates Parker got no further than second as both Robinson and Willie Stargell were unable to bring the tying run home.

Poloists stop Westfield, 16-15

By BILL ROBOTH
Collegian Staff

UMass water polo is currently in a rebuilding year with only three returning veterans. A strong nucleus of younger players is showing improvements every game. UMass started out slow with a four-game losing streak but got on the winning track against Westfield State. However, the victory didn't come easy.

UMass jumped out to a 5-3 lead at the end of the first quarter. Scoring drives by George Collins, Joe Hebert, and Tom Jozetick accounted for the quick UMass start.

At the half, UMass had upped its margin by a goal, 8-5, due to the fine ball control of Mike Sweet and Anna Beth Peterson.

The offensive attack of Westfield was thwarted by UMass' improved defense, sparked by the improved goaltending of co-netminders Bill Tharion and Bill Eckel.

The second half was a total team letdown and a regression back to earlier losing battles. UMass continued to score on goals by Andre LaMontaine, Ed Lizotte, Mike Rowbotham, and Mike Gold. But the team concept to defense totally broke down allowing for breakaway goals by Westfield.

As the game clock wound down, the game seemed destined to go to the Minutemen. With the score tied at 15, Becca Reggio scored from the wing as she caught the Westfield goalie out of position, giving UMass a 16-15 win.

UMass and Westfield go at it again this evening at 6:00 at the Boyden Pool.

Snowed out!

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Yes, we all know it snowed yesterday. Field hockey was not meant for snow covered fields and yet UMass and Yale attempted to play the game yesterday at the "Aspen" of playing fields—NOPE. The game was called at the half with the score tied at one. The game will be replayed at a later date.

The two teams faced off at 3:30 on the muddy, snow covered field. Pam Hixons undefeated (6-0) squad saw Yales' (4-2-1) Christie Littlejohn poke the small, white ball (undistinguishable in the snow) through the mud and past UMass goalie Karen Stifter to take the lead at 1-0.

Movement in this mess was slow, cold, and painful. Both Hixon's team and Richard Kentwell's Yale squad endured frozen feet and hands. Sore shins were perhaps the story of the day.

Behind 1-0 and losing momentum; somehow Julie McHugh centered a low shot in front of the Yale goal. After a wild scramble Laura O'Neil scored at 31:30 of the first half—a slap from the goalmouth. Shots on goal stood at seven apiece.

The half mercifully ended a few minutes later. Perhaps fearing a lawsuit or suffering from frostbite—head linesman Lauraine Hart conferred with both coaches and called the game.

The stickwomen must be wondering what season of the year this is. Tuesday's match with UConn was called for rain and the snow at this one somehow seemed appropriate. The stickwomen beat Yale (away) last year 3-1. Pam Hixon huddled her team after the decision was made and told them, "we get another chance to play them again—to replay the game entirely."

Hixon and Kentwell will decide when the game will be replayed. Kentwell said, "These are two very good teams and the field did not do credit to our stickwork and hockey abilities. It was not fair and under these conditions a tie was good to see."

Stock market slows after record trading day

By FLOYD NORRIS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — The stock market's three-day slide stalled yesterday as trading on the New York Stock Exchange, although still heavy, was off considerably from Wednesday's record-setting pace.

Analysts were cautious in predicting an end to the market's skid, ascribing the calming in the market to a number of internal factors.

The closely watched Dow Jones industrial average, after plunging 48.29 in the first three days of the week, began the day with a slight increase, fell sharply, and recovered to close at 844.62, down 4.70.

Heavy trading and falls in the market followed as a result of the decision Monday by the Federal Reserve to tighten the money supply and increase the interest rate.

Meanwhile, President Carter, only two days after supporting efforts to tighten the nation's money supply, blamed the Federal Reserve Board yesterday for interest rates he said are too high.

"Interest rates are too high, inflation rates are too high," Carter said in a speech to leaders of the nation's building trade unions. He promised them, "I will not fight inflation with your jobs."

William O'Connor, a 39-yearold computer consultant from Toms River, N.J., said the value of his stocks had fallen from $35,000 to $30,000 in the past three days. But O'Connor was undaunted. "I love it," he said. "I can afford to buy now. And you know stocks will come back."

Library loses Boston bricks

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — UMass officials now have a pair of crumbling libraries on their hands, as Boston campus authorities confirmed today that pieces of brick are falling off the 11-story library.

Claiming that university officials have known about the problem for "three or four years," Director of Facility Planning and Development Willard Prince yesterday said "pieces of brick are falling off."

Although similar to the falling bricks which forced the closing of the Amherst campus library in August, there are no immediate plans to close the Boston library. However, the state Bureau of Building Construction has advised University administrators to install barriers for "precautionary measures," Prince said.

Prince also said both libraries have similar construction problems, with deterioration of the brick facing causing the chips of brick to fall off.

Completed in 1973, the UMass Boston library was designed by Harry Weese and Associates of Chicago and built by the construction firm of Blout and Fontaine. The Amherst campus library was completed in 1973 by Daniel O'Connell and Sons of Holyoke.

Access to the library is currently obtained through a glass-enclosed bridge connected to classrooms and administration buildings.

Overseeing the construction of the Boston library was the New York-based consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto. The firm is currently being investigated by a "Blue Ribbon" state commission looking into state and county building contracts.

The BBC hired the Steco Engineering Company of Norwell last year to investigate problems in the campus construction. In their report, the firm recommended that two sides of the library be cordoned off, noting that pieces of brick were hanging on by "nothing but caulking."

UMass spokesman Howard White yesterday said there have been no reports of the falling bricks striking anyone. He also said University trustees discussed the cracks in the masonry in March, 1978.

Once the BBC hired Steco to investigate causes, liability, remedy and cost of repair to the library, White said the trustees last month appropriated $250,000 for fiscal year 1981 to fix the exterior problems.

Although students cannot approach the library from its two restricted sides, access to the Boston building is available through the walkway. The situation is unlike that of the Amherst campus, where complete access to the library is only open to library staff members.

The Amherst library has been cordoned off on all sides, with temporary walkways paved around the building. No estimate has been given for completion of repair work, although a temporary site in Goodell has been operating for students since last month.

No sex roles here

All the kids are in the kitchen

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

"If a boy wants to cook and play with dolls, and a girl wants to wrestle and play with trucks, we let them," said Dr. Carolyn Edwards, director of the Skinner Early Childhood Education Laboratory School.

The teacher training school for early childhood education majors is also a center for research on young children's development in education.

Because three and four-year-old children begin to classify and generalize about people and roles as they learn about themselves, the school feels this crucial period should occur within a framework that focuses on human potential rather than prescribed societal limitations, Edwards said.

Twenty children, approximately half boys and half girls, meet thrice weekly from 1-3:30 p.m., in a bright horseshoe-shaped room at the nursery school. Two teachers, aided by two under-graduate teaching assistants, one graduate teaching assistant and eight student teachers, take part in the classroom experience.

The school provides non-sexist environments such as housekeeping, cooking, block, workshop and play areas by using learning materials and teaching techniques that encourage both boys and girls to participate in any and all activities.

"American boys and girls do not exhibit exaggerated sex differences because their social behavior is fairly similar," Edwards said. "They both go to school and are expected to achieve in today's society."

She said certain sex differences are universal. People shouldn't expect boys and girls to behave exactly alike,

Kids benefit from male teacher

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Jack Tulloss, a graduate student teaching assistant, and the only adult male influence in the Skinner Nursery School classroom, feels that three- and four-year-old children would benefit greatly from having more male teachers in the classroom.

If a child has no father, then lack of adult male influence in the classroom would be a detriment to the child's social development, Tulloss said. Even if the child has a father, input from another man is valuable, because he provides the child with another role model. A combination of male and female teachers provide children with a total experience package, he said.

"As a rule, these university level professors see children as phenomena, not as little sets of hearts and lungs. It's a cop-out to view children as research objects" —Tulloss.

Tulloss is working on his doctorate in early childhood education. He said very few men are attracted to the field because of both economic and personal reasons.

Salaries are very low, Tulloss said, and men usually want to attain much higher earning power.

He said men are caught up in their own stereotypes of thinking that the field is not manly, and it is almost as strange to find them in early childhood education as in home economics.

Most of the UMass professors of early childhood education are males, most of whom received their undergraduate degrees in the more research-oriented fields of psychology, Tulloss said. These professors are men who have had little or no "hands on" classroom experience, he said.

"As a rule, these university level professors see children as phenomena, not as little sets of hearts and lungs. It is a cop out to view children as research objects," Tulloss said.

Tulloss believes there is a distinct difference between the way upper level female and male professors view children. Women take a more humanistic approach because they usually have had more undergraduate field experience with them.

Male teachers who become actively involved in classrooms will tolerate more rough and tumble play, Tulloss said, and will provide them with a wider range of experience by encouraging more male oriented activities for both boys and girls. He said women keep a closer reign on children and are more cognizant of their physical well-being.

No-nukers attack finances

Associated Press

A frontal assault by nuclear activists failed to halt construction on the Seabrook nuclear power plant, but a flank attack on its finances — including a planned Wall Street demonstration — is having greater success.

In the past two months, a grass roots organization has stymied attempts by the Public Service Company of New Hampshire to sell a portion of the controversial plant to a group of Massachusetts public utilities.

Demonstrators also invaded the stately board room of the First National Bank of Boston in August to protest its Seabrook investments. And anti-nuclear organizers hope an Oct. 29 rally on Wall Street will bring the issue to the rest of the nation.

The most successful sortie against Seabrook financing has been in Massachusetts, where the Municipal Power Advocacy Coalition challenged the sale of a 14 percent chunk of the plant to 30 utilities belonging to the Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Co

Tuft's prof wins Nobel

WINCHESTER, Mass. — A sophisticated X-ray technique permitting non-surgical diagnosis of tumors earned the Nobel Prize in medicine yesterday for Allan MacLeod Cormack, a quiet, bespectacled professor who teaches basic physics to freshmen at Tufts University.

"There's a good deal of luck involved in winning a Nobel Prize," the 55-year-old native of Johannesburg, South Africa said shortly after he learned of his selection. "One can never hope to win it."

Cormack, a full professor at the Medford school although he has only a master's degree, shared the prize for development of the "CAT (computer-assisted tomography) scan" that gives doctors a three-dimensional look at a slice of the brain and other parts of the body.

Brown at BU talks of nukes, presidency, space exploration

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. continued "an exploratory campaign effort," speaking before a standing-room only crowd of several hundred students at Boston University yesterday. Brown's short speech focused on nuclear power and the 1980 presidential election, with frequent references to re-establishing the space program and protecting the environment.

He pointed to the 1980 election as critical to America to "define our character and our fortune," and called for a "new order" whose priorities would be to protect the earth, to have the economy serve the people, and a third "absolute necessity," to further the exploration of science and space.

Brown criticized President Carter for keeping nuclear power in the central position of America's energy policy, especially when the country is still far from a solution to a waste disposal program. He also complained that utilities are planning a $1.6 million advertising campaign to help the image of nuclear power and urged that stations carrying pro-nuclear ads be required to provide free air time to anti-nuclear statements.

Encouraging alternate energy technologies and conservation, Brown said "unless we defer our consumption and gratification in a more significant way...we will see our economy stagnate, the dollar diminish, and other countries look elsewhere for their inspiration."

Area governments deal with money allocations, problems

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Area governments this week discussed business ranging from the allocation of funds to the problems of what to do without them.

Sylvan Area President David Cline said the area's computer center might not be able to open this semester. According to Cline, a withdrawal of funds offered by Campus Security will keep the center closed.

Cline also said the government will "have trouble with Student Senate Budget cuts." He said the seven percent cut passed Wednesday night by the Senate will "decimate activities planned for the semester."

Northeast Area President Chris Decker said that government is also looking for funds for two or three computer terminals for Northeast.

The Southwest Assembly allocated $200 for the area's craft shop. The assemble also assigned people to their Hamden Programming Committee. The Committee, which will schedule events in Hamden Dining Commons, is composed of three heads of residence, three students, Paul McDonald; the RSO Student Activities director for Southwest, and Bob Antill; Southwest Theater Programmer.

The Orchard Hill Area Government agreed to make the Men's Center into a study room until a coordinator can be found, according to OHAG president Tim Gallagher.

'Swing space' no longer home

By STEVEN SEMPLE
Collegian Staff

Eight students now in temporary housing will be relocated to permanent housing assignments by today, Housing Assignment Coordinator Gerald Quarles said Wednesday.

The students affected have been living in what the university calls "swing space," in some cases, since the beginning of the semester. Swing space is defined by the Housing Office as student-use space, used primarily for temporary housing.

Usually, swing space rooms are converted study lounges not much different from other rooms. For some, swing space is the last resort for on-campus housing, while other students accept it as a temporary accommodation while waiting for placement in another dorm.

Chi P. Cheung, a sophomore electrical engineering major, said he has been living in a Lewis dormitory basement room since the middle of September. Bill McBaron, a 20-year-old economics major, was assigned to the same room, but refused to spend even one night there.

The room is not equipped with lamps, bookshelves or heat. The closest toilet is on the first floor, the closest shower, on the second. No neighbors are nearby, except when a party is occasionally held in the adjacent lounge.

Lewis Head of Residence Sandy Brown called the arrangement "criminal."

"I wouldn't put my clothes in the closet because there was stuff growing in the corners of it," McBaron said. "There was trash in the dresser drawers and mildew everywhere. I brought all my stuff in and then took it out the same day."

Meanwhile, McBaron has been staying for four weeks in a small room in a nearby dorm with two friends. He sleeps in a sleeping bag on the floor, and describes the situation as "very tough on all of us."

Sophomore electrical engineering major Patrick Lee left swing space room B6 in Johnson dormitory after it flooded in a severe rainstorm last month. He has since been living with Cheung in Lewis.

Both men said they have been to the Housing Office six or seven times to ask why they haven't been given better accommodations. "They never gave me a detailed answer," Lee said.

Gays, lesbians to rally for rights

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

This Sunday some 200,000 gay and lesbian persons from around the country will converge upon the nation's capital in a demonstration for an end to discrimination against people on account of sexual orientation.

Locally, some 200 students and concerned persons will leave in buses and car pools from the Five-College area. UMass People's Gay Alliance spokesperson Kevin George said there have already been 88 reservations on two buses that will depart from the Campus Center early Sunday morning to make the noon rally in Washington. "In addition another 100 or so will be going in private vehicles," George said.

The march is part of a weekend series of events sponsored by gay groups across the nation. Events scheduled for Saturday include a conference for Third World gays and lesbians to build a coalition and outreach network. Several caucuses and workshops are to be held. Also scheduled is a concert Saturday evening featuring Meg Christian, Carol MacDonald and Isis, the L.A. Gay Men's Chorus and others.

In addition several other gay groups will meet: the Gay Atheist League, Dignity—a Catholic group, Parents and Friends of Gays, and a meeting of gay people in the legal profession, among others.

Speakers for the rally on Saturday include Bruce Voeller, of the National Gay Task Force, activist Flo Kennedy and Margo St. James.

The issues surrounding the demonstration are: the repeal of all anti-gay and lesbian laws, the passing of a comprehensive lesbian/gay rights bill in Congress, the issuance of a presidential executive order banning discrimination in the Federal sector, the end of discrimination in lesbian mother and gay father custody case, and the protection of gay youths from laws used to "discriminate against, oppress and/or harass them in their homes, schools, jobs and social environments."

W.E.B. DuBois Homestead- A National Landmark

The W. E. B. Du Bois homestead in Great Barrington, Ma. will be dedicated as a national historical landmark on October 20th. Several ambassadors are expected to attend the ceremony where Civil Rights activists and Georgia state senator Julian Bond will be the keynote speaker.

The ceremonies will be attended by an official from the Department of Interior who will present a plaque to be enshrined at the site.

The ambassador from Ghana to the U.S., Alex Quaison-Sackey sent a letter to Homer Meade, the program's coordinator that he would attend the ceremony.

Also expected to attend is the ambassador from China to the U.S., Chai Zemin who also sent a letter to Meade. Du Bois and Quasion-Sackey were close friends, according to Meade, whose correspondence were published in the third volume of Du Bois' letters, by the UMass Press.

In 1959 Du Bois went to the People's Republic of China where he was treated as a prominent and important figure. He spoke with Mao Tse-Tung and spoke at a rally which was attended by over 100,000 people.

Other notables include H.V.H. Sekyi, the Ghanian ambassador to the United Nations, Benjamin Hooks, Executive Director of the NAACP, David Graham Du Bois, Du Bois' stepson, Randolph Bromery, former Chancellor at UMass and E.S. Reddy Director of the Center Against Apartheid of the United Nations. The public is invited to attend.

'Homeland' This Sunday

"Homeland" by Selaelo Maredi and Steve Friedman is an effective play about racism in South Africa and the United States. It is a story of two house servants, for white suburban families in South Africa and Darien, Connecticut. Keentseng Monaheng (Suzanne Byam) the house servant of the South African family, meets the American house servant Frances Green (Ouida Billups) when her master "a public relations man for the South African division of General Motors, is called to the United States for a conference." Keentseng comes along to mind the family's child.

The two black women are attracted to each other and they learn that they have more in common than just skin color. The circumstances of their livelihood has caused each to suffer similar type of oppression. Whether in South Africa or Darien, Connecticut, the racism from each of these servants' benefactors is the same.

"Homeland" weaves "together comedy and seriousness, an analysis of the role of U.S. corporations in South Africa's apartheid policies, a trade-union consciousness, and a feminist critique that takes class differences into account."

"Homeland" will be here one night only, Sunday, October 14 in the Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Castro to Address U.N. Today

By ARTHUR EVERETT
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fidel Castro, shielded by 2,000 police and dozens of his own guards, spent his first day in New York City in 19 years.

The Cuban president, who is to address the General Assembly late Friday morning, was clad in familiar green fatigues as he arrived Wednesday night on a jet flight from Havana.

He was whisked into seclusion at the building at 38th Street and Lexington Avenue, seven blocks from the United Nations.

About 2,000 New York City police officers, many helmeted and wearing bulletproof vests, joined Secret Service agents and security guards from Havana in throwing a protective ring around Castro's local headquarters, where he passed his first day without showing himself.

It was far below the size of the 11,500-member police detail that spread out to guard Pope John Paul II last week. But it was unsurpassed for the concentrated protection it afforded the bearded Cuban President.

Rumors of assassination threats were rife. But Elsa Ybarra, an organizer for Alpha 66, one of several anti-Communist groups dedicated to Castro's overthrow, called them untrue.

The woman said she fought with Castro in the mountains of Cuba during his rise to power in the late 1950s, leaving when she learned he was a Communist.

Shortly before noon, a half a dozen vehicles, including a black limousine in the center of the line, swept east from the mission in the direction of U.N. headquarters. Officials at the U.N. later said Castro was not in the caravan.

Pro-and anti-Castro demonstrators were cleared from a four-block area around the Cuban mission. They were kept separated on the fringe of the so-called "frozen zone."

It was Castro's first visit to New York since 1960, 20 months after he took power in Cuba. His 4¼-hour speech then still is a record for the General Assembly.

This time, he is scheduled to speak 75 minutes to the 152- nation assembly, beginning 11:30 a.m. Friday.

Prior to the address, Castro was to meet with U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and Assembly President Salim A. Salim.

Letters

And 'Who's' up with the buck?

To the Editor

I was angry, frustrated, and down right annoyed when I got to the ticket stand and the price of the movie Tommy, which was shown Wednesday, September 26, at the CCA, was $1.50 after being advertised for $1.00 all over campus.

My anger - increased when my suitemate went to see The China Syndrome and once again this "little game," false advertising, was played on the customer.

What's going on here? Who is ripping off who?

Unfortunately, I don't know who is to blame for this inconvenience; but whoever is responsible for this should insure that the situation is rectified as soon as possible.

In all fairness to the student body, if the movies are going to cost $1.50 at the door, then they should be advertised as such.

Attn. Mr. Baron: 'you're ignorant'

To the Editor

I feel compelled to respond to Ephraim Baron's letter of October 11, in which he commented on Jim Moran's article of the 9th. It is when I read letters like yours, Mr. Baron, that I am reminded of the ignorance, intolerance, and hate that pervades this campus. Believe it or not, there are several gay people at this University, who are represented (openly or not) in a diverse cross-section that encompasses all majors, student activities, and athletics. Your letter was offensive to all.

It was rather arrogant of you to assert that Mr. Moran knows nothing—your thought processes aren't very sharp. If you had read his article with any amount of attentiveness, you might have caught on to the fact that he does not advocate the systematic destruction of moral values, heterosexual sex, and the family unit. Rather, he is attacking the neurotics such as yourself, who, thinking they have God and Uncle Sam behind them, maintain that homosexuality is a conscious effort to deviate from accepted social standards in as perverted a way as possible.

Well, Mr. Baron, I think it is perverted that destroying lounge furniture, tossing flaming toilet paper, and overturning dumpsters is readily accepted as normal behavior on this campus, while two men dancing together is considered foul and disgusting.

That you attack homosexuality with so much vigor, choosing to circumvent the issue by labeling it a sickness or disease, indicates that you must feel terribly threatened by it in some manner.

As for your pitiful analogy regarding the struggle of black people and gay people, it has been a long time since I read anything so insultingly ignorant. What you said is exemplary of the belief among typical textbook case homophobics (such as yourself) that all gay people are aggressive sex maniacs who want it anywhere with anyone.

Don't flatter yourself.

Brook's the pits: enough's enough

To the Editor

Once again, we find it necessary to address a letter to the community, through this newspaper, in the hopes of seeing some action taken.

We would like to extend an open invitation to all university officials to take a leisurely stroll through Brooks House. Without a doubt, a guided tour could be arranged. Come see the disgusting, deteriorating conditions with which the residents of this building must suffer. Broken furniture, poorly-lit study spaces, lack of study room, poor lighting, inadequate bathroom facilities, and the least living space per student for our rent dollars. We pay $397 per semester to live in this dormitory. Combined, the university receives approximately $55,000 from the residents of Brooks, Why are we exploited in this manner?

We pay the salaries of the people who refuse to give us services—How can this happen? Well, you might add, how can a university function without a library, without ample study space, without concern for the quality of life of students, and without effort on the part of administrators?

For three years there has been talk of renovation, delaying any improvements on the dorm. Renovation is now slated for 1981—three semesters away. How can we be sure that this date won't be postponed also? Even so, how can anyone expect us to live in these slum-like conditions?

Enough talk of housing contracts, pleas, and petitions. WE DEMAND ACTION! To begin with, we expect a response to set up a meeting between concerned Brooks residents and the administrators responsible for the conditions of this dorm. Come out of your offices; meet with us; talk with us; reason with us. Show us who you are and we will show you that we care.

We as C.R.A.'s are expected to promote awareness and community development. Give us the necessary conditions i.e. a clean, safe, healthy, liveable environment with which to help facilitate our goals. Increasingly, students on this campus are forced to meet with conditions which make their studies at this university more difficult. Don't make our life unbearable by neglecting to provide us with adequate living conditions.

U.S. should show human concerns

To the Editor

The U.S. refusal to make good its promise of war reparations to Vietnam at the end of war is in large part the cause of the refugee problem. Moreover, the U.S. immorally and irresponsibly abandoned those Vietnamese who had allied themselves with U.S. imperialism. Cambodia and Vietman's decimation by U.S. bombs and defoliants resulted in massive disruption of agricultural output and elimination of livestock. Starvation and disease is widespread not because of Communist ideology, but because of a cruel refusal by U.S. policy makers to accept responsibility for the problem which resulted from the war and to make substantial contributions to the amelioration of that problem. Economic dislocation and disruption caused by the war has forced thousands of people to leave Vietnam. It is time that the U.S. genuinely show its concern for human rights is not hollow rhetoric by actively providing economic aid to Vietnam so as to remedy the suffering. U.S. "food politics" of the cold war should cease in the interest of humanity.

The forecast: Take the bus

Jack Gallagher

Outlook: Wednesdays in October are hazardous to your health. Last Wednesday, it snowed and someone called a bomb scare into one building on campus, or maybe into more than one building. Most of the classes stayed, but some walked out into the whiteness, looking for a more suitable place to have class.

Some of the seekers of higher education, however, did not catch up to their classmates who had found suitable refuge somewhere on the multi-acred campus. So they missed out, because of human and natural elements. Further, the previous Wednesday, Oct. 3, it had monsoned here, while it had tornadoed in Connecticut and killed some people there.

Conclusion: It will earthquake Oct. 17 and, "You don't need a Weatherman to know which way the wind blows."

Outlook: Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays are hazardous to your health if you are trying to catch a north-bound bus out of campus between 2:30 and 5:30 p.m. and between 9 p.m. and 11 p.m. those same days—which of course is every day of the week that you would want or have to take that bus or buses. The problem is, most bus drivers don't know that some people really do live in Crestview. So they let the Crestview people off by Watroba's Market, except when those people in fact want to go to the store to buy something—in which case the bus drivers make them get off at Crestview.

And, complicating the matter further, the people who live even further away from the unnatural metropolis don't like the people who live in Crestview because the latter always ring the bell after the bus driver has explicitly said, "This bus will not stop at Crestview."

But none of this is to say that anyone really likes or dislikes bus drivers or Crestview people, because it is only human nature after all.

Conclusion: People who live in Crestview should move or learn to throw rocks better than they do now, and bus drivers are a little strange because they always wave to each other when they don't even know each other.

Outlook: This column is going to be cut to shreds to make shirts with, eventually—in which case it will turn into a record that tells you to take life seriously—because the UMass Transit Service will need the space to keep its wheels rolling, though people who live in Crestview and other northern, farm-land regions of western Massachusetts don't like the system.

But the system is the solution and necessities are, after all, necessities, especially with the weather—which is going to worsen in geometric progression as the Wednesdays pile up.

Conclusion: Pay a quarter to buy The New York Times so that you can read Russell Baker while you wait for the bus and while you ride on that bus, too.

Outlook: The sky is falling.

Conclusion: Recite, "Little chicken, little chicken..." while watching John Quill.

Outlook: The Federal Reserve Bank Tuesday raised the prime interest one point to 14 percent.

Conclusion: Sell all your ITT stock and jump on the next plane to West Germany.

Outlook: Things look bleak, to understate the case.

Conclusion: Follow Woody Guthrie's advice: "Take it easy, but take it."

because boys naturally engage in more rough and tumble play, and girls in more nurturing or help offering behavior, according to a Harvard cross-cultural study by Edwards and collaborators.

These differences can be attributed to the home setting, where girls are more often assigned household and child care tasks that keep them close to home, than boys, who are allowed more freedom and consequently, more association with peers.

"The school attempts to minimize those sex differences which can inhibit social development," Edwards said. "Boys are given the opportunity to explore the role of fatherhood through doll play and other nurturing experiences. They join homemaking and clean-up activities. They freely exhibit their emotions in the classroom."

Girls role play as wild animals and super heroes and freely exhibit rough and tumble behavior.

"The open classroom setting gives them the freedom to get involved in or refrain from any activity. Children gain self-confidence when they can make their own choice, and because they aren't under pressure, they are comfortable enough with it to work at it until they have learned something beneficial," Edwards said.

The cooking experience is one of the most popular and important activities, and the boys enjoy it as much as the girls, according to Linda Enos, student teacher.

The stereotype of the woman cook abounds. Few fathers share the job at home, and on television and in books, cooking is one of the few things women are shown doing. But, cooking is a life skill that requires the knowledge of math, science, safety, language, hygiene, nutrition, and aesthetics, according to Barbara Sprung, author of Non-Sexist Education for Young Children.

Staff meeting

The Collegian staff will meet Tuesday, Oct. 16 in Campus Center Room 803 to discuss the rest of the publishing semester. All Collegian staffers should attend the meeting at 7:30 p.m.

The main topic of discussion will be the constitution and plans for the remainder of the semester. Departments may also be meeting at that time.

Correction

An article in yesterday's Collegian confused the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Board with commercial banks' prime interest rate. The discount rate is the rate the Fed charges its member banks on loans, while the prime interest rate is the rate charged by commercial banks to its best customers. Yesterday's Collegian reported that the Fed had raised the prime interest rate. What in fact happened was that commerical banks raised their prime rate.

Booters meet BU

The booters now find themselves in a must situation against Boston University in a Sunday game this weekend if NCAA tournament hopes are to remain unbroken.

BU (5-3-2) has had a mixed role as spoiler and sympathetic loser this year. Coach Ron Cervasio's team beat UCLA on the Nickerson Field astroturf 3-2 during the Bruin's eastern swing only to lose to Vermont in overtime 1-0 to virtually end their NCAA tournament ambitions. The Terriers, however, are still ranked the number eight team in New England.

JV game cancelled

The UMass junior varsity football team has announced that this afternoon's 2:00 p.m. game with Dartmouth College has been cancelled.

Staff meeting

There will be a mandatory sports staff meeting Monday night at 6:30 to decide the Budweiser Athlete of the Week. All beat reporters must attend and nominate a player from their respective sports.

Minutemen geared for showdown against BU

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

On October 13, 1978, the Boston University Terriers were 4-0, 2-0 in the Yankee Conference, and off to their best start in 20 years. On October 14, the UMass Minutemen rolled into Nickerson Field and devastated the Terriers 31-7. It was a loss BU never fully recovered from.

The Minutemen will try to make history repeat itself tomorrow, when the Terriers, 4-0, 2-0 in the Conference amd 3rd ranked in Division I-AA will invade Alumni Stadium to battle the Minutemen, 3-1, 1-0 in the Conference and 10th ranked in I-AA, in a 1:30 contest.

Back in late August, when most Yankee Conference coaches were predicting the Minutemen to repeat as Conference champs, BU coach Rick Taylor picked his Terriers to take home the beanpot in 1979.

Catch all the excitement of college football this Saturday when the Minutemen battle the Boston University Terriers for the Yankee Conference lead. Howie Sobolov and Tim Wasserman describe the action. The pre-game show with Jim Mullins is on at 1:00 and don't forget the halftime show with Fred Winer.

So far this season, BU has made their coach's prediction look pretty good. They have put together impressive wins over Maine, New Hampshire, Northeastern, and last week came from behind for a 14-10 win over Harvard. The Terriers are leading the Conference in scoring, and have given up the fewest points as well.

This week however, the Terriers are going up against a pretty good football team, one that has done what coach Bob Pickett said they would do before the season, get better and better with each game.

After the opening loss to Villanova, the Minutemen have played the kind of football everyone knew they could. In the last three games they have outscored their opponents 105-29, rolling up wins over Maine, Harvard, and North Carolina Central.

One key to the UMass surge has been quarterback Mike McEvilly who is leading the Yankee Conference in passing with 47 completions in 78 attempts for 652 yards. McEvilly was Co-Offensive player in the Conference last week following his strong performance over NCC.

Another key has been the strong development of the defense, which has given up only 29 points since Villanova.

Both the offense and defensive will have their work cut out for them tomorrow, because the Terriers have a number of weapons on both sides of the ball.

On offense, the Terriers boast the finest runner in the Conference in Nal Najarian, who has just run over everybody in his first four games. The senior tailback has trucked for 457 yards in 85 carries and is well on his way to another 1,000 season.

At quarterback, Jim Jenson has established himself as a potent threat. The 6'4, 210 lb. junior has completed 41 of 76 passes for 514 yards and five touchdowns, with only one interception.

Tight end Scott Phinny, flanker Neil Boron, and split end Bob Martinez are the leading receivers, all with nine catches.

"They have a very balanced offensive," said Pickett. "We have to play a sound defense. We cannot key on the run, we have to be ready for the pass."

On defense, BU has an experienced unit that has been stingy thus far, especially against the run. The front line is anchored by co-captains Sam Stepney, an All-New England defenseive end and tackle Tom Piezga, who had an excellent game against Harvard, and garnered Co-Defensive Player of week honors in the Yankee Conference.

The Terriers may have a problem on the line due to an injury to starting tackle Chris Lindstrom. BU will either use sophomore Jeff Kirsh at end, moving Frank Punal to tackle or move Neil McGrath from inside linebacker to end and use Rick Continelli at linebacker.

Stastically, the two teams match up evenly. On paper, it looks like it should be a very close, very exciting football game. Coach Pickett is expecting an excellent game and is hoping for a big crowd to get behind his team. "Games like this are what make football fun," said Pickett.

Bucs bounce back on Sanguillen single, 3-2

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

BALTIMORE —Pinchhitter Manny Sanguillen delivered a two-out, two-strike single during a continuing downpour in the ninth inning, scoring Ed Ott with the winning run last night as the Pittsburgh Pirates nipped the Baltimore Orioles 3-2 in the second game of the 1979 World Series.

The victory tied the best-ofseven series 1-1, with the teams moving to Pittsburgh for the next three contests, beginning Friday.

Sanguillen, the seldom-used third-string Pittsburgh catcher, won a battle of nerves with Baltimore reliever Don Stanhouse and drilled the decisive hit on another rainy, bone-chilling night in Baltimore.

Pinch-hitter Bill Robinson opened the ninth with a single to left against reliever Tippy Martinez. Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver immediately went to his bullpen for Stanhouse, a right-hander who saved 21 games this season.

The frizzy-haired pitcher made just one pitch to Bill Madlock when pinch-runner Matt Alexander took off for second. The speedster previously had been thrown out only once all year, but Orioles catcher Rick Dempsey gunned him down.

After Madlock flied out, Ott bounced a bad-hop single off the chest of Baltimore second baseman Billy Smith. Then, Phil Garner, goat of the Pirates' 5-4 opening-game defeat, worked out a walk on four pitches.

That brought up Sanguillen, one of the last survivors of Pittsburgh's 1971 World Champions. The 35-year-old catcher had batted only .230 this season, with only 17 hits and four runs batted in.

Stanhouse, working deliberately as a heavy mist fell on the already soaked Memorial Stadium field, worked the count to 1-2. Sanguillen, always a bad-ball hitter who has a reputation of swinging at almost anything, fouled off three pitches, then drilled his hit to right.

In happier days

Oh No. It's happening again.

I don't know what it is really, but when one gets to his final semester, something happens. Nostalgia grabs hold of you, and the next thing you know, the fond memories come pouring down like an early October snow storm.

This year's fall classic between Pittsburgh and Baltimore stirs memories of what I still consider my all time favorite memory from this place, the 1975 World Series.

The series itself was memorable, what with Luis' base running, Ed Armbrister's interfering, Carbo's heroics and Burton's classic curve ball, but it was the experience of taking in the series with 30,000 odd other Sox fanatics that made it so incredible.

Ah, 1975. Those were the good ole days. Gas was 55 cents a gallon, the drinking age was 18, the Duke was Guvnor, Gerry Ford was President and Oh my God, the Red Sox were in the World Series.

I was a scared little freshman way back then, living on the now infamous fourth floor of Pierpont, and taking good ole courses like Spanish 110, Rhetoric 100 and Physics for Poets. I was still just trying to get a handle on this place. After all, UMass was a big place, and I was still getting lost sometimes.

I watched the first two games of the series at home, and viewed the middle three in my room with friends. For the all-important sixth game, I decided to join in on the pandemonium in the hall's study lounge.

Pandemonium turned out to be an understatement, because the lounge was just a mob scene. There were people everywhere. I still don't know how they all fit in there. Getting in and out of the place was such a major undertaking, that if one was lucky enough to find a seat, he stayed in it for the duration.

On top of a desk n the front of the room was a funky old Zenith that had to be older than I was. It was the only tube around that picked up the NBC affiliate that night, and it just barely got it. If anyone walked right in front of the thing, the picture would vanish from sight, leaving grave doubts of whether it would ever return.

In the game's early going, the Sox built up a 3-0 lead on a Fred Lynn homer. Things looked good for Boston so the crowd started to unwind a little.

We had two kegs that night, and by the third inning, the beer was flowing freely. The little freshman was only 17 however, and being abnormally paranoid of Sgt. X, he decided to stick with his Welch's grape soda.

There was also lots and lots of that stuff that Bill Lee likes to put on his pancakes. The little freshman, who was quite inexperienced in these matters had never been to a "smoke-out" before. He still wishes he was never at this one. A contact high they called it. I thought I had been run over by a bus. My eyes are still red.

Anyway, five innings and four Jack Jones Chrysler commercials later, everyone finally returned to the proper dimension and realized that Cecil Cooper, Denny Doyle, Rico Petrocelli, Luis Tiant and Co. were in deep, dark trouble. The hometown boys were down 6-3. The beer was gone, the pot all smoked up. The crowd looked like it was at a wake.

In the bottom of the eighth, Bernie Carbo came up to pinch hit with two men on. (No, Zack, I don't remember who he pinch hit for, who the pitcher was, who was on base, who was on deck, or any of that bologna).

Anyway, when Bernardo's blast landed in the center field bleachers and Joe Garigibaldi yelled, "We're tied!" 40 people jumped up all at once and 80 fists were thrust skyward in unison. The little freshman happened to glance up at George Washington tower and noticed dozens of little silhouettes jumping up and down in the lounges of all 22 floors.

In the 12th, when Fisk hit that famous pole shot, all hell broke loose. Southwest just erupted. The silhouettes were up and dancing again, there was shouting, firecrackers and flaming rolls of toilet paper all over everywhere. The little freshman reflected on things for a second or two, and then knew for sure that this moment was one he would remember for a while.

Mass PIRG sponsors safe energy walk

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

Walking under grey skies that obscured the sun and brought biting winds, an estimated 50 persons walked 10 miles from Montague to Amherst to show support for safe energy sources and to raise funds for MassPIRG.

John Pepi, MassPIRG organizer, termed the event a success despite "a big number of no-shows.""The walkers definitely had a good time -- they really seemed interested in the speakers and exhibits we had on the route," Pepi said. He said the marchers who did appear had amassed pledges of "between $20 and $30 each." The marchers had solicited pledges earlier of at least $1 for every mile they walked.

The march concluded with an informational energy fair on the Amherst Town Common. The chilly marchers were welcomed by MassPIRG supporters and sponsors and then listened to speeches about alternative energy potential.

UMass Professor William Heronemus spoke on the impact of wind energy on the nation's future energy requirements. Heronemus outlined research UMass is doing on heating space and water with wind power while leaves swirled around him. He cited the Orchard Hill windmill as an example of efficient use of wind power and talked about the "visual pollution" problem windmills face in New England, where many residents have complained that they are unsightly.

Heronemus entertained the huddled marchers with some interesting vignettes about the environmental movement. He said the Sierra Club was once "a great promoter of the nuclear industry" because the club published pictures of coal smokestacks and the nuclear industry sold itself as being smokestack-free. The deception was realized when pictures of the first nuclear plant showed a conspicuous smokestack. Heronemus drew a laugh from the crowd when he compared a group in Vermont that opposes windmills to the proponents at Seabrook.

State Rep. Rick Roche, (D-Springfield), echoed a theme voiced earlier by Heronemus when he told of the conversion from hydroelectric to fuel-generated power. Roche pointed to small-scale hydroelectric projects as a way to bolster New England's industry and economic potential.

The marchers were also entertained by local musician Lorrie Wyatt, who elicited enthusiastic audience response to his anti-nuclear and folk songs.

Forty—eight hours later MS was the real winner

By MARK L. CURELOP

Out of 26 couples only 16 were left standing Sunday night at the end of a 48 hour dance marathon that raised a total of $10,280 for the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Money raised by the marathon, which was sponsored by the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, will benefit MS, a disease of the central nervous system usually affecting young adults in the prime of life. The dancers solicited pledges from people prior to the marathon to be paid for every hour they danced.

Judy Porter of Chicopee, a MS survivor, spoke to the dancers on Friday night when the marathon began. "I want to see the people who are helping us. Everyone in the marathon, thank you for helping. We are all human beings," she said.

Pure Prairie League performed their hit song "Amy" Friday night before the dancers and spectators who jammed the Student Union Ballroom.

We're here for the cause (of MS)," said Mike Reilly, spokesperson for the band. "We'll do anything to help. We're musicians, and like others, we'll donate our services," he said.

The dancers were allowed 15 minute breaks for every two hours of dancing. Meals were provided by local businesses and served by members of PIKE and volunteer members from the Greek system.

Carol Phillips, executive director of the Connecticut River Valley Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, said that the marathon "went very well."

"I'm a little disappointed in the people who attended just for the band (Pure Prairie League). I'm not sure if we got back what we gave them for 50 cents. Not just in financial terms, but in terms of support for their peers," she said. Spectators were charged 50 cents admission.

Students judged the dancers to make sure that they were moving at all times while they were on the floor. Others judged various contests with prizes from local merchants that took place to keep the dancers going, Phillips said.

"I'm really impressed with PIKE. No other fraternity could have pulled together and do this," said Michelle Conserva of Alpha Chi Omega, who was a judge during the marathon.

Dana Cohen and Stu Tobin chaired the event as PIKE's annual Community Service Project, with the help of the fraternity.

"A lot was taken out of the house and the brothers," said Howie Bass, PIKE president.

Group marches in D.C. for gay and lesbian rights

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Some 100,000 gay and lesbian persons and sympathizers marched from the National Art Gallery Mall to the Washington Monument yesterday to support federal civil rights legislation for homosexuals.

The demonstration included a contingent of about 75 UMass and Five-College students.

Called one of the "largest gay rights marches ever" by a group organizer, the march began on the mall in front of the capitol building and wound its way down Pennsylvania Avenue past the White House, ending with a rally in front of the Washington monument.

Gay and lesbian persons are going to be seen at the Democratic Convention and maybe even at the Republican Convention—Charlotte Bunch

The crowd was lent the support of several well known personalities including San Francisco City Supervisor Harry Britt, folk singers Megg Christian and Holly Near, Feminist Lesbian Charlotte Bunch, Poet Allen Ginsberg and NOW President Eleanor Smeal.

Bunch called upon the gathering to remain active when they return home. "They think they see a lot of us in the '70's; it's nothing compare to what they'll see in the 80's," Bunch said.

She said gay people will remain in the "forefront" of political activism in leadership roles as in the past but said they should stand up for their own rights. "They are going to see us at the Democratic Convention and maybe even at the Republican Convention," Bunch concluded.

A telegram was sent from activist couple Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden pledging a commitment to gay rights and calling for a release from the "shackles of oppression."

The Washington Park Security Patrol, the police group for the march and rally, reported no incidents of violence.

A counter demonstration was planned with anti-gay activist Anita Bryant but due to a prior commitment in Colorado, Bryant could not attend. Her ministry held a prayer service at Rayburn Office Building across from the demonstration.

Britt, referring to homosexual oppression in Iran said, "We have got to make sure that not one more gay fatality takes place in the streets of Tehran."

Britt replaced the late Harry Milk, who was murdered last year in San Francisco.

Britt led the demonstrators in a prayer for Milk.

According to leaders, the issues surrounding the demonstration are: the repeal of all anti-gay and lesbian laws, the passing of a comprehensive lesbian-gay rights bill in Congress, the issuance of a presidential order banning discrimination in the Federal sector, the end of discrimination in lesbian mother and gay father custody cases and the protection of gay youths from laws use to discriminate against them.

Labs reduce radioactive use

BOSTON(AP)— New England hospitals and research laboratories reportedly are cutting down on tests using radioactive materials since the closing of one of the nation's two nuclear waste disposal sites.

At Massachusetts General Hospital, an official said physicians have been "alerted" to the problem and asked to delay radioactive diagnostic tests whenever possible.

Harvard's director of univeristy health services, Dr. Zarren E. C. Wacker, has informed research scientists that no more radioactive wastes will be "accepted." And Murray Bolton, protection officer at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said researchers would be asked to begin limiting their use of radioactive materials today.

"The problem is that hospitals and laboratories have only limited space for storage of radioactive wastes from diagnosis or research," Bolton said yesterday. "They can't stockpile the waste forever."

'Jaws' attacks wrong car

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Burke Volunteer Fire Department was so proud of its new cutting tool for getting trapped persons out of auto wrecks that it decided to hold a demonstration.

As 40 people watche, two firemen wielded the $6,000 tool, ripping a door from a 1969 Buick parked near the fire station, pulling the steering wheel through a windshield and knocking the windows out.

Then the voice cried out: "Hey, what have you done to my car."

Bill Burris, president of the department in suburban Fairfax County, Va., admitted the firemen had gone after the wrong car. He said the department would pay for the loss. "It's just a mistake," Burris said, repeatedly. "It's just a mistake."

Ma. could handle recession

BOSTON(AP)— A recession next year would be less severe in Massachusetts than in most states, planners at the state Division of Employment Security believe, but preparations are underway to deal with increased claims for unemployment compensation.

The Massachusetts unemployment rate reached an annual average of 11.2 percent of the workforce in 1975, in the midst of the last recession. That recession, beginning in 1974 and the worst downturn in the economy since the Great Depression, was more severe in Massachusetts than in much of the nation.

While no one is predicting a recession equal to what occurred in 1974, DES officials are even more optimistic about the prospects for Massachusetts because of a shift in the state's industry since the mid-1970s.

U.S. grain fills China ship

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)— Port of San Francisco officials have toasted the captain and crew of the Zhi Hai, the first ship from the People's Republic of China to call on California ports since the United States resumed trade with the communist nation.

The 575-foot bulk carrier, with a red band and gold star of China on her funnel, received the last of a load of more than 26,000 metric tons of grain Friday.

Captain Chaw Tai-chang, Deputy Port Director Anthony Taormina and Li Chuan-kuei, the ship's political commisar, traded toasts aboard the ship with a portrait of the late Chinese Premier Mao-tse Tung in the background.

Carter ahead of Kennedy; expects Fla. delegate majority

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

MIAMI(AP)— With two large blocks of votes still to be counted, President Carter held a statewide lead yesterday over Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in Florida's Democratic Party caucuses and Carter backers claimed victory in the first balloting of the 1980 presidential campaign.

But while Carter, whose campaign was supported by the political power of the White House, seemed certain to emerge with a majority of the elected delegates, Kennedy supporters called the Massachusetts senator's showing "one of the greatest political upsets of the century."

"A win is a win is a win," was the reaction of Evan Dobelle, chair of the CarterMondale campaign committee.

Still to be tallied were ballots for 188 delegates in populous Dade County, which includes Miami, and for 60 delegates in Palm Beach County. Party officials said a final delegate count might not be available for several days.

The turnout in Dade, where it rained throughout the day, was disappointing and an unofficial poll of voters found a slim plurality saying they supported the Carter slate. The voter survey found 1,727 saying they backed Carter, 1,672 supporting Kennedy, 688 for the labor slate, and 187 uncommitted or refusing to answer.

But ballot challenges could affect the result in the fight for Dade's 188 delegates.

At stake was the chance to draw first blood in the anticipated fight between Carter and Kennedy for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

The 879 delegates elected Saturday will join 833 others, most of them appointed by officials backing the president, at a Democratic state convention in November at which the highlight will be a non-binding presidential preference poll. Florida's delegation to the Democratic National Convention will be chosen in a primary March 11.

Results from 64 of the state's 67 counties gave Carter 366 delegates, Kennedy 101, a slate supported by organized labor 19, and 27 uncommitted. In addition, Kennedy seemed certain to pick up the 116 delegates from Broward County where he made his strongest showing.

Kennedy avoided personal involvement in the Florida contest.

Reached in Louisville, Ky., on Saturday where he was campaigning for John Y. Brown, the Democratic nominee for governor, Kennedy did not hesitate to pick Carter to win in Florida.

"Clearly, he has all the horses down there," said the senator. "He's the odds-on favorite." Kennedy added he believes the first true test of the 1980 campaign will be the Iowa party caucuses in January.

Jody Powell, White House press secretary, was in Florida and said the president called to say he was "very pleased" with the results.

Chad Green dies at 3 in Mexico; if parents return, may face charges

Associated Press

BOSTON — Leukemia victim Chad Green is dead at the age of three, but the legal ramifications of his parents' fight to treat him with Laetrile are still to be settled.

The youngster died Friday evening in Tijuana, Mexico, where his parents took him to continue Laetrile treatments in defiance of a Massachusetts court order.

His parents, Gerald and Diana Green, were found in civil contempt of court early this year by Judge Guy Volterra in Plymouth Superior Court, and there was a later finding of probable cause of criminal contempt of court for flouting the court's authority.

Should the Greens return to Massachusetts, where Gerald's parents live, they would be taken before Volterra for sentencing on the civil contempt of court finding.

And they could be tried, before another judge, for criminal contempt if prosecutors decided to proceed with that action.

Legal experts said they doubted any criminal charges could be brought against the Greens in Massachusetts because of Chad's death. He died at his home in Mexico, and presumably any such charges would be up to Mexican authorities.

The cause of Chad's death was not announced, nor was there any official annoucement on an autopsy.

The Greens could not be located to comment on the death.

However, their lawyer, William L. Ginsberg of Atlanta, said in a telephone interview that he had asked the district attorney of Baja, Calif., "to have an autopsy performed in Mexico and he has agreed." His remark could not be confirmed immediately.

"I want the autopsy to be made by all parties that have a real interest in the matter so that the truth can come out as quickly as possible," Ginsberg said.

"I must emphasize that no cause of death has yet been established," he said. "All we know is that Chad is dead."

Ginsberg said he wanted U.S. cancer experts to be involved in the autopsy, saying "there is precedence for a medical team from the United States coming to Mexico."

TheBoston Globequoted Ginsberg as saying the Greens originally planned to bury Chad in Nebraska, where he was born Dec. 18, 1975, but that burial would be delayed pending an autopsy.

Dr. Ernesto Contreras, owner of the clinic where Chad was receiving treatments, was reported out of the country.

a clinic hematologist, Dr. Julio Edgar Selva, said that he last saw Chad a month ago and that the boy showed signs of anemia and low blood-platelet count that might have indicated a relapse was near.

Pure Prairie League inspires marathoners

By DIANE CLEHANE
Collegian Staff

After the first five and a half hours, volunteer marathon dancers were given a break from disco and treated with the live sounds of country-rock musicians Pure Prairie League.

Opening with a gospel tune, lead singer Craig Lee Fuller said at the Pi Kappa Alpha appearance. A 50-cent donation for admission went to the charity and the line to get in became so long that some had to be turned away.

Playing without microphones because of technical failure and with guitars borrowed from a fraternity member, the band played two bluegrass tunes and their hit song, "Aimee." The performance was limited to 40 minutes because a contract with Smith required the band to not make any other contract appearances that same night.

Yet, "when someone like Pure Prairie League comes to cheer you on, you know that someone cares," one of the dancers said. All the dancers interviewed agreed that the group's appearance was a morale booster.

After the group's performance good feelings seemed to linger even though dancers still had 42 hours to go. Those able to talk said Pure Prairie League's support made them already feel like winners.

Marathoners raise thousands for MS.

Amherst High graduates at UM for different reasons

By PAUL BANKS
Collegian Staff

Amid the student population here there are those who have lived in Amherst before coming to UMass who say they have a unique view of the campus because of this experience.

They are graduates from Amherst regional High School.

Of those high schools across the state which enroll students at UMass, ARHS is "among the top 10..perhaps third or fourth," reports Dierdre Kedesdy, director of Freshman Admissions.

While living in Amherst and attending ARHS, the students said they tended to view UMass as a separate community, for the most part distinct from their daily interacations. Although, for the past three years ARHS students have held their graduation exercises in the Fine Arts Center.

For the ARHS class of 1979 direct involvement with UMass began sooner. Their senior prom took place in the Campus Center Auditorium, and their party following graduation was held in the Blue Wall.

After graduation many ARHS students choose to attend UMass, Kedesdy said. This fall UMass accepted 121 applications for admission from ARHS and 71 students were enrolled. Last year 45 percent of the college bound seniors from ARHS enrolled at UMass, she said.

The reasons students from the local high school would prefer UMass were varied and included financial, convenience and opportunity, according to students interviewed.

Having become students at UMass, they say they are now a part of the UMass community. Students interviewed said their feelings toward the University have changed as well as their perspectives.

Some of them feel coming from town is an advantage, others see it as a disadvantage.

"UMass is a lot different from high school. In high school I knew other students in a more personal way. Here, even though they are the same people in the same town, it's not the same. When I run into someone I know, rarely do we have the chance to talk...I just kind of say 'hi' and am on my way," Sherry Collins a sophomore said.

Seabrook: On the bridge outside the barrier fence

By JOSEPH GANNON
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: Joseph Gannon took part in a protest at the Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant last week. The following is the first of a two part eyewitness account.

By 6 a.m. we had assembled in the marsh on a tiny island several hundred yards from the site. We stood in a circle, arms around each other grinning excitedly.

Here, on the north side, we could see some of the skeletal construction under way, with huge cranes sticking up in the sky like giant praying mantises.

We set off across the marsh tromping through mud that was up to our ankles. Our ingenious portable bridges of plywood and truck inner tubes led us effectively across Brown's River. It was our first victory.

Reporter's Notebook

After about an hour we reached the fence -- that sinister fence -- center of so much discussion and a symbol of what we were fighting. Big business believes they may build with what they please and all they need do is erect a fence to be protected. We were here to prove otherwise.

On the other side of the fence stood the cops and the guard, who were the state's contribution to the nuclear industry. Some of the people there felt it was necessary to establish rapport with the cops. With some of them it worked, but there were others who kept walking around looking mean and macho, slapping their clubs into the palm of their hands.

Our attempts to bring down the fence that day were few and half-hearted because we lacked organization. The spokespersons meetings were long on discussion and short on action. Around 3 p.m. it was decided that, in a show of solidarity, we would join hands and encircle as much of the site as possible, chanting and singing.

Back at our camp, just off the marsh, frustrated at the anti-climatic end of day one, I got a chance to look at the people I was with. Never had I felt so relaxed and comfortable with people that I had known for so short a time.

They are the holdouts from the "Looking out for #1 and Winning Through Intimidation" 70's. I shudder to think of a world without people like them, who refuse to give up their idealism to the god of bourgeois complacency. Even more, I shudder to think of what I might become, lured to the tar pits of the rat race, without them to remind me of the supreme priority of

Twyla Tharp dance group enchants and entertains

By WAYNE ROSENBERG and DOUG PAULDING
Collegian Staff

The Twyla Tharp Dance Foundation's performance at UMass this past weekend was a concert to be remembered.

The not-for-profit corporation boasted seven of its most talented members performing dances choreographed solely by Twyla Tharp. On Friday night the company's opening act entitled "Country Dances" turned the Fine Arts Center's near capacity crowd into a group of much delighted country hillbillies.

With only the barest semblance of the more traditional square dances, the modern dance company explored new dimensions of folk-dancing. Everyone turned out stunning performances. The Quick headsnaps coupled with a disjointed effect typically characterized Tharp's style.

Anything but your typical square dancers -- the company's casualness and confidence created a sense of excitement and joy that captivated every member of the audience.

The company's second act "The Fugue" featured all three male members of the dance troupe. Dressed in identical prep-school attire, the three danced exclusively to the sound of their own amplified footwork and mimicked each other's movements as if they were mirror images of each other. The dance's casual approach was coupled with amazingly complicated steps.

Some of the crowd were confused while others thought it to be a bit long, but all appreciated the dynamics involved.

The third piece was delightful. Entitled "Sue's Leg" and choreographed to a medley of Fats Walker tunes, which set the crowd foot tapping with several dazzling solo swing duets and a full tilt boogie. The medley consisted of four dancers dancing in groups of one to four at a time.

The shining light above all others was Shelley Washington's solo to "Ain't Misbehavin." Her performance of being a coy little girl one moment and a sly city-slicker the next earned a rowsing round of applause. During the entire performance the Twyla Tharp Dance Company never failed once to keep the audience totally enchanted and entertained.

Group seeks to increase hunger awareness here

By VICTORIA JONES
Collegian Staff

More people have died of starvation in the past five years than have been killed in all the wars, revolutions and murders in the past 150 years, according to officials from the Hunger Project.

The project is a non-profit organization that has chapters throughout the United States and 87 other countries and is now seeking UMass support. Their primary goal is to end starvation in 20 years.

Val Valentine, Hunger Project volunteer for the Amherst area, said the group tries to generate a world-wide commitment to end hunger in this century. The project does not feed people but supports more than 100 committees and organizations in the United States and around the world that deal directly with eliminating starvation.

The National Academy of Science and food experts say the world produces enough food to supply every human being on the planet with more than the amount needed for the proper diet. The project's function is to act as public relations and reduce apathy, so that starvation-ending tactics can be put to use.

At UMass, students have been approached on an individual basis and asked to fast on the 14th of each month. Eighty-seven percent of the Hunger Project's contributions go to furthering the program by paying for pamphlets, posters and booklets. And 13 percent is procured for office expenses and salaries. The average distribution for non-profit organizations is 75 percent charity and 25 percent office expenses and salaries.

Students interviewed after being approached by a Hunger Project volunteer admitted to being wary of such an organization. "This is the apathy we are trying to overcome," said Valentine later.

A group of Southwest dorm residents have agreed to fast on the 14th of each month and various volunteers are in the process of recruiting new members on campus, their only goal being to "spread the word", according to Valentine. The Project's theme is derived from Victor Hugo's; "All the forces in the world are not as powerful as an idea whose time has come."

There are four basic models for the solution to hunger, as determined by Dr. Roy Prosterman and the National Academy of Science. These methods which involve land development and family education, require money and a work force but they are effective, Prosterman said. Since World War II, 32 countries, with 40 percent of the world's population, have essentially solved their food problem so that hunger is no longer a basic issue, he said. The major problem, according to Prosterman, is the diversity of problems facing various countries—one solution will not work in every case.

Joan Holmes, manager of the Hunger Project, said the central issue in ending hunger is creating the context in which it will end. By the beginning of 1977, more than 250,000 people, in the U.S. and in 87 other countries, had expressed an intention to end hunger by 1997. In 15 months, hunger projects enrollments increased tenfold—from 25,000 in October 1977, to 250,000 by December 1978, she said.

'Six of One' is not worth the trouble

By KAREN ANGELINE
Collegian Staff

Rita Mae Brown's second novel, Six of One, reminds one of an inside joke; it's only funny to those involved. The plot and characters seem like a thinly veiled autobiography, and the novel is unpolished and unbelievable.

Book Review

Brown is best known for her book, Rubyfruit Jungle, a novel published by a private press which became a national bestseller through a cult following.

Brown's style is distracting. Her choices of colloquial expressions and character actions are "cutesy" and ridiculous, even if her intentions are partly fantasy. For example, 75-year-old Julia Ellen (Juts) has been saying, "liar, liar, pants on fire" and "piss on your teeth" since 1909. (The book is set in 1980.) Juts also wears hot pants, smokes dope, and turns cartwheels. Further, some of the narrative asides call more attention to Brown than to the book.

The idea of the book, which follows the relationships of a group of women through two world wars, labor struggles, prohibition, and growing old, could have been interesting. But the characters begin cliched and unconvincing, and never grow or develop.

Since the plot rests on their reactions to what happens around them, it becomes very predictable. Jut's mother, Cora, may have been intended to be an archetypal country woman -- the personification of female nature through changing times. But because she is limited to mechanical recitations of down-home maxims as the main evidence of her wit, wisdom, and intuition, Cora ends up about as timeless as a farmer's almanac.

Brown's characters contain insight only when they are in their 30's which she was when she wrote the book. Whether they be children or crazy old ladies, they all sound like 30-year-old "literary lesbians," to quote one of the book's main characters.

Occasionally, this same character asks to be "spared" from the writing of the other women. She also describes modern novels as "the suburbs of literature."

Altogether, the plot is not lacking in action. There are plenty of lively, carefully manipulated scenes, some of which are genuinely funny. However, many of them are about as original and clever as the depiction of the Southern aristocrat lady who defecates by the roadside in her purse.

Six of One might have been a clever, snappy book. Perhaps if Brown had narrowed down the number and scope of her ten or more major characters, the book would have fleshed out smoothly. As it is now, the flaws are so distracting that Six of One is hardly a pleasure to read.

Women's Studies program continues to grow

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

What started out in 1974 as a pilot program with 25 courses and nine enrolled students, the Women's Studies program has grown steadily into a course of study attracting more students on campus and around the nation, department officials say.

According to staff member Arlene Avakian, the Women's Studies program at UMass has gained a national reputation. "A growing number of women come to UMass specifically for Women's Studies," she said.

Currently there are 40 students majoring in Women's Studies, and 40 enrolled in the certificate program which is equal to a minor.

Most of the minors, or students in the certificate program, are traditional students, Avakian said. They live in dorms and are about 20-years-old. The majority of the majors, though, are very non-traditional. Most have been to other schools or have been out of school for a while; a few are in their fifties. Twenty-five percent have children and most of these are single parents, she said.

The Women's Studies program was officially approved in 1974 as a two-year experimental pilot program by the Faculty Senate on the recommendation of a Senate Committee on the Status of Women. After a one year extension, the program was approved for another five years, along with a new curriculum and status independent of Bachelors Degree in Independent Concentration (BDIC), Avakian said.

Students can now choose from 123 women's studies courses including Five-College and component courses—those for which a student must do extra work to get women's studies credit. Such courses as anthropology, Asian studies, economics, English, legal studies, rhetoric, journalism, German and more, have classes cross-listed with women's studies.

The women's studies program has three faculty members—Janice Raymond who teaches women's studies at UMass and Medical Ethics at Hampshire College; Susan Yarbrough who teaches Women's Studies and Legal Studies at UMass; and Mary Ruth Warner, who specializes in Folklore. Cathy Portugues is the program coordinator, and Avakian and Dale Melcher are women's studies staff members.

A total of about 20 people teach mainline women's studies courses on this campus but, when one includes cross-listed and component courses, the number is closer to 70, said Avakian.

According to her, women's studies majors are highly motivated people because they have to be. Before entering the program, a student must find a faculty advisor and develop a proposal for their course of study. The proposal must then be approved by the Student Affairs Committee if the Women's Studies Policy Board. Majors compose mid-semester, end of semester, and end of program reports.

"Because students create their own program, they gain skills in asserting themselves and putting things together to work for themselves. It's invaluable experience when trying to get a job," Avakian said.

The jobs open to women's studies graduates depend on the student's major concentrations, Avakian said. One woman combined women's studies with labor relations and is now an organizer for the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Another combined women's studies with Legal Studies and is now in law school, she said.

Last spring, the University graduated 25 women's studies majors, according to Avakian, and they now hold such jobs as counselors, teachers, social workers amd others, depending on their concentration.

While no males are enrolled in the major or certificate program, males from other departments do teach women's studies and some classes are as much as 20 percent male. Avakian said there also were two men majoring in the department but both have dropped out of school.

Student Steve Cafarella signed up for "Man and Woman in Literature," to fill a core requirement. "I had no idea it was cross-listed with women's studies," he said. "I was surprised on the first day of class when I found out and I was thinking about changing sections. I felt uncomfortable."

Cafarella said he now finds the course interesting and is not bothered by the fact that he is the only male in the course.

Fifty-two majors have graduated to date. The growth of the UMass women's studies program is proportional to the growth of women's studies programs nationwide, Avakian said. Twenty programs have grown to 300 across the country, she said, and as national interest increases, the UMass department will increase in size.

Weissman to Field: I said it

The continuing saga of RSO

Joel Weissman

Yes, Dean Field, I am Charli Bagli's anonymous student. Mr. Bagli's comments are not based on either ignorance or deceit but largely on an accurate account of a conversation that I had in your office with you on September 18 concerning the Student Government Association and the student judiciary. It was in the interests of informing students what was going on between its sutdent government and the administration that I shared our conversation with Charli Bagli.

On that day you went on to say what you have said a number of times before: that the Student Government Association and the student judiciary began its decline ten years ago when the SGA moved away from the issues that "students really care about, the bread and butter issues, parties and films, to political issues." From this statement we can infer that political issues caused the downfall of the effectiveness of the SGA.

We know about the past corruption in the SGA, too. We detest the corruption that has occurred, but, we will not lie down and let the administration use it as an excuse to take over what students have developed and built. We, the students, will clean up our own house. Clean up our house through tighter fiscal and budgetary controls, clean up our house through liquidation of our deficit on a two year system as decided with the Trustees, clean up our house through a strong and functional attorney general's office.

Are student empowerment issues political? Is giving students more input into their education political? Are students fighting for their rights as consumers political? This is what caused the downfall of the SGA? Others, I hope, would see these as the strengths of the SGA!

I'm sure you do support our efforts to fight tuition hikes. But is it out of your altruistic nature for students or concerns for the university administration itself? Is it true that the protective power-mongering internal politiking over at Whitmore makes the SGA look like a kindergarten class in comparison? Is it for this reason that you support splitting the SATF into scattered units? Not for reasons of fiscal responsibility but in the hopes that you will get to control some of the monies much the same way you control PSF monies (revenues from all of the pin ball machines) without any student input whatsoever?

We know about the past corruption in the SGA, too. We detest the corruption that has occurred, but, we will not lie down and let the administration use it as an excuse to take over what students have developed and built. We, the students, will clean up our own house. Clean up our house through tighter fiscal and budgetary controls, clean up our house throughliquidation of our deficit on a two year system as decided with the Trustees, clean up our house through a strong and functional attorney general's office. Clean up our house through the elimination of petty excesses and patronage. Once we surrender our autonomy, once we surrender our decision making powers, to you or any other administrator, we have lost our flexibility and a system of student services that was built for and by students.

Dean Field, I would be delighted to meet with you sometime. However, since you have made your intentions quite clear, it seems a little ridiculous. Later on in our conversation of September 18 you told me that you trust me and the current Speaker of the Senate, David Barenberg, about as far as you could throw us because we have taken a strong pro-student empowerment stand. We know from previous conversations that it has long been a dream of yours to dismantle the SGA system because that system circumvents your power.

Lastly I would like to apologize if any of your comments of our September 18 meeting, now public, have offended you.

Joel Weissman is a student senator

Demonstrated violent ideals

Jackson Katz

I know a lot of stuff has been written about the events at Seabrook this past weekend, but what I've got to say is really important, and, I don't think anyone has really said it yet.

I went up to Seabrook last weekend. I'm not a no-nuker, don't get me wrong. My real reason for going was to get some ideas from this occupation that the anti-solar people can use in their plans to occupy the sun late next month.

But I hadn't been up at the main gate for more than 10 minutes when I realized where I wanted to be more than anywhere else was on the other side of that fence, in a blue uniform, as an officer of the law.

I realized I was wasting my time fighting for one thing or another, that mostly all those causes are the same.

I should be fighting for my country, holding a club and carrying a gun proudly on my hip. I should be out fighting for truth, justice and the American way.

I've heard people criticize some of the things the police did up at Seabrook. But you can be sure that if they used tear gas against large crowds of people, or sprayed mace from a foot away at non-violent people, or beat people who were sitting down peacefully, they did so in the name of justice, and to protect our cherished ideals of freedom.

Yeah, sure, hundreds of thousands of people have demonstrated against nuclear power in the last few years, and the people of Seabrook did vote against building the plant four times.

But those people don't know what's good for them.

And sure, a lot of the cops looked like they were ready for war, and used excessive violence on the demonstrators. But you've got to understand, these guys love this country and it's people so much, they just get itchy to fight for it, and we haven't been involved in a major war in over eight years.

Oh, I know these demonstrators were Americans, not some militarily aggressive foreign power. And I've heard it said many times that they're just young citizens who feel they have to do this kind of thing to make things safe here in America for now, and generations to come.

But that's not true. They're just long-haired hippie types who don't appreciate this country and it's ideals. They're just ungrateful misfits.

Maybe this whole thing up at Seabrook was good after all. Maybe now these kids will realize they should just care about their own lives and let the government take care of this kind of thing.

It handles everything else so well.

And this thing was good for something else. It gave the anti-solar people a good idea what to expect when they try to occupy the sun. I'm sure the sun will be even more violent to the people who try to occupy it than the police were here at Seabrook.

"But it's all right if the sun uses excessive violence," a no-nuker told me. I wondered why.

"Because the sun isn't human."

I'm still trying to figure out what he meant by that.

Jackson Katz is a Collegian commentator.

Seabrook occupiers occupied with valuable economic assets

Arvid Muller

Much has been said about the Seabrook occupation, but when the dust has settled it will be clear that the occupation was a success. Not only for those who demonstrated and learned valuable lessons was it a success, bit it also lowered unemployment, stimulated the economy and boosted morale.

Let's face it, occupations are good for the economy. Locally, Seabrook and New England did very well indeed. Dunkin' Donuts, Friendly's and McDonald's had to hire extra people to handle the "terrorist" rush. Hardware stores everywhere had rapid turnovers on bolt cutters and crowbars while the camping stores did brisk business selling tents, sleeping bags, and rain ponchos. Army surplus stores couldn't keep up with the demand for wool socks and sweaters.

Morale was boosted as State Troopers and National Guardsmen were spared another boring weekend writing speeding tickets and watching football games, instead were able to participate in some good clean fun busting heads. Reporters and photographers were allowed to experience the joys of MACE in the face, breaking up what would've surely been a monotonous weekend covering social functions.

The occupation had it's effect on national industries as well. The manufacturers of MACE experienced a boom that they've been longing for since the days of the anti-war protests. Not only were tear gas manufacturers able to pay out dividends, the gas mask producers were equally well off. (One hand washes the other.)

All in all it seems that what America needs is more occupations. I will be presenting a bill, to Jimmy Carter himself, proposing a committee to look into the possibility of having government sponsored occupations when needed to boost the economy. Together we can get ourselves out of the recession. Meanwhile I'll not be sitting idle. I intend to do my part for America by occupying the Schlitz brewery next weekend, all interested participants are welcome.

Law & Order

System not cracked up to par

Jim Moran

"The policeman is your friend." These marvelous words of wisdom are implanted in the minds of many impressionable first and second graders in schools throughout the nation each year. So it's little wonder that many take them to heart, when forced to interact with the "soldiers of social stability," without thinking in the interrogative in relation to the problem of crime in our culture.

I try very hard to believe what I have been taught, but sometimes it is very hard, like when:

—The Federal Narcotics Bureau was found funding syndicate operations in Detroit in 1971, promoting the drug addiction problem for the sake of preserving their own parasitic bureaucracy. After all, if the drug addiction rate is low, there is not much need for a Federal Narcotics Bureau, now is there?

—The Waltham, Massachusetts Police Department investigated a 1973 jewelry store robbery, and some of the stolen merchandise wound up adorning the body of police officer's wife rather than being impounded and returned to the owner. The investigation was played down.

—In 1976, a year when crime increased by ony one percent nationally, and when violent crimes were down by four percent, the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports reveals that arrests of males and females for the victimless crimes of public drunkeness, gambling, drug possession, illegal alcohol consumption, prostitution and commercialized vice, and vagrancy were up in three out of these six categories. Arrests for male prostitution were up 27.6 percent and females arrested for gambling, the rate was up 40.4 percent. We can see where the priorities are -- the little things that matter most.

From personal experience, I have found that policemen are not the nicest people on the face of the earth. Two of my friends had the unfortunate pleasure of dealing with the sexual "prowness" of police officers. One, a teenage girl in my neighborhood, was told she would not be brought in for drug possession if only she would "go for a ride" with the nice policeman. She refused and had to go to court. A few years later, our nice policeman was suspended from the force when he tried to rape another teenage girl. Another woman I know was actually raped by a policeman. Of course, sometimes even the "naughty boys in blue" get what's coming to them. This gal, while being attacked, put her arms around her wonderful agressor and made off with over a hundred dollars and his wallet. Now how would that man have looked if he reported his wallet stolen and his wife and family and friends found out? You call it immoral, and I call it revenge.

For my own part, I have had the charming pleasure of dealing with law enforcement agents on several occasions. In the summer of 1978, I was stopped on six occasions by police in squad cars and on foot patrol. Twice I was stopped in one evening. Only in one instance was I really doing anything wrong. But I needed some money, and it was, after all, in the tradition of performing the world's oldest profession and public service. This past summer, my batting average was a little better -- only three times did police stop me. One overriding factor guided all my experiences -- I looked "suspicious." On nearly every occasion I was asked to produce some identification.

On June 25, 1979, the Supreme Court ruled, in the case of Brown vs. Texas, that a suspect may refuse to offer identification to a police officer if the officer cannot show probable evidence of the suspect's involvement in a crime. Chief Justice Warren Burger delivered the Court's opinion that, "The application of Texas Penal Code Ann. 38.02 ... violated the Fourth Amendment because the officers lacked any reasonable suspicion to believe appellant was engaged or had engaged in criminal conduct." The Court reversed that state's conviction. Burger added, "Whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has 'seized' that person and the Fourth Amendment requires that the seizure be 'reasonable.' "

The point is, you don't have to let yourself be harassed by the police. You should be mindful of your Constitutional rights, and specifically, as they relate to the First, Fourth, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. If you are fortunate to know them when you are confronted by police, you might change the tune to "I Fought the Law and I Won."

I have to wonder about government officials when they influence death penalty laws which give stricter sentences to those found guilty of killing a police officer. Police, at least, have weapons to protect themselves. They are, in a sense, better prepared to protect their personages than the average citizen. That's why I can't support gun control legislation, which would disarm the general public. God forbid we should be placed in situation where only the police and military would have guns. In a sad, almost primitive sense, the right of the people to keep and bear arms may be our only defense against an ever-increasing trend towards control of the individual.

So every time we support measures based on our fear of injuries to our bodies and our properties, we should think a little bit about what we will have to give up to get more security.

As social activist Tom Hayden once said, "Fascism will come to America not through force, but through the compromise of good people."

Funnies aren't funny; they 'suck'

To the Editor

I have a few comments about your comics section. First, I would like to praise the fine work done by Mr. Lafler in Aluminum Foil. I look forward to reading this strip daily. It's the only thing that makes me bother to pick up the Collegian. As for the other comics (excluding Doonesbury*), well frankly, they suck. They look as if they were done by 5th graders. They show no originality and lack, if any, humor or entertainment. Continuous jokes about the library falling apart may seem funny at first but soon they become as exciting as watching paint dry. I suggest you give these so-called cartoonists their walking papers and let some new artists show what they have to offer and maybe some students will keep their* Collegian instead of cluttering up the D.C. with them.

Mr. Baron: you've done it again

To the Editor

On Oct 11th we were quite amused to read Ephraim Baron's insipid judgements on a subject he obviously knows nothing about, namely, homosexuality. It is reassuring to find that there still exists a bastion of blatant homophobia in our "socially conscious" community. Faced with such dogmatic ignorance, we realize the importance of such organizations as The People's Gay Alliance and The Lesbian Union enlightening our fellow students. One of the most important services we provide is that of education, yet, one wonders what happens to the Ephraim Barons of the world, graduating with a traditional "education", but remaining woefully ignorant about the culturally diverse world around them.

We question your preoccupation with sex, and further state that anyone less bigoted would soon realize that there is much more to our lifestyles. We have a heritage as rich and varied as any other cultural group, one which includes such well-known individuals as; Shakespeare, Amelia Earhart, Michelangelo, Gertrude Stein, and many, many others.

We sincerely hope the childish prattlings of Mr. Baron never come under any serious consideration. As was previously demonstrated by his letters of last semester, Poor Ephraim knows not of what he speaks!

Mr. Baron: again & again &...

To the Editor

I am writing this in reply to a letter to the editor published Thursday, October 11, 1979 written by Ephraim Baron. It seems to me that Mr. Baron has been raised in a socially inert atmosphere and is intolerant of anyones views but his own. By his statement "what is wrong with morals" he has failed to see that many gay members of society have very high morals, and as a whole, gay society and its members tend to be relatively conservative and wish only to live their lives in peace, without physical or verbal harassment. We do not try to infringe on the rights of other people, straight or gay, and gay people are as hard working, moral, and family oriented as any straight person, sometimes even more so.

I would like to state that I found Jim Moran's article very informative and look forward to more articles to come. As for Mr. Baron, I would hope that he would refrain from writing overtly homophobic articles, hoping to get even with those gays who have and can humiliate him. There are those of us who take a deep, personal insult from such trash.

Boston water supply very leaky business

To the Editor

In Tuesday's Collegian an article "Water supply threatened says study on N. East pipes" notes that a substantial amount of leakage is occuring from Boston's water supply system. A 1975 Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) Water Supply Usage Study found that approximately 76 million gallons per day (MGD) is lost from the distribution systems used by MDC communities in Eastern Massachusetts. This loss represents 25% of the water supplied by the MDC, and yet, the MDC is trying to obtain approval for a diversion of Connecticut River water totalling an average of 72 MGD. AN aqueduct would be built to transfer water via the Northfield hydroelectric facility to Quabbin Reservoir, a part of the MDC water supply system.

Successful rehabilitation programs have been completed in Arlington and Boston. A leak repair program in Arlington has saved over 600 million gallons and $145,000 a year. A Boston Water and Sewer Commission repair program is now saving the city of Boston 9 MGD. The benefits of rehabilitation in water, money, and energy (leakage increases energy required to maintain pipe pressure) savings justify the costs of repair.

MassPIRG is opposed to diversion because of the availability of alternatives and contingent environmental impacts. PIRG has published a variety of fact sheets on the diversion including one on the rehabilitation of pipes. A MassPIRG Committee on the Connecticut River is planning projects on the diversion this semester.

There are technical and financial obstacles that need to be addressed before all the distribution systems of MDC communities can be repaired. A bill in the State Senate, if passed, will allocate funds for rehabilitation, but federal monies will be needed. The leakage probelm should be dealt with before approval of any diversion form the Connecticut River which is a valuable resource to the valley through which it flows.

Women to march against pornography

To the Editor

On October 20, 1979 Women from across the country will converge on Times Square in New York City to protest pornography. We speak out against pornography because it exploits and encourages violence against women. Pornography is not a harmless outlet for sexual fantansies. It is fascistic misogynist propaganda that attempts to justify violence against women. Pornography is explicitly anti-female propaganda. It reinforces fallacies of female masochism. Pornography images of women reinforce the notion that females enjoy if not actually solicit sexual violence. Our aim is not to put forth repressive legislation concerning displays of erotica or nudity, rather we seek to change the legal definition of obscenity to focus on violence, not sex.

We do not believe that it is anyone's constitutional right to degrade Womankind with brutal images of rape, battering, and murder. This march is a call to action, in an effort to protest all violent media images of women, be they in advertising, films or album covers.

We urge all people to join with us on October 20. Buses will leave UMass on Saturday morning at 8:30 a.m. and return at 9:00 that night. The price for a round trip ticket is $7.50. Sign up for a ticket on the Concourse at the table for MARCH AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY.

Buddy-up for safety pure practicality

To the Editor:

In the past few weeks, there's been a great deal of discussion in the Collegian about the lack of safety for women on campus, especially at night. I have found myself coming across campus late at night and wondering if I too would make it to the bus stop. It came to me one night as I walked down the road in Sunderland that I feel no fear once away from campus; the fear associated with city streets is the same as the one on UMass campus. It's stranger still when one stops to think this campus is not even within a city, but is rather surrounded by country and fields!!

I was at a university in England last year, two miles from the center of a city larger than Boston. Never once was I afraid to cross campus or walk home alone in the dark. But then again, there was a stark difference there; whenever I was leaving the library, a meeting, or a late class, someone [often male, but not always] usually asked where I was headed and would I like company. It was such a pleasant chock to me to hear such genuine consideration. Yet later when I was home safely, it occurred to me that it was also a case of pure practicality.

Perhaps we could initiate this kind of consideration here, simply by speaking to the man or woman leaving the same place as you are. Some may see it as a foolish rejuvenation of the buddy-system enforced back in the grammar school days; it seems more foolish to ignore the protection we can give to one another.

Students sue QR Disco for human, gay rights

By CATHY CLABBY and MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Bruce Goodchild and Byron Canney, both seniors at UMass, consider the anti-discrimination suit they are bringing against the QR Disco in Hadley more than a test case for gay rights, they said -- It is a case for the protection of human rights.

"This case is important because it challenges some basic behavior patterns of male-male relationships which are typically characterized by distance and are maintained and enforced by taboos dictating that close interaction be labelled homosexual," Canney said. "This is not a personal vendetta...it is a human rights case," he said.

On April 4, 1979 approximately 50 men and women attended the QR Disco to support men's right to dance with each other. "We wanted to go dancing," said Canney. "We figured they needed business and we needed a place...it was an economic exchange." The men were met with hostility and physical abuse, said Canney.

"We came in and started dancing," said Canney. Four men who were standing around the edge of the dance floor moved onto the floor and began to push and shove, said Canney. According to Goodchild, one man took his beer and sprayed it into the faces of the dancers. Canney and Goodchild said it is not known exactly how many people participated in the harassment or whether the aggresors attended the QR Disco for that purpose alone.

"All the aggressors appeared to know each other and be friends. It appeared they intended to get us to fight back," said Canney.

Canney and Goodchild said they suspect the assault was too large and orderly to be spontaneous and suspect the men involved and the management were in collusion. "I saw them three or four times go into the back and talk with Hazel Cunningham, assistant manager of the disco," said Goodchild. "A little group would follow her into the back room...I saw them talk to her."

"There is no truth to that," said Cunningham when contacted. "I'll have you know that I hired a cop for $30 to protect them."

According to those involved, the police were called in twice that night. Canney said when he attempted to call the police after their first visit he was met at a public phone by Cunningham who prevented him from using it. Jack A. Delmond, who witnessed this event, went to a nearby ice cream store and made the second call.

Charges of assault and battery were brought against two of the men who participated in the harassment, according to Canney and Goodchild. Canney said "We decided to take it to a higher court and use discrimination in a civil suit which would include everyone."

Canney and Goodchild are now pursuing their case. They are charging the QR Disco with sex discrimination and permitting other customers to asault them.

"Somebody has got to say something," said Goodchild. "This kind of thing is going to happen again and again."

"The courts are the only way," said Canney. "We have to try to change laws so that they protect and support human rights. I hope that his suit will cause a lot of men to think creatively, to isolate the stereo-types and myths that effectively prevent men from being with each other in nurturing ways."

moralism and life. As we sat around our fire, drying our shoes and cooking supper, I felt safe and strong with these people.

Sunday came early, around 3 a.m., it is not bad in the woods though, because the switch from sleep to consciousness is quick. No stumbling down the hallway, brain on automatic pilot, to the shower which will finally kick the brain into gear.

After breakfast the call came to haul the bridges back out to the river. The tide was low and the river only a few feet deep, so the banks were eight to 10 feet high.

We started to lay the bridges across when two police boats started coming up the river. People began throwing debris into the water to stop the boats, and those of us who had dragged the bridges out now stood on them, in hopes of using our bodies to keep the boats from ramming them.

People suddenly began appearing on the far side of the bank, a look of fear on their faces. The cops had come out from behind the fence and were herding people to the edge of the river. They forced them down the bank and across our bridge. Meanwhile, those of us standing on the bridges were trying to stop the cops in the boats from slashing the inner tubes which held it afloat. We climbed into the water and stood in front of the boats. The cry went up, "Mace! Mace!," and like a fool I looked up at the cops to see what they were doing. A face full of Mace and I knew. Even with the Mace we stayed in the water and on the bridge until everyone was across. Then we cut the bridge loose from the other side and hauled it back up with us.

Our bridge was damaged but we still had it. We had stood up to the cops, taken the Mace, and kept our bridge. In the face of our sheep-like behavior the day before, this was quite a victory. It is strange how symbols, like flags or bridges, all through history have rallied people to do great things.

The police now stood on the opposite side of the river from us. When the cops threw over a gas grenade someone picked it up and threw it back. This act of defiance caught the cops off guard and the joy of watching them fumbling to get their helmets off and their gas masks on was well worth the irritation the gas was causing. After that my spirits were soaring. I felt like an Indian brave who had just counted his first coup.

Word soon came that everyone was to go to the south side and that a coordinated plan was being drawn up. Organization, hallelujah. My affinity group was packed and on our way in a few minutes.

The stickwomen remained undefeated by downing Bridgewater State University by a score of 2-1 on Saturday. (Staff photo by Ben Marsden).

Stickers still unbeaten

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team continued its undefeated season (7-0) by defeating Bridgewater University 2-1 last Saturday at NOPE.

The stickwomen played the game on the lower practice field at NOPE (due to the rain and snow of last week) and played a defensive brand of field hockey leading to a 2-0 at the half. The team took 21 shots during the game, including 16 penalty shots against the over-matched Bridgewater team. Goalie Karen Stifter lost her shutout late in the second half.

Julie McHugh scored the stickwomen's first goal of the game (unassisted) at the 23 mark of the first half. Laurel Walsh continued her fine play this season by upping the score to 2-0 UMass at the 27.30 minute mark off a tip in from All-American Judy Strong. The wet conditions obviously affected Coach Pam Hixon's team (adjusting to a new man-to-man defense) and the half ran out with the sixth ranked (nationally) Minutewomen leading by a relatively comfortable score of 2-0.

The defensive struggle continued into the second half (the teams play thirty-five minute halves) and Bridgewater made the score "respectable" on an unassisted goal by Lisa Vallencourt late in the second half at the 26 minute mark.

The Minutewomen travel to play a strong Southern Connecticut team tomorrow at 3 p.m. The big game looms ahead this Wednesday when they face the third ranked and undefeated UConn Huskies. The UConn game (rained out last Tuesday) and the snowed out match last Wednesday with Yale postponed to November represent two very tough games for the UMass field hockey team.

Minutewomen post win over Cortland St. booters

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

After suffering their first loss as a varsity team last week, the UMass women's soccer team came back with a 6-2 victory over previously undefeated Cortland State last Saturday on the NOPE fields.

Cortland was fast; the field was slow and spongy, getting worse with the incessant running of both squads. From the start, the Minutewomen kept the ball away from Cortland, pursuing when the ball was free, and intercepting passes left and right.

Both teams had several opportunities to score in the early going, but the mud and stingy defenses kept the score at zero, until Angie Caouette booted one up the middle for UMass. The Minutewomen had the lead until 45 seconds later when Cortland blitzed the UMass defense and scored at 13:15 of the first half. Margie Anderson gave UMass the lead again with a corner shot at 15:15, courtesy of a Angie Caouette feed from the side. The two teams slid and slipped throughout the rest of the half, with no more scoring.

The second half scoring was intermittent because of worsening field conditions; both teams became almost undistinquishable from each other with mud and sod. The next score came at 23:56, a UMass goal by Natalie Prosser. Cortland State tried to rally, scoring one minute later when they took advantage of several UMass slips to steal the ball and head upfield; they shot past UMass netminder Kelly Tuller, who stopped 21 of Cortland State's 24 shots throughout the game. Margie Anderson concluded the scoring with an unassisted tally at 32:45.

UMass coach Arnie Morse was pleased with the win, saying, "The team did what they had to do."

Kickers fall to BU

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - Capitalizing on the inexperience of UMass on astroturf, the Boston University Terriers scored twice in the first half to down the Minutemen here yesterday, inflicting a crushing blow to UMass' NCAA tournament hopes.

Mixing aggressive ball hawking with a belligerent defense that halted UMass from getting open positions in front of the goal on the narrow Nickerson Field, the Terriers (7-3-2) got revenge for their overtime loss to UMass in the final game of last season's ECAC Northeast Regional Championship.

With two losses against Yankee Conference teams, the Minutemen, (3-2-2) could find themselves without post season glories

Women spikers defeat MIT

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team of UMass continued its nomadic journey last Saturday with a stop at MIT in Boston. UMass left winning a best three-out-of-five match, 15-10, 15-7, 9-15, 15-13.

The Mass. Institute of Technology team appeared ready to take on the struggling Minutewomen; MIT gave UMass a hard time at the net with good blocking and spiking.

However, UMass' passing and overall defense, led by Donna Sasso, saved the Minutewomen from a possible loss of momentum and the match.

"MIT was 'up' for us," said UMass coach Elaine Marasco, "Although their offense wasn't that good, we still had probelms timing our blocks to their spiking. That's how we lost the third

Women harriers win easily

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Despite slow conditions on a muddy Boyden Field, the women's cross-country team easily defeated both URI, 23-54, and St. Johns, 23-61, Saturday at 2:30 p.m. "Most of the team ran 10-20 seconds better than at Tuesday's meet (against UConn). They're learning a lot from each race and are gaining experience," acting Coach Ken O'Brien said.

In her first race on the new 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course, UMass sophomore Judy McCrone set a new course record of 18:02. McCrone, who led the entire race, won with a 60 yard lead over second place Patty Douglas of URI. "I felt tight. If there had been more people closer to me in the race it would have been better," McCrone said.

Second and third for the Minutewomen were sophomores Cathy Petrick and Julie Burke. Both Petirck, third overall, and Burke, fifth overall, improved their previous best times on the home course by at least 15 seconds. "We've got three people who can run 18:30 or better now, and that should really help us in the New Englands," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said. Linda Welzel, eighth, Robyn Dally, ninth, and Barb Callanan, tenth provided the depth to secure the Minutewomen's victory.

The meet was delayed from 1:00 p.m. until 2:30 p.m. due to a breakdown of URI's van. "I think the problem on the road took the edge off of our competitive spirit. Patty Douglas ran well but the rest of our team looked tight," URI coach Lauren Anderson said.

The Minutewomen's next meet will be the New Englands held at UVM on October 20. "The New Englands should be interesting. There will be seven teams there -- any of which would win. UVM and Harvard should be the favorites," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said. Pfitzinger, who placed second at the Cod Fish Bowl race in Boston on Saturday, was unable to coach Saturday's meet. Men's cross-country coach Ken O'Brien took over coaching duties for Pfitzinger at the meet.

for what has been an up and down season.

What little edge UMass did have, their passing game was stifled by the artificial surface at B.U. The ball tends to skid more than on a natural turf, and the Minutemen had trouble adjusting, playing balls too close to their bounce.

At 10:45, the Terriers got all they needed when Junior Paul Fisher flicked a shot above the diving body of UMass goalie Mark Marilla that hit the crossbar and bounced into the net. At 31:30, B.U. scored again when a seemingly senseless break of players from an indirect kick set-up put Terrier John Primiano one-on-one with Marilla from 10 yards out. Primiano's shot beat Marilla to his right while several UMass players watched helplessly from their defensive wall.

game. We decided to adjust our defense away from the net and more to our midcourt, which is usually our weak area. We got some good overall playing from Brenda Simmons and excellent defense from Donna."

"I guess our problem stems from our schedule. We haven't played at home since September 25, and we don't play at home until October 27. Playing away all the time may be wearing us down somewhat, and problems with our play—timing our blocks, some bad serving—are coming up.

Matlack, Foli key Bucs victory over O's

Third baseman Bill Madlock ripped four hits to help keep his Pittsburgh Pirates team alive in the World Series. The Bucs trail the Orioles three games to two. (AP Laserphoto)

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH(AP)— Bill Madlock ripped four hits and Tim Foli drove in three runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates, battling to stay alive, defeated the Baltimore Orioles 7-1 yesterday in Game Five of the 1979 World Series.

The victory left the Pirates still trailing the best-of-seven Series 3-2 but forced the teams back to Baltimore for a sixth game tomorrow night. Game Seven, if needed, would be played Wednesday night.

The Pirates had hoped to start Bert Blyleven in Game Six, but that plan was changed when Manager Chuck Tanner brought him out of the bullpen Sunday for his first relief appearance since 1972. Blyleven allowed three hits over the final four innings to complete a sixhitter. Jim Rooker had pitched the first five innings and left the game trailing 1-0.

The Pirates came up with two-run innings in the sixth and seventh to turn the game around. The catalysts in both rallies were the slap-hitting Foli and slugger Dave Parker.

Then Pittsburgh sealed the victory with a three-run eighth built around Madlock's fourth single of the game and a baseloaded, two-out two-run single by Foli.

Mike Flanagan, winner of Game One in this Series, had the Pirates shut out over the first five innings and was leading 1-0 on a run the Orioles scratched off Rooker in the fifth.

Foli opened the Pittsburgh sixth with a walk on a 3-1 pitch. Parker, who had struck out in each of his first two at-bats Sunday, followed with a single to center.

With the Three Rivers Stadium crowd of 50,920 chanting "Let's Go Bucs!" Tanner had cleanup batter Bill Robinson bunt the runners along. It was an interesting strategy move because earlier in the Series Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver had suggested that bunting might not be such a good idea because it means your team is playing for a single run. But the Pirates got two this time.

Willie Stargell lifted one of his patented rainbow fly balls to center field. Al Bumbry settled under it easily but Foli scored after the catch, tying the game 1-1. Parker moved to third on the play and came home a moment later when Madlock muscled his third of four singles in the game — this one into center field.

With the Pirates in front, Baltimore tried to play catch-up baseball — an Orioles specialty all season. But the Bucs weren't yielding.

After Blyleven retired the first two hitters in the seventh, catcher Rick Dempsey hustled a routine hit into a double.

Now Weaver went to his bench, which has been so successful throughout the Series. Pat Kelly was sent up to bat for Flanagan and Blyleven responded by striking him out on a 2-2 pitch.

Quickly, the Bucs went about the work of adding to their lead in the seventh. Garner opened with a bouncer to shortstop that took a huge hop off the artificial surface infield and went for a single.

Blyleven tried to sacrifice, but forced Garner at second. Then shortstop Kiko Garcia made a brilliant stop on Omar Moreno's shot up the middle and turned it into another force play.

Bert Blyleven, making a rare relief appearance, pitched the Pirates to a 7-1 rout of the Baltimore Orioles. Blyleven came into the game replacing starter Jim Rooker. (AP Laserphoto)

Now Moreno began a cat-andmouse game with relief pitcher Tim Stoddard, who was obviously concerned about the fleet Pirate's speed. Stoddard threw over to first base three times while working to Foli. The fourth throw, however, got away and Moreno reached second on the pitcher's error.

That was the break the Pirates needed. Foli rifled the next pitch up the gap in rightcenter field, scoring Moreno to make it 3-1. Left-hander Tippy Martinez relieved for Baltimore and Parker upset that strategy with a double for another Pirates run.

Pittsburgh added to its cushion in the eighth inning after Stargell and Madlock opened with singles. It was Madlock's fourth hit of the game, making him the third player in this Series to tie that single-game record and the 39th in the 76-year history of the Series to do it.

After Steve Nicosia fouled out, Garner drilled an RBI single to left. It was Garner's second hit of the game and ninth of the Series, and kept his batting average at .500 for five games.

Blyleven bunted the runners up and Moreno got an intentional walk, loading the bases. That brought up Foli and, with the crowd chanting his name, he bounced a single up the middle to drive in two more runs and turn the game into a rout.

The game began on a somber note with a moment of silence in memory of two members of the Pittsburgh family who died over the weekend. Ann Tanner, mother of Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner, died Sunday morning at age 70. Edgar Speer, a director of the club and former board chairman of United States Steel, died Saturday.

It ended in a burst of fireworks as hundreds of fans flocked over the field, celebrating the victory. The fans milled around, jumping and cheering as the loudspeaker system pumped out the team's theme song, "We Are Family."

Pirates stay alive with 7-1 rout; story p. 15

Minutemen topple Terriers; take over top spot in YanCon

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The Umass Minuteman football team played it's best all-around game of the year Saturday, combining a fired-up offensive line with a super defensive effort to knock BU from the ranks of the unbeaten and assume first place in the Yankee Conference with a convincing 20-6 win at Alumni Stadium.

"We simply dominated the whole football game." said an elated coach Bob Pickett after the game. "Our football team can stand as tall as anyone in New England." said Pickett,
"They're young and they are playing excellent football. I just hope somebody finally notices it."

If the crowd of 11,000 on hand to witness the game was paying close attention, they would have noticed that UMass dominated every aspect of the game and just outplayed the Terriers, 3rd ranked in Division I-AA prior to the game.

The defense, led by the brothers DiTomasso and a hard hitting secondary stifled the Terriers and held Mal Najarian, "the BU Express" to only 27 yards, by far the fewest of his career.

The running game came back to life Saturday, aided by a fired-up offensive line that was blowing holes in the BU line you could drive a truck through. Cliff Pedrow led all rushers with 87 yards and was awarded the game ball.

Mike McEvilly, the leading passer in the Yankee Conference had another good game, completing 10 of 13 passes for 122 yards. McEvilly used the pass effectively to set up the two touchdowns.

The Minutemen opened the game with a bit of unusual strategy that turned out to be a stroke of genius. UMass won the toss, but elected to kick off and defend the north goal. This left BU with the soggy, chewed up end of the field, where the bad footing made it tough for the Terriers to get untracked.

UMass had troubles with the footing on their first possession also, but on their second drive, they drove the ball well, picking up impressive gains on the ground. A newspaper story printed last week had a quote inferring that the UMass offensive line was "shabby." Karl Nyholm and Co. showed everyone what they thought of that remark, as they simply blew out the BU line, leaving huge holes for Pedrow, Tom Murray and Dan Dawson.

The Minutemen drove to the BU 12 when the drive stalled and, had to settle for a 29-yard field goal by Sandro Vitiello.

Meanwhile, the visitors could do nothing against a spirited UMass defense. The halftime stats told the story on the job the defense did in shutting down BU. The Terriers had only six first downs in the half and were held to just 15 yards rushing. The only effective drive BU could put together came at the end of the half when they drove to the UMass 15 on passes from Jim Jensen to tight-end Scott Phinney before time ran out.

By that time however, the score was 17-0, due to two impressive drives by the Minutemen.

The first score came early in the second quarter. The 13 play-54 yard march ended when Mike McEvilly, on fourth down and goal from the one-foot line, followed freshman guard Scott LaFond and dove in for the score.

The second TD came on three perfectly executed plays which followed a 21-yard punt return by Kevin Sullivan which put the ball on the BU 33. After a six yard carry by Mike Newell, McEvilly hit Jim Ryan on a down and out, and the sophomore wide receiver scampered down the sideline to the five-yard line. On the next play, Pedrow found a huge hole on the left side and took it in for the score.

Down 17-0, BU put together its best drive of the game to start the second half. Following a series of penalties and a big 25 yard pass play to Najarian, BU had a crucial 4th and goal situation from the Umass seven.

On the play that probably ended all BU hopes for a comeback, Jensen rolled to his right, had plenty of room to run it in, but elected instead to pass to Bob Martinez who was open in the back of the endzone. The Jenson aerial was overthrown, and BU came up empty handed.

Following a five yard TD run by Najarian made it 17-6 (the kick failed) Vitiello put the game out of reach with a 42-yard field goal.

The Minutemen, now 4-1, will try to make it five in a row, next week when UHI comes to town for homecoming weekend.

Stingy 'D' stifles BU

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

After the first UMass football game of the year, a 35-7 loss at the hands of Villanova, Minuteman defensive line and linebacker coach Jim Reid said, "If anyone's going to get to us (the UMass defense), they're going to have to do it now because we're going to be unbeatable next year."

It looks like the Medford native may not have to wait until next year. A spirited UMass defense, led by Frank DiTomasso, showed just what they could do last Saturday afternoon when the Minutemen defenders came up with a solid effort to hold the previously unbeaten (4-0) Boston University team to a paltry six points during Saturday's 20-6 UMass win. Add to that the fact that UMass held BU's star tailback Mal Najarian to 27 yards on the ground. Not bad when you consider Najarian's 114.2 rushing yards per game average that he brought with him to Amherst.

"Hey; we're young and we're getting used to working together," related Frank, the older of the two DiTomasso brothers on the UMass defense. "We didn't double team Najarian and we didn't make any adjustments for him; the UMass defense has arrived."

Overall, the balanced Terriers offense was stifled to the tune of 50 yards overall on the ground in 27 attempts.

BLACK WOMEN ATTACKED

On September 29, 1979 three Black women, Ada Gay a Hampshire College student, Gina Stevens, an Amherst College student and Sheila Johnson the librarian at Amherst College were attacked by four Amherst police officers who charged them with disorderly conduct because they refused to acknowledge the abusive verbal assaults made on them while making a purchase at Russell's Liquor Store.

According to reports available at this time the sequence of events are as follows:

1. The three women completed their purchase and Sheila Johnson, who is twenty-four years old but has a small frame, was asked for identification. She showed her administration card from Amherst College to the clerk behind the counter. He thrust the card back at her and it landed on the floor.
2. The three women asked to see the manager of the store to complain about the sales clerk's behavior. Gina Stevens took the purchase, which had been paid for, and began to walk out of the store. At this point the store clerk called the police accusing her of stealing the liquor. Other store employees closed the door of the store so the women could not get out.
3. The police arrive and began questioning Gina, Sheila and Ada very rudely about stealing liquor. Ada verbally defended herself and told the men they were being very racist.
4. Ada was pushed into a wine rack by the police officer. One man threw her on the floor, rolled her over and later sat on her back. (Ada weighs about 95 pounds) He handcuffed her and also Gina Stevens. Gina was dragged on her back to the police station while the women yelled they were not resisting.
5. The women were kept in the police station two hours. Their rights were not read to them. They were not allowed to make any calls. Their personal belongings were taken away.
6. At the end of two hours they were released on personal recognizance. Gina, Ada and Sheila appeared at Hampshire District Court on Tuesday, October 2 and will be arraigned on Wednesday October 24.

Anyone with need of further information should contact the Third World Women's Task Force through the Everywoman's Center: Contact Suman Bohm Wilder Hall 545-0883. Many incidents of this nature occur and remain unreported. If you have been a victim of legal and/or police abuse or neglect you can file a report with the Third World Women's Task Force at Wilder Hall.

APARTHEID:
THE QUESTION IS CONTROL OF RESOURCES AND SUPPRESSION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Chaka Zulu is our columnist

Apartheid is a system of foreign European (white South African) domination that is enforced by the laws and backed by the armed military might of the South African governments. Apartheid is pronounced apart-hate and is an intergral part of almost every aspect of life in South Africa. Employment, education, living conditions and politics are all subjected to the constraints of apartheid.

It is a legal form of racial discrimination aimed at providing total wealth, power and privileges in the hands of the ruling minority of whites over a super-exploited and abused African population. Apartheid prevents Africans from obtaining equal access to the economic wealth of their own country as well as being denied the most basic and fundamental human rights such as decent housing, schooling, medical care, and equal participation in democracy They have no political or civil rights!

Indeed these conditions are terrible, but the major feature of apartheid is not the forced racial separation, but that it effectively maintains the African population as a source of cheap, super-exploitable labor, to be used and abused, then discardas the white South Africans see fit (by force of law no African or other person of color can receive a salary or position higher than any white in any industry in South Africa.

Bantustans are essential components to the system of apartheid. It forces the Black 70 percent of the population to live on 13 percent of the land. The remaining 82 percent of the land is retained for the use of less than 20 percent of the population.

There are nine Bantustans separated on 81 pieces of non-productive land. They are Bophuthat, Swana, Venda, Lebowa, Gayankulu, Swazi, Kwazulu, Ciskei, Transkei, Basotho and Qua Qua.

All Africans are assigned to a Bantustan, which then becomes their legal residence. Each individual is assigned to a particular Bantustan according to their tribal origin. Owee, an African, is assigned to a Bantustan then they are no longer considered legal residents in South Africa. Their own country!!!

South Africans (Blacks) must carry their hated passbooks which contains all of their essential documents and serves also as a kind of "passport." It must be produced on the demand of an authority or the person in violation of the Passbook law, is considered a criminal and subject to arrest, fine, jail or both and possibly loss of work. Six hundred thousand (600,000) persons a year are arrested for pasbook violations of the Passbook law, is considered a criminal and subject to arrest, fine, jail or both and possibly loss of work.

There are no factories, farms or any other form of economic development in the Bantustans. They are in essence reserves for cheap Black labor supplied to the factories and mines of white South Africa. This is the only reason Blacks are allowed out of the Bantustans, and their movements are carefully controlled; officially by "influx control" and "recruitment bureaus" and unofficially (socially) by the color bar (racism).

When the labor of South African Blacks is no longer needed or if they are incapacitated or unable to work they are literally thrown back on the Bantustans, to continue life with no income, pension, social security, land or any means to effect a livelihood.

These conditions need not exist because South Africa is one of the wealthiest nations in the world. It has 40 percent of all automobiles in Africa, it produces and consumes 57 percent of all the electricr' power and 50 percent of all telephones. It exports large quantities of the worlds most valuable and necessary raw materials. It has 80 percent of the coal and 64 percent of all the gold in the western world, along with diamonds, uranium, manganese, chromium and vanadium.

It's gross national product is the largest in Africa, 34.8 billion dollars. The only key raw material it lacks is oil 90 percent of which was imported from Iran, before the revolution. Presently, though it is seeking to strengthen this weak energy link by domestic production from oil shale and other western sources.

Thousands of foreign companies have invested billions of dollars in South Africa. Three hundred and fifty U.S. based corporations have nearly 2 billion dollars invested in South

Third World Women's Potluck Dinner

J. Gaston

The pot luck dinner sponsored by the Third World Women's Task Force on Thursday, October 11th in Yvonne's Place at the New Africa House was a pleasurable evening for the 25 women who attended. It was one of the rare occasions in the last ten years where African American, Puerto Rican, Asian, South American and West Indian women came together to touch base with each other and rap about the issues and needs of our respective communities.

Among the subjects which came up in the course of discussion were theneed for Third World women to feel that they can connect with other Third World women to feel that they can connect with other Third World women in this community. We all come from different places where we are among our own people. Here we are isolated from each other. One sister described how working as a student and later as a clerical worker in a U. Mass department with condescending and racist white men makes her feel powerless. She asked if there will be support groups for Third World women. Oware Dozier, a Black and Spanish speaking counselor working through the Everywoman's Center explained that she and other Black counselors are considering forming such a group if there is an interest. She explained that support groups for Third World people need to have a political focus to help us understand the context of what happens to us as individuals. A second woman reported on the police brutalization of three Black women in a store in town on September 29. She asked if women present were willing to show support. Yvonne John encouraged the American born women not to be scared of the courts and police system because they were not meant for us to begin with. She asked why we even expect justice from them and told the group, you have to organize and fight your own battles. What happened to those sisters could happen to any one of us.

Teresa Barrientos and Malika Jones who were moderating reported on other instances of violence against Third World people. Jamila Gaston briefly reviewed the reason why the Seta Rampersad case was being pursued, the information available on why Jill Dickerson was paralzed two years ago, the reasons why Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers were kidnapped from the campus and thrown in prison for five to fifteen years and other instances of legal and police abuse of Third World people in this area going back to 1969.

The group consisted of women from diverse backgrounds so many different issues were raised. In attendance were undergraduate and graduate students, professional women, mothers, single parents, workers, older women and women who work in their homes. The range of expressed needs included a request for Third World babsitters for Third World children. It was decided that a list would be developed and make available.

The women from the Third World Women's Center room 420 New Africa House came downstairs and joined the group after their meeting. They spoke to the need for undergraduate women to learn how to unify at the same time that they learn the skills necessary for a career. "Sisters need to get involved in something more than disco, going out and looking stylish," said Miriam Carter, coordinator of the Third World Women's Center. All the women agreed that sisters and brothers need to work together around issues that are important to our future.

The Third World Women's Task Force members emphasized that we learn how to share our skills with each other so that we are all leaders, writers, public speakers and good organizers; so that we can tie together what we experience individually to local, national and international what we experience individually to local, national and international issues; so that we know how to develop programs and support each other. We need to understand that being trained in white institutions and living in white communities means we are being programmed, sometimes by our own kind, to work for a system that only works for us when its convenient to do so. We need to be critical in our thinking and serious about our responsibilities.

We are all busy people. Most of us came to this area to complete degree requirements on schedule, take care of our families and work. In order to be even a little active in an organization we need to learn how to manage our time. Everyone can do something and everyone should. There is no excuse for laying back and letting other people work by themselves, then badmouthing their mistakes. Each contribution of time and energy, however small, becomes significant when many people are doing work together. It will help us to learn good organizational process skills and how to evaluate ourselves. We also need to learn how to work with other organizations.

Suman Bohm, Third World Women's Advocate working out of Everywoman's Center, cited Nummo News as an example of what can be produced when consistent work goes on between groups. Last year Nummo News was really good about reporting on Third World women. They kept everyone informed about the Seta Rampersad case when most newspapers and U. Mass administrators were reluctant to get involved. This kind of cooperation is what we want.

To make it easier for students to fit working with organizations into their schedules the University allows people to develop independent study credit experiences. Other women can use their experience to help them in their job.

Naledi Nkomo, an active member of the Third World Women's Task Force explained that the philosophy of the group clearly states that women, men, and children must work together to overcome oppression. She asked that all women present who want to become active in the group attend the Third World Women's Task Force open business session on Thursday, October 18 from 7-9 pm. at Everywomans's Center's Conference Room on the second floor of Wilder Hall (located across the street from the Health Center Parking Lot). All Third World people are invited to participate. Child-care will be provided and refreshments will be served. For further information or to let the TWWTF know you are interested but can't attend the meeting call 545-0883 and talk with Suman.

What is CCEBS?

by Sartreina Cooper

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) started in 1966 by a group of concerned Black faculty and staff at the University, but, it was not until September, 1968 that the first CCEBS class entered the University of Massachusetts. The program then began to recruit and assist Black, Asian-Americans, Spanish-speaking, and low income students in admissions and providing them wihh economic and academic assistances. CCEBS then began to organize many programs and structures to assist students in their educational pursuits as well as adjusting to the university.

The aims of the CCEBS program are accomplished through three components; Academic Services, Personal Counseling and Graduate Career Counseling. These three components work together to provide students with the necessities of adjustingto university life.

Out of CCEBS emanated many other programs; the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies; Drum, a Black literary magazine whos' first editor was a CCEBS student; the Black Scientists' Society; the African Institution of Martial Arts; the Black Repertory Theater, the Voices of New Africa House Choir; the Black Dance Theater Workshop; and Nummo News which supplies weekly news by and about Third World people.

CCEBS also expresses Latino energies through AHORA and BCP, a Bilingual Cultural Program.

The CCEBS program is housed in twelve offices which are located on the second floor of New Africa House; phone 545-0031. The director, Doctor Carol J. Carter, and her staff are available for inquiries and assistance. There are CCEBS counselors available for minority students of every class Monday thru Friday. Next weeks issue will contain a write-up on the CCEBS counselors concerning their jobs as CCEBS counselors and their goals for the coming year.

PRESIDENT FIDEL CASTRO TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY:

UNITED NATIONS, NY., Oct. 12

I have not come to speak of Cuba. I am not here to denounce to this Assembly the attacks to which our small but worthy country has been subjected for 20 years. Nor have I come to wound with unnecessary passion the powerful neighbor in his own house. We have been charged by the sixth conference of heads of state or governments of the movement of nonaligned countries to present to the United Nations the results of its deliberations and the positions to be derived thereof.

The nonaligned countries stress the fact that it is imperative to do away with the enormous inequality that separates the developed from the developing countries. We are struggling for an eradication of poverty, of hunger, disease and illiteracy from which hundreds of millions of human beings still suffer. We aspire to a new world order — one based on justice, on equity and peace, one that will replace the unjust and unequal system which prevails today in which, as proclaimed in the final declaration at Havana, "wealth is still concentrated in the hands of a few powers whose wasteful economies are maintained by the exploitation of the labor as well as the transfer and the plunder of the national and other resources of the peoples of Africa, Latin America, Asia and other regions of the world."

An End to 'Colonialism'

The fact that that sixth conference was held in Latin America allowed the heads of state or governments meeting there to recall that the peoples of that region started their efforts to obtain independence at the very beginning of the 19th century. They also did not forget, as it is said in the declaration, that Latin America is one of the regions of the world that historically has most greatly suffered from the aggression of United States and European imperialism, colonialism and neocolonialism.

The participants in the conference were forced to point out that in that area of struggle, remnants of colonialism, neocolonialism and national oppression still remain and thus the conference spoke out in favor of the eradication of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations. It condemned the presence of foreign military bases in Latin America and the Caribbean such as those in Cuba and Puerto Rico and again demanded that the Government of the United States and other colonial powers restore to those countries that part of their territory occupied by those bases against the will of their people.

Despite all the pressure, the threats and the flattering that were exercised and brought to bear, despite the obstinacy of the United States Government demanding that the issue of Puerto Rico be considered an internal problem of the United States, the heads of state or governments, as I said, reiterated their solidarity with the struggle of the Puerto Rican people and their inalienable rights to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity. And they called upon the Government of the United States of America to refrain from any political or repressive maneuvers tending to perpetuate the colonial status of that country.

Acts By U.S. Called Hostile

But for Cuba there was much more than this. There was something which, on behalf of our people, we would like to thank you for in this forum of the United Nations: In Havana, the Cuban people's right to choose their political and social system was supported as was their claim to the territory occupied by the naval base of Guantánamo and furthermore the condemnation of the unjust blockade with which the United States Government continues its effort to isolate the Cuban revolution seeking to destroy it.

We deeply appreciate the universal resonance of the movement's recent denunciation in Havana of hostile acts of pressure and threats against Cuba by the United States, declaring them to be in flagrant violation of the charter of the United Nations and of the principles of international law.

The developing countries and on their behalf the movement of nonaligned nations demand that a substantial portion of the immense resources now being squandered by them on the arms race be diverted for development which in turn would contribute to reducing the danger of war and to helping improve the international situation.

Expressing the position of all the developing countries, the nonaligned countries called for the establishment of a new international monetary system which will put an end to the disastrous fluctuations to which the main currencies used in the international economy, especially the United States dollar, are today subject.

New Monetary System

The existing imbalance in the exploitation of the key resources is abusive and must be abolished. The financial resources received by the developing countries are insufficient and must be increased.

Arms expenditures are irrational. They must cease and the funds thus released be used to finance development.

The international monetary system prevailing today is bankrupt and should be replaced.

The debts of the least-developed countries and of those in a disadvantageous position are burdens impossible to bear and to which no solution can be found, and they should be canceled.

Any indebtedness oppresses the rest of the developing countries economically and should be relieved. The wide economic gap between the developed countries and the countries seeking development, instead of diminishing, is being widened and should be closed and done away with.

Mr. President, response to these demands, some of which have been systematically presented by the developing countries in international forums through the Group of 77 and by the movement of nonaligned countries, would permit a change of course in the international economic situation that would provide the developing countries with the institutional conditions for organizing programs that would definitely take them on the road to development.

But even if all these measures were implemented, even if all the mistakes and evils of the present system of international relations were rectified the developing countries would still lack one decisive element — foreign financing.

High Cost of

According to statistical information, as I stated in the inaugural session of the sixth summit conference of the nonaligned countries, the world is making an annual investment in military expenditures of more than $300 billion. With $300 billion you could in one year build 600,000 schools with a capacity for 400 million children, or you could build 60 million comfortable homes for 300 million people, or you could build 30,000 hospitals with 18 million beds, or you could build 20,000 factories with jobs for more than 20 million workers, or you could build irrigation systems to water 150 million hectares of land, which with the appropriate technology, could feed a billion people.

Mankind wastes this much every year on its military spending. Moreover, consider further the enormous amount of human resources in full use of technicians, of scientists, as a squandering and wasting of fuel, raw materials and other items.

This is the fabulous price of preventing a true climate of confidence and peace from existing in the world. The United States alone will in the 1980's spend six times this much on military activities.

We are requesting less for 10 years of development than is spent in a single year by the ministries of war and much less than a tenth of what will be spent for military purposes in 10 years.

300 Billion Needed

It can be deduced that the developing countries will need to have billions of dollars more invested every year to overcome the results of backwardness in education and in public health services. It is a large problem that faces us.

In addition to the resources already mobilized by various banking channels, loan organizations, international bodies and private finance agencies we must discuss and decide upon the strategy for the next development decade so that in it we include an additional contribution of not less than $300 billion at 1977 real value to be invested in the underdeveloped countries and to be made in yearly installments of at least $25 billion from the very beginning.

This aid should be in the form of donations and long-term soft- and low-interest credit. It is imperative that these additional funds be mobilized as a contribution of the developed world and of other countries with resources to the underdeveloped world over the next 10 years.

If we want peace these resources will be required. If there are no resources for development there will be no peace.

THE ANCIENT AFRICAN SOCIETY OF NUBIA

In his foreword to the first volume of the catalogue, Africa in Antiquity: The Arts of Ancient Nubia and the Sudan, Michael Botwinick director of The Brooklyn Museum, points out the following: ". . . In modern times, most people have assumed that in Africa the ancient world was limited to Egypt, and that sub-Saharan Africa had no historic past before the Portuguese contact in the 16th century. But there is a culture, perhaps as old as historic time itself, set geographically between the pyramids of Egypt and the jungles of central Africa. The cradle of this culture lies at the very confluence of the Blue and White Niles. . "This vigorous culture established itself in a harsh and unyielding environment. Throughout recorded history it lies at the outer edge, first of the ancient world, then at the edge of the Classical world, and then at the edge of the Christian world. It had its own prehistory, its own language, and its own anthropological and artistic development. Even as it stands at the outer edge of the known world, it is also a crossroads. It is a contact and transfer point between Africa and, each in its own turn, Ancient Egypt, Ancient Greece, Ancient Rome, Christianity and Islam. On this canvas that stretches from the first cataract of the Nile to the foothills of Ethiopia, this culture works out its own destiny—sometimes subjugated and sometimes as conqueror of the lands around it . . ." Making allowances for Mr. Botwinick's Euro-centric chauvinism, including the inclination to extract Egypt from Africa, the statement is insightful. The Nubian civilization existed 500 years before the construction of the pyramids and prevailed for some 5,000 years. Now, as a consequence of construction of Egypt's Aswan Dam, most of ancient Nubia lies under water.

What and where is Nubia?

In his essay, "Geography and Population of the Nile Valley," William Y. Adams describes Nubia as "that part of the Nile Valley which is occupied by speakers of the Nubian languages . . . These peoples are the immediate southern neighbors of the Egyptians, and their territory extended up the Nile from Aswan to a point near the village of Ed-Debba, at the bottom of the great bend of the river. Today, about one-third of modern Nubia lies within the Arab Republic of Egypt, while the remaining two-thirds is part of the Democratic Republic of the Sudan. In earlier times, Nubian-speaking peoples occupied a much larger area than they do today; as late as the 16th century they were found at least as far upstream as the junction of the Blue and White Niles at modern Khartoum (the capital of Sudan). Thus, the name Nubia when used in medieval texts may refer to the whole of the Nile Valley between the modern localities of Khartoum and Aswan." It is important to remember that the name Sudan, the short version of the Arabic Bilad es-Sudan, means "Land of the Blacks". Historically, "Land of the Blacks" was used to designate the entire sub-Saharan region in Africa from the Niger River basin to the Red Sea coast.

The Brooklyn Museum

"The Nubians are unique among all the peoples of inner Africa in that their place in history is almost as old as history itself," Mr. Adams wrote. "Unlike their neighbors, they were not entirely isolated from the outside world by mountains, desert, or ocean; on the contrary, their ancestral homeland along the middle Nile was in ancient times the one feasible route of communication between the Mediterranean basin and the interior of the African continent. Consequently, they were brought into contact with the world's earliest civilizations at a far earlier date than were most European peoples. Centuries and even millenia ago, they made the critical transformations from tribesmen to peasant farmers and from pagans to Christians (and latterly to Muslims), which have sooner or later been the experience of most peoples in the Western world. Not only did they develop, in time, a civilization in their own right, but they were the main channel through which civilizing influences were transmitted to other African peoples and African influences reached the Mediterranean lands. Through all the ebb and flow of cultural influences, however, the Nubians have somehow managed to maintain a distinct ethnic and cultural identity."

At the present time, estimates as to the number of Nubian people living in southern Egypt, eastern Sudan and northwestern Ethiopia ranges from 200,-000 to half a million.

The nine essays in the first volume of the catalogue provide a wealth of information about ancient Nubia, its people and its relationship to the ancient world. An essay of particular relevance is Bruce G. Tigger's "Nubian, Negro, Black, Nilotic?", which places the Nubian people firmly into their African context and discredits the old racist and "scientific" doctrines which sought to attribute major achievements and civilizing influences in Africa to "white" or Arab sources.

"Africa in Antiquity: The Arts of Ancient Nubia and the Sudan" originated as an idea in 1973, following the exhibition, "Akhenaten and Nefertiti", which also was held at The Brooklyn Museum that year. The principals in considering the project were Dr. Steffen Wenig, then associate curator of the Agyptisches Museum, Staatliche Museen zu Berlin/DDR, and Bernard V. Bothmer, chairman of the Department of Egyptian and Classical Art at the Brooklyn Museum. The assistance and cooperation of Egyptian and Sudanese museum and governmental officials enabled the organizers to realize the important exhibition which opened in the fall at the Brooklyn Museum. Several of the pieces on exhibit at the museum are shown on these pages.

AFRICA 79: New Sense of Urgency for progress.

James Lewis, Jr.

1979 has been a year of momentous change for Africa, a year marked by a new sense of urgency for progress. All over Africa, governments were changing in structure and personnel. This new sense of urgency for progress can be seen in a pattern; the changes all over Africa reflect a growing involvement with western business and government, and a more critical sense of urgency on the part of Africans to raise their standard of living in general and become more influencial the world order. The changes in African government only reflect these forces.

Three dictators were ousted, one of whom was executed. In other countries, like Zaire, Morocco and Ethiopia, there are attempts to overthrow the governmental regime, nothing short of Civil war. In former Equatorial Guinea, president Macias Nguema was executed September 23, 1979. Nguema was considered a brutal, murderous dictator, second in killing in Africa only to former President for life, Idi Amin. Nguema's killings are most conservatively estimated to be least 50,000 persons, and over 300,000 on death row.

The new head of state, Mr. Teodoro Nguema Mba Nzogo, admits he has a heavy job ahead of him, and has indicated a maintenance of diplomatic ties with China, Cuba and the U.S.S.R., but the new spirit permeates the land now that the regime is over.

Idi Amin of Uganda was overthrown by exiled Ugandan and Tansanean forces after an invasion attempt by Idi Amin into Tanzania November 1978. President Julius Kambarage Nyerere of Tanzania authorized and backed the counter attack into Uganda and on April 11, 1979, Kampala, the capitol of Uganda fell to the invasion forces. Yusuful Lule was declared the new president of Uganda and was removed from office June 20, 1979. The present president of Uganda is Godfrey L. Binaisa, who took office August 5, 1979. Binaisa offered a hugh unspecified reward for the capture of Idi Amin, and at the commonwealth conference in Lusaka, Zambia, charged Sudan with being part harboror of Idi Amin along with Libya.

Sudanese Ambassador to the U.S., Omar Salin Elisoa, has denied harboring Idi Amin. Idi Amin's 30,000 man army are now refugees in Libya.

Boitian offered $2million in emergency aid to the new Ugandan regime , and Britain is said to be training some 60 to 80 police officers. Some 20,000 Tanzanian troops are still in Uganda. Uganda is also supported with aid from Kenya.

Idi Amin is said by most reports to have killed about 500,000 civilians during his reign as dictator of Uganda.

Nigeria has made a peaceful transition from a Federal military government to a civilian Parliamentary Democracy similar to that of the United States October 1, 1979. The former head of State of Nigeria was Lt. General upon this policy of control. They are the Department of Defense, South African Police, Bureau of State Security, Department of Prisons, Department of Justice, Department of Bantu Administration, Department of Labor, Department of Bantu Education, Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of Colored, Rehobath and Name Relations.

The investments and taxes from U.S. corporations go to fund the personnel and the vast technological equipment needed to staff and operate these departments.

This economic bond between United States corporate and Bank capital and the South African Economy is what maintains the status quo in South Africa and in essence is the "modernization of Oppressive Terror" for South African Blacks.

The foreign economic props to South Africa's political economy also shields it against any meaningful international economic sanctions and any attempts to isolate the country from political involvement with the rest of the world.

Contrary to widely publicized claims, U.S. based corporations and banks have in no way increased the quality of life for Africans in South Africa. They have become part and parcel of the system of apartheid. They follow all the current customs and trends. They make no objection to grossly unequal pay scale between Africans and white workers because the "starvation wages" they pay the Africans means more profits for the corporations.

The toilet and other facilities they provide for Africans are grossly inadequate as compared to that which they provide for whites. Even if they did attempt to effect some type of change they would run into a mass of discriminatory laws against Blacks (against which U.S. companies have made no strong protests).

In the past 20 years of increasing economic development Africans have not shared in this development, neither economically or politically. In fact the oppression, exploitation, poverty and racism has qualitatively increased. Between 1961 and 1975 over 100 new discriminatory laws were passed. The white and Black wage gaps increased, pass laws were tightened, influx control implemented more severely than ever, and African opposition to the racist regime is being attacked more viciously than ever. Examples of South African laws are the following:

1. The pass laws make it mandatory that every African boy or girl reaching the age of 16 must carry a passbook with I.D. number, references and personal information.

2. The Bantustan laws or formally, the "Group Areas Act" divides the land into areas of ownership (reservations to put it accurately) in which members of the different racial and ethnic groups are forced to occupy certain areas, with the best land reserved for whites.

The Influx control laws prevent Africans from being in an urban area for longer than 72 hours without a permit, unless that individual was born there and has been continually a resident there or has worked there for more than 15 years for one employer.

The Job Reservation Act in effect reserves all the best and highest paid jobs for whites. Also all trade unions must be socially separated.

The Riotous Assemblies Act in effect makes prayer services, silent protests or any gathering or two or more people for more than 48 hours subject to a ban.

The Unlawful Organization Act of 1960 and the "affected organization act bans all political organizations that advocate or practice resistance to the South African government and makes it unlawful for them to receive finances from foreign governments.

The Terrorism Act not only outlaws the physical act of sabotage but any act, writing or speech found to be an activity which embarrases the administration of the state; obstructs the free movement of traffic; promotes by intimidation, the achievement of any corporate or government objective or which prejudices any corporate or government undertaking. The terrorism act also authorizes arrest and detention without trial and interrogation in solitary confinement. It sets no time limit on the period of detention, so that a person may be detained and held without trial for life. Authorities may suppress the fact that a person has been detained and deny information to families.

The Criminal Procedure Act makes it possible that any person may be held in general detention for 180 days if in the opinion of the attorney general the detention is in the interests of the administration of justice. The person may be held in solitary confinement. No court can order a detention release, and only an official of the state can have access to that person.

AFRICA 79:

Olusegun Obasanjo. The new president of Nigeria is Alhaj Shehu Sagari.

Nigeria supplies over 14 percent of the imported oil in the U.S. Nigeria is also the most populated and wealthiest black controlled nation in Africa. This is their first attempt at civilian government in 13 years. The country recieved its independence from Britain in 1960. Events of note; Nigeria nationalized the British owned Barclays Brother Bank operated all over Nigeria last February, but the real shock came when Nigeria nationalized British Petroleum out of 350,000 barrels of crude oil per day. Nigeria is the fifth leading exporter of oil in the world.

Angola had an unexpected change over in government when President Aostinho Neto died of cancer September 10, 1979. Angola has announced a 45-day period of mourning at the end of which Angola will elect a new president. Mr. Neto was 56 years old.

The Central African Republic has seen the Ouster of Emperor Jean Bedel Bolsassa, the French black ruler who was charged with the gruesome murders of approximately 140 school children last April. Emperor Bokassa had been in power for 13 years. Bokassa was ousted September 20, 1979. The new president of the Central African Republic, David Dacko, who also is French backed and was the President of the Central African Republic (then know as the Central African Empire) before Bokassa came to power.

Bokass immediately went to France and spent 48 hours waiting to be admitted into the country. The French refused to allow Bokassa to, unboard the plane and Bokassa was later political asylum in Abijan, Ivory Coast.

Reports say the Central African Republic people are dissapointed with Dacko, but the people were exuberlent with the ouster of Bokassa.

In Chad, the struggles seem to be more along the ethnic lines. The nation has 4 million people, 2 million muslims who live mostly in the north and 2 million black christians along the South.

Former president Felix Mallowum was ousted after naming Hissene Habre Premier. Habre controls the military and the civil war in Nigeria sent 850 into Chad to try to keep the peace and police and protect the transitional government, but Nigeria was discouraged with Prime Minister Loi Mohammed Shawa's government and with drew it's peace keeping force. Fighting broke out again but the Libyan 2,500 man invasion is trying to establish a pro-Libyan government. President Gaafar-al - Nimeiry of Sudan has offer his country as neutral ground for trying to end the strife but he said that he doesn't believe it will do any good unless Libya stops trying to put a pro-Libyan government into power.

Zimbabwe held their first elections for black majority rule at the beginning of May the elected Prime minister Bishop Abelt T. Muzorewai was their first Black Prime Minister. The Patriotic Font leaders, of nationalist parties against the proposed Constitution and election of Bishop Muzorwea. The election failed to end the international sanction against Zimbabwe.

Presently, the parties involved with this are meeting in London to work out some kind of agreement. Meanwhile, the gurella forces are at work against the new government. The negotiations in London seem constructive and the civil war is expected to end sometime in the near future.

Kenya is president Arab Moi is to have national elections November 8, 1979, but there is no question that he will not win. It is expected to be peaceful and Moi is repected university in Kenya.

The Ghanan civilian President Hilla Limann took office September 24, 1979, after 7 years of military rule. Ghana experienced so internal conflict surrounding it election, but now things are in order, like Nigeria.

The attempt to push president Mbutu sese seko, who siezed power 1965, out of power failed. Mbutu has economic and military backing from the United States, France, Germany, Belgiums and other countries. The problem with Zaire is that it is in debt to other countries for over $12.5 billion. Zaire is mineral rich. It has copper, oil, zinc, tin, cobalt, diamonds, gold - major exports are copper, diamond, coffee, tin, and palm oil.

The Civil War Morocco is between King Hassan of Morocco verses the Polisario Front guerrillas trying to set up an independent nation in the Sahara desert. King Hassan has gotten support from Egyptian President Anwar Sadat in the form of arms supplies. Morocco has also had problems with fighting with Algeria.

These upheavals represent the growing westernization of Africa in their changing society.

The late Dr. Diederichs:Trained by the Nazis to play a quisling role

Sinister Brothers

South Africa's Official Mafia

For over 60 years South Africa has had its own Mafia . The full story of the sinister Broederbond has now been told by journalist-author Hennie Serfontein

THE WORD "Broederbond" is Afrikaans: it means "Band of brothers," or, more simply, "Brotherhood." The Broederbond is a secret society of Afrikaners which has been in existence since June 5, 1918; its aim has been, and remains, to ensure Afrikaner dominance in South Africa in all fields.

The Broederbond can be regarded as a kind of Mafia; it is highly exclusive, and perfectly capable of the utmost ruthlessness towards those who reveal its secrets.

Perhaps the major role in its exposure has been played by the South African journalist Hennie Serfontein, whose book Brotherhood of Power (Rex Collings, London 1979) has recently appeared. In it he describes how secret documents came into his possession in the sixties, how he published a series of exposes of the Bond in the South African Sunday Times, and how (as an Afrikaner) he and his family suffered ostracism, death threats, and economic frustration as a result.

Serfontein's story is that of one of the few brave White South Africans who have defied the Afrikaner establishment at whatever cost, because of a belief that secrecy leads to corruption and intransigence.

All but two of the present National Party cabinet are Broederbonders. John Vorster, now State President, is a member. All are bound by bizarre oaths to propagate Afrikaner domination — and imperialism.

It is noteworthy that the conspiracy formulated around the South African Department of Information—entailing the worldwide influencing of opinion on South Africa, dirty tricks, and subversion of hostile governments—was set up by Broederbonders.

This kind of massive duping of the public is strongly reminiscent of the tactics of the Nazis. The similarity is more than coincidental.

The late Dr Nic Diederichs, for example, was trained by the Nazis in Germany to play a quisling role in SA; he, and others such as Vorster, General Hendrik Van den Bergh (former head of BOSS), and Piet Meyer (head of the SA Broadcasting Corporation) were the target of crackdowns by General Smuts in World War Two. Some were actively engaged in urban terrorism, others in propaganda for Hitler.

The "Jewish problem" has always concerned the Bond, as it concerned the Nazis. A committee was set up to examine the question—in 1968.

It is often argued in SA that the Bond is merely a cultural, self-help organisation, similar to the Freemasons, though exclusive to the Afrikaner. Serfontein, however, notes: "The basis of its organisation; the methods of its operations; the ruthlessness with which it deals with those who resign; its philosophy of Christian Nationalism coming close to being merely a modern day version of Hitler's 'herrenvolkism'; its real objective of Afrikaner imperialism and domination; its reliance on fear, fear for the loss of Afrikaner identity and fear for the consequences of defying the values it has laid down for the Afrikaner tribe—all this has woven it into an organisation that will drag the Afrikaner down to his doom in a Gotterdammerung spirit of last-ditch defiance."

Until this year, the Bond has consistently propagated the view that Whites must be kept separate from Blacks, particularly as far as sexual relations go. In 1967 a Bond committee was set up to investigate the effects that the Black nannies had on the White charges. The committee was to determine whether such contact broke down the "normal, healthy revulsion" of White for Black.

The Broederbond, by definition, is all-male as well as all-White. Broeders are enjoined to keep the secrets of the Bond from their friends and relatives—including wives.

It controls or has infiltrated the National Party, the cabinet, all provincial councils, all town councils, the civil service, the Afrikaans churches, the SABC, Afrikaans newspapers, White trade unions on the mines and railways, and the educational system in its entirety. White education in South Africa is designed to inculcate the Christian National concept (of puritanical allegiance to the volk), while Black education (devised by Verwoerd) is, in Verwoerd's own words, designed "to keep the Bantu child a Bantu child." This attitude led to the Soweto upheavals in 1976.

That no African will be a citizen of South Africa is the bizarre promise of the separate development system, in terms of which Africans will be physically shunted into the impoverished labour pools of the "independent homelands."

The Bond, too, participated in drawing up the fresh constitution for SA which envisages three autonomous Parliaments in the 1980s—one for Whites, one for Coloured people, and one for Indians.

Serfontein concludes that the Afrikaner will not change, that he will resist change with all the violence at his command, and that when he falls from power he will destroy as much of what is around him as he can. The historical parallels are clear-cut●

Aquisition of H.M. Bond papers celebrated

On October 22nd the University Library, University of Massachusetts Amherst, will formally announce its acquisition of the Horace Mann Bond Papers. This extensive collection of a distinguished black educator will be a prime resource for scholars in the fields of black education, African affairs and related topics. The Bond Papers, together with the W.E.B. DuBois Papers already resident at the University, constitute a national treasure.

Also to be celebrated is the naming of the Horace Mann Bond Center for Equal Education. This Center, a national clearinghouse of research and information housed in the University's School of Education, publishes the journals Integrateducation and Research Review of Equal Education, as well as other, related material. The Center is dedicated to Dr. Bond's belief in the right of every child to learn and to grow.

Please join us and members of Dr. Bond's familyMrs. Julia Bond and Georgia State Senator Julian Bond-in this long overdue tribute to a distinguished scholar and leader.

EL BCP DA LA BIENVENIDA A SUS ESTUDIANTES

Por: Bolfi Posadas. Corresponsal.

El viernes pasado se celebro en el Newman Center una fiesta de bienvenida ofrecida por el BCP a los estudiantes hispanos.

LATIN AMERICAN AFFAIRS estuvo presente en la fiesta, y por este medio quiere felicitar a los organizadores y desearles mucho exito en sus futuras actividades del ano escolar, asi como tambien a los estudiantes asistentes. La fiesta estuvo mucho muy amena, alegre y la musica con un sabroso sabor latino. Estuvieron presentes muchos estudiantes latinos que gozaron de lo lindo bailando toda la noche. Al final se rifaron dos boletos para el baile y concierto de MONGO SANTAMARIA que se llevara a cabo el viernes 26 de Octubre, a las 9.00 P.M. en el salon de baile Student Union Ballroom. El agraciado que se gano los boletos de la rifa fue Fausto Roccha, quien nos informo que no tiene pareja todavia para esa fecha, asi que senoritas hispanas a ponerse en contacto con Fausto.

No se olviden que este viernes hay que celebrar la libertad recobrada de los prisioneros politicos de Puerto Rico. Los boletos estan a la venta en las oficinas de AHORA, BCP y Tix. Alla nos vemos!

Correction

In the May 14th 1979 issue of Nummo News, a statement, composed jointly by 3rd World Women's Task Force & Committee Against Repression was printed. This statement was a critique of District Attorney Simons handling of the Seta Rampersad Case. Nummo News didthen and does now, support local people's claims that the case has been handled shoddily by the DA's office and local courts.

In the May 14th statement, however, there was one small error that we would like to now correct. The article said that, along with certain other people, a "Mr. Lyons (of Grinnell & Woodward Insurance Company)" was possibly involved in Seta Rampersad's death. The error in that statement is that Mr. Lyons should not have been listed as working for the Grinnell & Woodward Insurance Company. Mr Lyons is employed instead by the F.P. Lyons Insurance Agency of Northampton. This information has been given to us in a letter, by Mr. Bruce D. Grinnell, Attorney & counsellor at law. We checked this information , I found it to be true and therefore are printing this small correction.

California quake kills one, injures 75

By NORM CLARKE
Associated Press Writer

CALEXICO, Calif. — A powerful earthquake struck Southern California and part of Mexico yesterday, buckling buildings, wrecking water systems and swaying skyscrapers as far away as Las Vegas and Los Angeles. At least 76 persons were injured, authorities said.

One death was reported in Mexicali, Mexico, but there were no immediate reports of deaths in California. The five-second earthquake was the strongest in the Imperial Valley since 1940, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

"There was window glass all over the streets. Mannequins were piled up in the store windows and chimneys were down," said Dorothy Shook, 55, a store owner in El Centro, one of the hardest hit communities.

Seismologists at California Institue of Technology in Pasadena said the 4:16 p.m. temblor, measuring 6.4 on the Richter scale and centered 10 miles east of here on the Mexican border, was followed by a series of aftershocks measuring more than 3.0 on the Richter scale. The National Earthquake Center in Golden, Colo., meaured the major quake at 6.5.

The earthquake was felt as far north as Los Angeles, 150 miles from the epicenter -- jostling the 62-story United California Bank building downtown -- and in the high-rise hotels on the Las Vegas Strip.

El Centro Police Sgt. Max Richardson and Imperial County sheriffs deputies said at least 60 injured persons were being treated at three hospitals — Calexico, El Centro Community and Pioneer Memorial hospitals in nearby Brawley.

"There were no serious injuries," said Alex Smith, administrator at El Centro Community Hospital.

Police, officials unaware of any after-hours bars

By MARK CURELOP
Collegian Staff

UMass fraternity Theta Chi sold beer last weekend at an after-hours bar and according to state law, the sale was illegal. But University officials and Amherst police say they do not know of any such bars on campus.

According to the law, a liquor license must be obtained by an organization or business before selling liquor. At UMass, the license must be obtained from the Town Selectman, and approved by Dean of Students, William F. Field. To date, no liquor licenses have been approved for UMass parties.

The fraternity, located at 496 No. Pleasant St., sells beer for $1 a can from 1 a.m. to 5 a.m. following regular bar closings. Theta Chi Vice President, Michael Brennan, however, said of after-hours at his fraternity, "I don't think we have any."

Field denied knowledge of any fraternities that operated after-hour bars.

"It's a violation of law," Field said. "If the fraternity or dorm is giving the beer away to people who are over 20, then they are not breaking the law. But once they sell to someone under 20, and especially after 1 a.m., they are breaking the law."

A one-day liquor license is "null and void," said Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia. "The people who apply for such a license would have to guarantee me that no one under 20 years of age would be served. Since no one can do that, I will not sign a liquor license.

"When we get word of an after-hour bar, usually after some complaints, we close the facility. Anyone who tries to pull off such an operation is putting themselves in jeopardy. It is a serious offense if they get caught depending on the circumstance," he said.

Maia declined to comment on his knowledge of any area after-hour bars.

"The after-hour bars are illegal, and the fraternities and sororities know that," said Shannon Ellis, UMass Greek Area Director.

"A memo goes out at the beginning of each semester with the alcohol guidelines," Ellis said. "Everyone knows the law. If they get caught selling liquor after hours, the law is broken."

Ellis denied knowledge of any fraternities operating after-hour bars. "The people know how I feel about it, so they don't mention it to me. As an administrator, I must follow the law whether I agree with it or not."

However, Theta Chi has not been the only fraternity operating an after-hour bar. Phi Sigma Kappa, of 510 North Pleasant St., held such an event earlier this semester, but decided to stop the operation, according to President Louis Lanzillo.

"We're doing a lot of renovations in the house," Lanzillo said. "After-hours just is not worth it. We know that the students wanted a good time, but there was too much damage done to the house, so we decided to cancel them for the rest of the semester," he said.

A fraternity bar manager who asked not to be named, said of after-hours, "the frat that runs them, runs them well. It is good for the students who want to go.

> —William F. Field

"The people in this house like to have a good party without going out to, like, PoorDicks. We have the facilities here, so we use them. The only people who get in are friends of the brothers or invited guests.

A student who frequents after-hours said, "I go there to have a good time. It is a place where I can meet my friends."

"I can go there after work and get a beer," said a fraternity member. "Years ago the after-hours just used to be Greek area members, now in some cases they're open to everyone."

Pi Kappa Alpha member Stuart Tobin disagreed, however.

"After-hours are basically a place to drink more and look for trouble. The trouble can be physical, or property being damaged, or a fraternity looking for a fight with another fraternity."

"After-hours is a meat market," said one UMass woman. "I don't usually go."

Anti-Zionist literature sparks debate at CC

By VICTORIA JONES
Collegian Staff

Crowds gathered yesterday around a table in the Campus Center concourse to challenge members of the UMass Iranian-Muslim Association who were distributing anti-Zionist literature.

Controversy centered on an association-endorsed pamphlet titled "The Masters of the Media," a reprint of an article that appeared in The National Vanguard. The newspaper's theme is "Toward a New Consciousness, a New Order, a new people."

The article tried to argue that Jews are controlling the media. It gave examples of Jewish media presidents, and stated: "Jews, with an uncanny instinct for power, insinuated themselves into every nook and cranny of the communications industires decades before the profound influence...was generally recognized. Until this Jewish control of American public opinion is broken, continued misfortune, confusion and decadence shall be our lot."

Association members who asked not to be named, said they were not anti-Jewish, but that they were anti-Zionist. One student said the material was partially propaganda, but said he still supported the "facts."

A Jewish student who asked to remain anonymous, said he objected to the literature because it was taken from "a white supremacy newspaper." He said he believed the students at the table were being not only anti-Zionist, but were also trying to condemn Jews, and were doing so in an unethical manner.

A pro-Palestinian student said, "The facts about Palestine are not presented truthfully through the media. They have distorted the reports of the oppression of the Palestinians."

Other association members said that this was a result of a dishonest media that presents only one side of an issue. The fact that the article was printed in a particular newspaper does not prove the facts in the article to be wrong, they said.

A Jewish student, close to tears, said she did not like or dislike the information contained in the article, but said the way in which it was written was prejudiced. She called it a "stereotyped attack on the Jews."

Many listeners walked away from the table after a Pro-Palestinian said, "This (literature) is intended to present the other side of the issue. I would like to stress that this organization is not anti-Semitic, because we consider Palestinians as Semites, and we support them."

Those questioned while leaving said that the pro-Palestinians were too uninformed to discuss anything in detail.

"A lot of anti-Zionists say being so is a legitimate political position. It does not mean being anti-Jewish. However it is obvious that their anti-Zionism is nothing more than Judeophobia," student Yitzhak Santis said. "Zionism grew out of

O'Neill: caucuses 'nonsense'

WASHINGTON(AP)— House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Monday characterized as "nonsense" the Democratic caucuses in Florida that provided an early test of the relative strengths of President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

"I don't see too much in it," the speaker told reporters who asked whether he agreed with claims by Carter supporters that the result of the Saturday voting was a victory for the president.

About a month ago, O'Neill said he felt Kennedy could have the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination for the asking if he ever became a formal candidate.

But as for the Florida showdown, O'Neill said, "The whole thing seems to me like a lot of money wasted and a lot of nonsense ... money that could have been put to better use as far as the Democrats are concerned."

"It's a new kind of democracy, I guess," O'Neill added, noting that the outcome of the Florida vote meant nothing in terms of actual delegates to the party's nominating convention.

Harvard profs get Nobel Prize

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Seeing nature in "as simple and elegant terms as possible" is the objective of two Harvard professors who were rewarded Monday with the Nobel Prize for physics.

"I think the average person is interested in the universe," said recipient Sheldon Glashow. "It should be regarded as part of popular culture, like art or sports."

As for the prize, his Harvard colleague Steven Weinberg said simply, "It's a nice way to start the week."

He learned of his award from a radio report at 7 a.m. Seconds later, Weinberg was called by his father, Frederick, a civil servant in New York City.

"We want to find out how simple the universe really is," said Glashow."There is an obligation to understand how the world is made up — how the universe began and how it might end."

Nuke waste shippers halted

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Gov. Dick Riley said today an Illinois company has been prohibited from shipping low-level nuclear waste to South Carolina for burial at the Chem Nuclear facility near Barnwell.

He said the Department of Health and Environmental Control issued the order Friday against Commonwealth Edison of Chicago. Riley said the company had been cited by authorities in the state of Washington for poor handling and packaging procedures.

The low-level waste burial site in Washington was closed by Gov. Dixy Lee Ray after Commonwealth Edison was cited and after Riley renegotiated South Carolina's contract with Chem Nuclear. Riley said other companies were also mentioned as violating packaging standards, but he added only Commonwealth Edison was considered a sufficiently serious case to ban its nuclear wastes from the state.

The governor said he has asked for a meeting with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington Nov. 6 and has requested Gov. Ray and Nevada Gov. Robert List of Nevada to attend.

Chad's parents seek autopsy

Associated Press

TIJUANA, Mexico — A lawyer for the parents of Chad Green sought permission Monday from California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. to have California doctors perform an autopsy and find the cause of death of the 3-year-old leukemia victim.

Brown was in Massachusetts Monday to seek support as he tries to decide whether to seek the Democratic nomination for president next year.

Ironically, Massachusetts is the state from which the Greens fled last January, in defiance of a court order, as they sought treatment of his cancer with Laetrile, which is not legally available in the United States.

New source supplying heroin

NEW DELHI, India — Opium from Afghanistan and Pakistan, converted into heroin along a clandestine pipeline to Western Europe, is replacing the supply once shipped from Southeast Asia's "Golden Triangle," U.S. drug officials say.

American authorities are concerned because a recent crackdown on Southeast Asian and Mexican sources for the U.S. heroin trade may sharply increase American demand for drugs derived from Afghan and Pakistani opium.

"It's like squeezing a balloon," said one U.S. official in a recent interview with the Associated Press. "You put increased enforcement pressure in one place and the heroin will come out somewhere else."

He said a current drought and coordinated anti-drug action by countires in the region have reduced the flow of narcotics from the Golden Triangle, an area where Burma, Thailand and Laos meet in the hills of central Southeast Asia.

Watchdog charges Ted with 'coverup'

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — The U.S. Navy, the National Cancer Institute and Sen. Edward Kennedy tried to discredit the results of an investigation of radiation dangers at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, a member of a congressional watchdog committee charged yesterday.

"It's obvious that the Navy, NCI and Kennedy's office have taken clear steps to hamper and cover up a true evaluation of the problems at Portsmouth," Dr. Irwin Bross said. "It's worst than Watergate. This time the health, safety and and welfare of millions of Americans is directly affected."

Bross, the director of biostatistics at Rosewell Park Memorial Institute in Buffalo, wrote to Atty. Gen. Benjamin Civiletti on Oct. 4, requesting that the FBI investigate his charges.

Bross is one of eight scientists named by Congress in February 1978 to insure the fairness of a government study of reports that nuclear workers at the Kittery, Maine, shipyard were dying of radiation-induced cancer.

The investigation was prompted by a study two years ago by Drs. Thomas Najarian and Theodore Colton. Congressmen, scientists and union leaders have charged that the government was dragging its feet on the study.

"It's just the latest in a long series of government actions designed to cover-up the investigation of radiation dangers to workers at the shipyard," Bross said.

Bross' criticism is centered on the Navy's taping and photographing a presentation by Colton to scientists at Yale University of his preliminary analysis of new figures on the relationship between radiation and cancer at the shipyard.

That New Haven meeting was held four days before Colton and Najarian were to testify before a hearing chaired by Kennedy into the dangers of low level radiation.

"After the Navy obtained the tape, and gave it to Kennedy's people, the material was turned over to NCI on Friday," Bross said. "(Dr. Charles) Land (of NCI) had the material run through the computers and by Monday a derogatory report on Colton's findings was circulating all over Washington.

"It was a public meeting," Bross said. "But to direct the full powers of government surveillance against a researcher to discredit his work before he has a chance to present it to a Senate committee is typical of how the government is handling the entire radiation issue."

Waste dump: little problem

By JOHN J. MULLINS
Associated Press

BOSTON — The closing of radioactive waste dumps creates few immediate problems for most Boston area hospitals and universities, but the problems could grow, spokesmen say.

The saving factor has been the institutions' own storage facilities. The hardest hit is Harvard University where storage room for radioactive research waste space will be used up by Friday.

And, a spokesman there said the problem is not so much the radioactivity as the flammable material in which it is dissolved.

At Boston University's University Hospital, things are different.

"I think the whole system (of disposal sites) is being overloaded with a lot of material that isn't even a hazard," said Dr. Belton Burrows, chief of nuclear medicine at that hospital.

"We save that to decay and throw it out with ordinary trash," he said of radioactive waste from diagnostic tests at the hospital.

"All this diagnostic material can be simply stored until there is no perceptive radioactivity and disposed of as trash," he said.

The issue arose after Gov. Dixy Lee Ray of Washington, a former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, ordered the low-level radioactive waste burial site in Hanford, Wash., closed.

Cops win at Seabrook?

Editor's note: Joseph Gannon took part in a protest at the Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant last week. The following is the last of a two-part eyewitness account.

At 12:45 a spokespersons meeting was called to detail the plan. We would break down into three groups, Boston and Newbury Port on the left, the people who had come from the north side in the center, and Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide (SCANN) and other affinity groups on the right. We formed up in the woods adjoining the land we were staying on (our Cambodia as someone called it) and headed for the site.

Our first checkpoint was the south access road -- where there were no police lines. We crossed the road and moved across the old town dump to the fence. My affinity group was near the front of the crowd following some people carrying hooks and ropes.

As soon as we got close enough the Mace came. We took out our plastic sheets and kept moving. The people in front of me spread out their rope and hooked it onto the fence. At the command pull, we all ran backwards until the rope snapped. But there were others with bolt cutters and I could see some of the fence coming down.

When the fence had been pulled down enough for us to go in, the cops came out. I still remember vividly the look on one cop's face as he drew his club and stepped out over a piece of downed fence, like a defenseman who suddenly finds himself standing in front of an unprotected quarter back. We were about to be sacked.

What could we do? There was only a handful of them -- we outnumbered them 25 to 1 -- and yet we could not fight back. We were, are, and will be non-violent. We had no choice but to fall back in the face of their clubs and Mace.

We fell back to the south access road and sat down to lick our wounds. To halt traffic, some began erecting barricades. As I was standing there a reporter noticed the red cross on my back and asked me if I had anything for the Mace in his eyes. I did, and as I was treating his face it made me feel good to see these reporters among us instead of peering at us from behind the police lines.

The cops only gave us a short rest. As soon as they were on line with each other, they waded into us forcing us back into the woods. The cops forced us across the private property we had been staying on and out onto the railroad tracks.

Like a long line of refugees fleeing a nuclear meltdown, we trudged down the tracks. I had lost my affinity group so now, walking alone, I had time to think over what had just happened. The intensity of it. The frustration and anger I felt swelled in my eyes as tears but I forced them back.

There was only one place left for us to go -- the main gate. We walked up Route 1 to the honking cheers of passing cars. People came out and waved and shouted encouragement to us. People also came out and shouted curses at us.

When we arrived at the North Gate the cops were waiting for us. Shortly after our arrival the water trucks came. As soon as we saw the trucks pulling up we took out our

Groups attempt court reforms

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

Ralph Nader has been quoted as saying the nation's small claims courts are "either unavailable, unusable or invisible to a majority of American consumers."

This was not always the case. Small claims courts were designed to give the average citizen an inexpensive means of legal redress, without the necessity of a lawyer.

In the years since their establishment, the courts have gradually shifted away from the interests of the consumer, and today "exist as a collection agency for firms and businesses with attorneys," said John Pepi, staffer for the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group and director of the Small Claims Court Reform Project.

The project is a state-wide effort by MassPIRG and the Equal Justice Foundation, a group of lawyers and law students concerned with judicial reform. They will conduct a thorough study of courts this fall in an attempt to identify major problems, Pepi said. The information gathered will be analyzed and compiled into a study and series of legislative reform proposals, he said.

The inability of a plaintiff to collect judgments awarded once the case is successfully settled is a major problem, Pepi said. A "bureaucratic maze" exists into which the defendent can retreat and file costly and time-consuming appeals, he said. Under state law the plaintiff is not allowed to appeal an adverse judgment.

This method of appealing to avoid payment is precedented by the case of a former MassPirg staff member who successfully sued her auto mechanic for damages resulting from faulty repair work. The mechanic agreed to abide by the Northampton small claims court judge's decision, but after he was assessed $450 he reneged and filed for a jury trial. The case will be delayed at least one year while the MassPIRG staffer must hire a lawyer and prepare her case again.

Pepi is currently organizing MassPIRG's area research team, concentrating on Springfield and Northampton small claims courts. Six or seven students will be involved in docket searches, telephone interviews and circulating questionnaires in a concentrated effort to determine all pertinent facts in a particular case.

Other reform proposals mentioned by Pepi include banning attorneys from small claims courts, a practice eight states have already adopted. Collection agencies have been banned and corporate use restricted in many states, he added. One reform passed in Massachusetts in 1978 raised the maximum damages awarded from $400 to $750. The same bill extended court hours for better availability.

Russian Dept. sponsors study/tour of U.S.S.R.

The Russian Department at Amherst College is sponsoring a 3-week interterm study/tour to the Soviet Union. The tour is available to all faculty, staff and students in the Five College area. The itinerary includes extended visits to Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev, with a short excursion to the picturesque, ancient town of Sudzal.

Departure is from Kennedy Airport on December 30 with return flight on January 20. The tour cost is $957 and space must be reserved and travel deposits submitted before November 15. For information contact Professor Stanley Rabinowitz or Mrs. Barbara Smith, extension 2350, Amherst College.

Video art show to open at University Gallery

An exhibit of contemporary video art begins tomorrow in the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center. The exhibit, which will run through November 11, features videotapes by artists such as Nam Juin Paik, William Wegman and Lynda Benglis. For more information, call the gallery at 545-3670.

UMass prof to discuss effects of Soviet policies

"The Real Soviet Threat" will be the topic of a speech by UMass professor Marvin Kalkstein Thursday October 18 at 7:30 in Thompson 104. He will discuss the realities of present Soviet policies as they affect the U.S. and the rest of the world. The Five College Mobilization for Survival is sponsoring the speech.

Theater group sponsors art show about women

Violet Ray Theater Arts, Inc. of Northampton will present Kaymarion's Art Show, a visual exhibit and three-part slide/film show about women, Saturdays and Sundays through November, 7-10 p.m.

Tickets are available at the door for $2 per presentation, or in advance at Violet Ray and Womonfyre Books in Northampton.

Weekend programs include: "To Be a Lesbian," "To Be a Sister," "To Be a Mother," and "Whole Cycle Summary."

Feminists plan week for reproductive rights

The UMass Socialist Feminist Collective is sponsoring "Reproductive Rights Week," Oct. 20 to 27 in conjunction with the Hampshire County Abortion Rights Action Week.

The week is planned to bring attention to the encroachments on women's reproductive rights through sterilization abuse and ongoing attacks on women's access to safe, low-cost abortion. The week will be highlighted by a vigil, a speak-out, a rally and other political and educational events to support reproductive freedom. The vigil will open the week in a public gathering on Sunday, Oct. 21, at 6 p.m. in Pulaski Park, Main St., Northampton.

For information or to volunteer for organizing tasks, call 584-4160 or 256-6915.

Movie program offers award-winning films

The Free Film Program at 160 Main Street in Northampton is sponsoring three movies this week. Tonight "Canciones para Despues de una Guerra," directed by Basilio Maratin Patino, will be shown. Tomorrow night, "El amor del Capitan Brando," directed by Jamie de Arminan, will be shown, and on Thursday, "Las Truchas," an award-winning film by Jose Luis Garcia Sanchez, will be screened. All films are in Spanish with English subtitles.

Teaching students offered fellowships

Students interested in applying for Danforth Fellowships should contact Associate Dean James W. Shaw, South College 210. The Fellowships are for those wishing to obtain a Ph.D. and pursue a career in college teaching. Applicants must have a cumulative average of at least 3.5.

A maximum of five seniors or recent graduates and no more than five graduate students will be nominated. Recent graduates must enter the competition before doing graduate work and graduate applicants must hold an M.A. or have completed at least 24 graduate credits in a Ph.D. program. Application deadline is Oct. 22.

Craft demonstrations set at S.U. Craft Shop

There will be a demonstration of photo silk-screen printing, pewter work, brass etching, basket making and other crafts Friday in the student Union Craft Shop, lower level of the Student Union Building, Friday, Oct. 19, starting at 10 a.m.

Vigeland's recital changes date

A piano recital by composer/pianist Nils Vigeland originally scheduled today has been rescheduled for October 30 at 8:15 p.m. in Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall. There will be no charge for admission.

trusty plastic sheets and turned our backs to them. After about twenty minutes it was obvious that we were not about to move, so the hoses were rolled up and the trucks driven away.

My friends and I stood around soaking wet and shivering until around 5 p.m. and decided to call it a day. As we walked back to our camp I knew the seige was over. Tomorrow was Monday, many people would be going home and a legal rally had been scheduled. We had not slain the dragon but we had inflicted new wounds and helped keep old ones from healing.

The success of the attempted occupation of Seabrook must be measured in the international press coverage it received, in the number of new people it brought into the movement and, for a financially troubled Seabrook, another barrier in the way of completion.

If the October 6 demonstration did nothing else it taught us valuable lessons we will need to know when we go back. And we will go back.

Morality reigning on pontiff

Lisa Capone

"The Church supports 'Right to Life' " was the prevailing theme of Pope John Paul II's U.S. tour last week.

His Holiness was obviously referring to the bilogical right life—that of an unborn child. But, what about right to life in a less literal sense; that is, the right to enjoy one's life and make one's own life choices? John Paul clearly did not speak to this issue.

In fact, he is probably the most vocal anti-feminist to ever receive so much support from the contemporary American public—men and women alike. The Pope is against abortion, contraception, sex education, extramarital sex, homosexuality, and divorce. Let's see now, what's left?

Well, to insure her place in Heaven, according to the Pope, a Catholic woman must refrain from sex until marriage, and must repress her natural feelings forever if she is a lesbian. Assuming she marries, she may not use any birth control because the Church deems it sinful. So, if she has a career, the woman lives under the constant fear of a pregnancy that would delay if not terminate her career plans. If she does become pregnant, she has no option but to bear the child because abortion is a mortal sin. Thus, she must sacrifice conflicting life choices for a child she may not have even planned to have.

When the child is school-aged, the woman must keep her son or daughter from receiving sex education. The theory is "if they don't know about it, they won't do it." The theory is very inaccurate. Hopefully though, the good Catholic child will reach adulthood without venereal disease or an unwanted pregnancy.

Now, the woman is essentially childless again. She may want to pursue her former career or return to school. After all, there's not much left but pots and pans now that the children are grown. Let's say, however, this woman unfortunately has a selfish husband who can't understand his wife wanting to "broaden her horizons." In fact, the situation gets so bad the woman wishes she could leave him. But she is Catholic, and the Pope says "no divorce."

What I'd like to know is, who is the Pope to make all these judgements on our social practices. His image as a perfect human being is completely blown out of proportion. He was not sent to us by God. He was chosen by men, by human beings. And he, the Pope, is just another human being like the rest of us.

Therefore, we, being made of the same stuff as Pope John Paul II, are equally able to make our own life decisions, especially those as important as contraception, abortion, and divorce. Let's stop believing in someone else's idealized beliefs, and start believing in ourselves.

Stein's article 'overwhelming'

To the Editor

Last night I read the article by Rob Stein entitled "My Friend and I" to some friends of mine. Their reaction, I'm sure was not unique to anyone that read it. Besides being very impressed by the higher level of consciousness your piece reflected, they were really overwhelmed by the fact that through your article you managed to illuminate the most obvious forms of harassment experienced by women...on a daily life basis.

To say the least, your article restored a lot of faith I was steadily losing. To know that there are men with your attitude, understanding and concern makes it much easier to walk by an ignorant comment or gesture. Please keep reminding your readers of the battle women are struggling with...For through your words it's obvious we're winning.

Handicap more than a word

To the Editor

Have you ever considered how difficult the UMass campus is to tackle as a handicapped student? The university is one of the few schools in Massachusetts which is equipped for handicapped students. Renovations on the physical sense are progressing slowly; attitudinally the progress is even slower.

Handicapped students live in an isolated world. The two dormitories equipped for the physically handicapped have a designated "handicapped" floor. The handicapped floor is the ground floor which is the smallest, usually the quietest floor, and half are handicapped. Their contact with university life consists of, the classroom, the D.C., and the handicapped floor.

The non-handicapped students at this university are actually the handicapped. Attitudinally they must adjust. Some stare blankly, others piercingly, it is these people that must learn to adapt. Friendship is a common basic need of all human beings.

Unclench your hand and extend it.

Wright, Nojeim both show fault

To the Editor

I agree with one remark made by Lawrence M. Wright in his editorial of October 11. Stephen Nojeim's earlier editorial did show fault. Unfortunately, Mr. Wright's shows even more. The disturbing thing is that, unlike Nojeim, Wright's eighteenth century ideas do not stem from a total lack of familiarity with the issues involved. They stem rather from a total lack of concern for others, a blatant, unabashed selfishness.

Mr. Wright dares to talk about morality. He asks: what kind of moral cannibal would advocate distributing wealth in order for "others to survive?"

I ask: what kind of selfish bastard would not be willing to sacrifice some of his precious property to prevent his neighbor from starving to death?

Use 'flower contact paper'

To the Editor

There's been a lot of talk lately about some bricks falling off the library. They went to all the trouble of moving 60,000 books into Goodell Hall. Why all the fuss? Why not just take off the old bricks and put something new up? We think that those plastic bricks would be nice.

Or, how about some wood paneling, or maybe some wallpaper? There's flowered contact paper—why, they could even paint it green!

Southwest College & the U.N.: Peace, love & understanding?

Elved Owens

People explain Southwest by saying it's full of freshmen, as if 'freshman' was shorthand for the half-witted and pathologically noisy. It is supposed to explain why egomaniacs play their hi-fi's at an absurdly high volume, or why Neanderthal types reguiarly drop bottles, televisions and (it will happen one day) room-mates from their windows. Excuses are made for them: youthful high spirits of souls intoxicated on freedom (and God knows what else), no longer subject to a stern parental eye, or (a good one this), irrepressible energy releasing itself after a hard day's study.

True, there are 5,000 people packed into Southwest, and such a small-town population is bound to produce a bit of noise, some of it occasionally excessive. And as the Heads of Residence recently admitted when they instituted their 'quiet hours' policy, adopting the tone of the U.N. delegate after a hard day, there is no way that peace can be enforced.

In fact the parallel with the U.N. is an interesting one (which doesn't say much for the U.N.)..How many times has a session of that body nodded its agreement as some nonentity at the podium has droned on about peace and justice and fairness and compassion, in a speech that he might dare not make at home?

If the truth has feet at the U.N. they never dare touch the ground. And coming down from the less than sublime to the more than ridiculous, how often have you met a Southwest resident who said he or she liked noise; who loved smashing bottles; who couldn't wait to start screaming at night; who thought lighting firecrackers and setting off the fire alarm was incredibly witty; who thought music could not be enjoyed at anything less than 2000 decibals; who said he or she didn't give a damn for anyone as long as he/she got his/her own way?

For the best of reasons no-one wishes to do anything practical - and probably highly inflammatory - about tackling the imbeciles in Southwest who regularly cause disruption. The far-sighted policy of neutering their parents, for instance, would raise an almighty stink. The result is that in the towers noise has become institutionalized; residents are resigned to it as a fact of life, like rainfall or constipation.

And unable to do anything about some noise, there is little that the individual can do about the loudest. There is so much deliberate and unnecessary noise that the act of knocking on a single door and complaining becomes almost irrational, in the face of mass resignation to what is regarded as inevitable. There is no longer any incentive for anyone to make an effort to be quiet; when everyone is pissing in the swimming-pool, so the thinking goes, then why shouldn't I? I can't make things worse and I'm not going to be stopped, so what the hell.

The fact is that at present unacceptable levels of disruption are such a way of life, the sort of thing palsied seniors tell their grandchildren about, that to create noise is no disgrace, and anyone who comes to Southwest feeling no guilt about disturbing others' peace will probably leave having learned no better. And who is surprised at this when there is no peace, and noisemakers remain unchallenged?

The issue is the basic one of mutual respect; hardly a wild and fanciful idea for the most materially fortunate youth on the face of the earth, and an ideal that students lose no time in demanding from the world and its governments.

If anyone in Southwest wishes to defend present disruption I would like to hear his or her arguments. If there are no arguments beyond the useless que sera sera variety, then let everyone think twice before smashing that bottle, rousing up that hi-fi, and turning a community of adults into a bear garden.

And as for the student for whom thinking even once is a novel experience, let the rest of us spoil the bliss of his ignorance every time he spoils our peace.

Town Meeting allocates funds for program using UM interns

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Town Meeting last night appropriated $2,500 to finance a pilot housing inspection program which would use UMass Environmental Health students as interns.

The program is scheduled to start in the spring and will utilize two to four interns who will be trained by appropriate town officials, said Assistant Town Manager Donald Jacobs.

The Town Meeting also appropriated $4,500, despite objections from the Finance Committee, for the Conservation Commission to buy more land for conservation purposes. The committee, in a report to town meeting members, stated that there are "serious uncertainties" in Amherst's Fiscal Year '81 budget, including a tax limitation plan and potential loss of Federal Revenue Sharing monies. The committee wanted the money to be held in reserve until the May Town meeting, according to the report.

The Town Meeting appropriated $20,000 for preliminary planning and engineering to develop a sanitary landfill on Belchertown Road. This action authorizes the Town Manager to apply for and accept any state or federal grants to complete the work.

The Town Meeting also appropriated $7,500 to spend on an eroding bank on Pine and State Streets. There is dnger to underlying utility lines and the possibility of a partial road collapse, engineers warn, if trees are not removed, holes filled in and a storm drain pipe extended before the January thaw.

$17,600 was appropriated for support services to the elderly who live in the congregate housing project. The entire amount will be reimbursed by the state Department of Elder Affairs.

The Town Meeting restored $2,800 to after-school athletic programs at the the town's four elementary schools. The Finance Committee supported the restoral while selectmen opposed it, both on a split vote. The article was sponsored by the Crocker Farms Parents Council.

The Town Meeting rescinded May town meeting action authorizing construction of a water main on Nurit Road and in a separate article approved a new plan which would extend the main to one house instead of two with a contribution of $1,027 by the owner. No additional town funds would be required.

The Town Meeting also appropriated $2,662 for renovations at the Bangs Community Center consisting mostly of office signs and handicap signs and possibly office equipment.

The meeting was adjourned at approximately 10:30 after 12 articles has been considered. The remaining nine articles will be considered at a special second town meeting scheduled to begin at 7:30 tomorrow night. This second meeting was scheduled at the request of 200 petitioners for three late-filed articles. The nine remaining articles on the original town warrant will be considered first.

UMass Dean of Students William F. Fields moderated the meeting.

Legislature aims to halt cutbacks in state spending

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Legislature, still resentful of welfare cutbacks the Dukakis administration imposed during the last recession, advanced a sweeping bill yesterdayaimed at preventing similar spending halts in the future.

The Senate gave first-round approval to the measure on a 29-7 vote, easily defeating several Republican attempts to weaken the bill or delay it. The bill faces several more tests in the upper chamber and then the House before it reaches the governor.

The measure requires the governor to inform the Legislature whenever he intends to impound part or all of an appropriation. The lawmakers would then have the option of countermanding the governor's order within 45 days.

If the governor still insisted on the impoundment, he would be free to veto the countermanding legislation. But the Legislature would have the final say if it could muster the normal two-thirds majority to override the veto.

The chief drafter and advocate of the bill is Sen. Chester G. Atkins, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee. The Concord Democrat called his proposal a "truth in budgeting act," saying it would force the executive branch to reveal its fiscal strategy for coping with the next recession.

"Mark my words, there'll be impoundments this year," said Atkins, warning of a potential budget crunch if the state's economy deteriorates.

However, Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, said the bill would hamper any attempt by the governor to economize.

"I can't believe the chairman of Senate Ways and Means could devise such a set of hurdles to place in the path of a governor trying to save the taxpayers money," Locke said. "...Rather than laying down roadblocks, we ought to be strewing the path with flowers."

Fellow Republican Robert C. Buell of Boxford objected that the bill co.ntained no definition of an impoundment. He said it could be interpreted in such a way that a governor would have to spend every penny in each budget item.

Another section of the bill requires the governor to tell the Legislature if a budget deficit is developing and give it a plan for remedying the situation.

"This will avoid the kind of problem we faced in 1975, when nobody would own up," Atkins said. He referred to a fiscal crisis that prompted the Dukakis administration to curtail spending on various social welfare programs and drew protests by many advocacy groups.

ENGINEERING & COMPUTER SCIENCE MAJORS

TALK TO BOEING FACE TO FACE

If you're about to graduate with an engineering or computer science degree, we'd like to talk to you about your future.

Will it be in commercial jetliners? We're building two new planes — the 767 and 757. While the orders for 727s, 737s and 747s keep coming from all over the world.

Perhaps you'd like to get into the aerospace field, where we have more projects going than you can shake a calculator at.

Or maybe you'll help us provide computer services to over 2,000 clients, including government, private industry, commercial airplanes and aerospace.

Whatever path you take at Boeing, you'll enjoy living in Seattle — one of America's most beautiful cities.

BOEING WILL BE ON CAMPUS SOON.

Boeing will be here within the next two weeks. So sign up for your interview today in the Placement Office.

Then we can tell you in person about all the opportunities you'll have to grow with Boeing.

If this time is inconvenient for you, just write us: The Boeing Company, P.O. Box 3707-VPM, Seattle, WA 98124.

Two OPEC members may cause price hike

By MARK POTTS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Oil industry sources said yesterday that Libya and Iran were raising the prices of their crude oil, putting more pressure on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries for a general price rise.

Analysts said the price increases by the two nations could add a penny or two to the price of a gallon of gasoline or heating oil in the United States. Libya and Iran provide about 10 percent of the oil used by the U.S.

President Carter has repeatedly blamed much of the country's current inflation on increases in the price of foreign oil.

Libya, which supplies about 5 percent of the oil used by the United States, raised its price for crude oil yesterday by $2.77 a barrel, or 12 percent, to between $25.57 and $26.27 a barrel, depending on the quality of the oil. Libya produces some of the world's best oil, ideal for making gasoline.

Iran raised the price of its best-quality oil by $1.50 a barrel, to $23.50 a barrel, and its lower-quality crude by $2.87 to $22.77 a barrel, retroactive to Oct. 1. Although these prices did not violate the $23.50-a-barrel ceiling set by OPEC, analysts said they were significant because Saudi Arabia, OPEC's biggest member, sells oil similar to Iran's best for $18 a barrel.

At OPEC's last meeting in June, the cartel decided on official prices ranging from $18 to $23.50 a barrel, and members pledged to try to keep from exceeding the $23.50-a-barrel level. But there have been hints in recent weeks that the ceiling might be weakening.

Prices on the spot market, where oil not sold at the official price under long-term contracts changes hands, have risen to almost $40 a barrel in recent days, and several OPEC nations, wishing to cash in on the more lucrative prices there, have been diverting more of their production to spot sales. The ceiling price does not apply to sales on the spot market.

The Iranian and Libyan increases followed by a few days a 10 percent jump by another OPEC member, Kuwait, apparently signaling that another round of price increases by individual OPEC members is in the offing.

Similar rounds of leapfrogging increases preceded OPEC's last two general price increases, in March and June. The cartel is scheduled to meet in Caracas, Venezuela, in December.

Spikers travel to New Haven

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women spikers of UMass travel to the University of New Haven tonight for a tri-match against New Haven and Central Connecticut.

According to UMass coach Elaine Marasco, the extensive road schedule is taking a toll on the team, but "the team is looking forward to playing Central Conn., and also the UConn match coming up this weekend."

Last year, the Minutewomen hosted New Haven and Central Conn. at NOPE gym; UMass defeated New Haven, but lost to CC in a decisive sweep (11-5, 2-15).

"So far (after Springfield), we've played teams that don't play that well," said Marasco, "but all these teams have been out to get us. With the problems we've been having, this makes for a tough time for us. However, we've managed to learn from our mistakes, and when we start playing the tougher teams on our schedule, we'll be ready."

Meanwhile, the JV's evened their record to 1-1 last Saturday as they swept the MIT junior varsity, 15-9,15-9,15-10. They face Mount Holyoke College October 25.

Women booters face Williams

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Coming off a fine performance against Cortland State last Saturday, the UMass women's soccer team will face Williams College on the lower NOPE fields today at 3:00 p.m.

UMass coach Arnie Morse expects the rest of the team's opponents "to be as tough as our last two, which were Vermont and Cortland. From now on, everyone will be after us; we'll have to play as tough and aggressively as we had to against Cortland. Defensively, we must get to the ball, instead of waiting for the pass. Offensively, we're OK; we know we can score when we have to."

Minutewomen player Nina Holmstrom patrolled the midfield well against Cortland; she stole and intercepted whenever CS started to surge upfield. Other players expected to do well against the Ephwomen include Natalie Prosser, who scored three goals in UMass' 6-2 win over Cortland, Kelly Tuller, who stopped all but two shots while at net Saturday, and Margie Anderson, who bootd two goals for UMass against Cortland.

The game against Williams marks the second game of a four-game homestand for UMass. Mount Holyoke and Brown are scheduled to come later this week.

Palmer vs. Candelaria in Game 6

Pirates punch carries nasty kick for O's

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Pirate punch, a vital element in the success of the National League champions this season, has forced the 1979 World Series between Pittsburgh and the Baltimore Orioles to a sixth game tonight.

The Bucs, still trailing the series 3-2, will send left-hander John Candelaria, the loser in Game Three, against Baltimore's Jim Palmer, who started Game Two but was not involved in the decision.

Palmer's problem will be bottling up the marauding Pirate bats. Pittsburgh set a World Series record for hits by a losing team with 17 in Game Four. The Pirates added 13 in winning Game Five Sunday and forcing a return to Baltimore.

The Pirate infield is batting a lusty .423, with second baseman Phil Garner and Bill Madlock at .500 each on 9-for-18 through the first five games. First baseman Willie Stargell is at .381 and shortstop Tim Foli is batting .333.

Overall, Pittsburgh has manhandled the Baltimore pitching staff with a Series batting average of .339 with 61 hits in 180 at-bats. The Orioles, on the other hand, are batting almost 100 points less than that, at .251, on 43-for-171.

Madlock had four singles and Foli drilled a triple and a single, driving in three runs, in the 7-1 victory Sunday that kept Pirate hopes alive.

The Orioles are trying to figure out a way to deal with those lively Pittsburgh bats.

"We haven't been able to yet," admitted Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver. "What do they have, 65 hits?"

Weaver has another problem, with relief ace Don Stanhouse sidelined for the remainder of the Series with a pulled muscle in his lower back. Stanhouse, who led the Orioles with 21 saves, appeared in two games in the Series and was hit freely, allowing five hits and three runs in two innings.

Weaver said he didn't think Pittsburgh's victory in Game Five would switch that baseball intangible called momentum.

"You know what I think about momentum?" he began. "If Palmer goes out and pitches a good game and gets the ball by Madlock and some others, there's no such thing as momentum."

Palmer, often an adversary of his manager, thought the secret to wrapping up this Series for the Orioles centered on Baltimore's bats, not its pitchers.

"Obviously, we're going to have to outhit them," the veteran right-hander said. "As far as I'm concerned, they're all good hitters. You've got to respect all of them. They all hit."

The Orioles, of course, have learned that the hard way.

"They saw the real Pirates for the first time," chortled Foli after Game Five.

It wasn't just the timely hitting, but clutch fielding and tight pitching as well. Now, Pittsburgh must try and repeat that performances Tuesday night to force a seventh game showdown.

Weaver's foe could become Earl's friend

By GORDON BEARD

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jim Palmer has been known to infuriate his manager and upset the Baltimore fans.

But all past transgressions, real or imagined, will be forgotten when the veteran righthander takes the mound tonight with a chance to wrap up the 1979 World Series for the Orioles.

"I'm happy we got him ready," said Manager Earl Weaver, who has engaged in numerous shouting matches with Palmer over the years. "The last time out, he said he felt good."

Palmer, who turned 34 on Monday, was bothered by various arm, back and shoulder problems during the regular season and won only 10 games after topping the 20-victory mark in eight of the previous nine years. But he has been healthy in recent weeks.

Jim Palmer: Weaver's friend or enemy? (AP Laserphoto)

In his seventh World Series start, in the second game last Thursday, he allowed Pittsburgh eight hits and two runs in seven innings before the Pirates won 3-2 in the ninth.

"It's nice to have his knowledge and experience out there," Weaver said of Palmer, who has a 3-1 World Series record with a 3.13 earned run average for 54 23 innings pitched.

"Pitching against Pittsburgh once before is going to help," Weaver said. "He's going to have his own ideas about what he's going to do. I just hope we get him some runs ... early."

"These guys can be pitched to," Palmer said of the Pirates, who have rapped out 61 hits for a team batting average of .339. "I learned some things against them last week that I don't care to go into now. I'll tell you one thing. I'll have to change speeds on them more this time."

Catcher Rick Dempsey recalled that in the last game, Palmer "stuck mostly with his hard stuff, trying to keep it out of their power zone, and I can't remember that he threw too many changeups."

"Jimmy's the most experienced of all the pitchers on our staff," Dempsey said. "If he has a good game, he's the one guy who could throw a two or three-hitter against these guys."

Netwomen overcome weather for double win

By DAVE SIVRET
Collegian Staff

The weather proved to be a much tougher problem for the women's tennis team than their opponents on the courts. When they finally found a couple of days "suitable" for tennis they took full advantage of them and defeated both of their opponents and pushed their season's record over .500 for the first time this year. Both Springfield College and Southern Conn. fell to the Minutewomen in this stretch.

The match against Springfield was a closely fought match that saw UMass pull out the victory in the last match of the day. At the Sylvan courts only eight matches can be played at once so the last match of the day is played after all the other matches have been finished.

Against Springfield the first eight matches ended in a 4-4 tie. This left the fate of the match in the hands of the doubles team of Carolyn Tarbell and Beth Noble. With the fans and team members of both squads looking on, the women from UMass came on to take the individual match and the team match. It went three sets and the final score was 6-4, 3-6, 6-2.

"For the first time this year we really played like a true team. Everyone was pulling for each other and on the whole it was a very encouraging match," stated a pleased Coach John Beal.

To call the weather for the Southern Conn. match suitable is really rather a loose usage of the word. The temperatures were in the low 40's and it seemed as though it was going to rain or snow at any minute. To quote Coach John Beal, the players were engaged in a match of "polar tennis." The weather was no deterrent to the play of the netwomen as they rolled over the women from Connecticut to the tune of 9 to 0, with no one really having much trouble with her opponent.

After these two encouraging wins, the netwomen are launching themselves into a rigorous schedule in an attempt to make up the four matches that they lost on account of the inclimate weather. This week they are hosting the B.U. Terriers and the UConn Huskies.

Both of these schools have good teams and wins over both, especially B.U., would be a major accomplishment. Hopefully the weather will take a turn for the better and provide the Minutewomen with a chance to show their true talent and capture a couple of matches. The UConn match is the 17th and the B.U. tussle the following day. Both will be held at home.

Alternative Series

BLUEWALL — If you've watched that abomination called the ABC World Serious between the Big Disco Canaries and the Phospherescent Orioles this (and last) week, you've seen what an emotional castration the thing is. Except if, heaven forbid, you happen to live in either Pittsburgh or Baltimore.

I mean look at the World Series, 1979 version. The most exciting thing so far has been watching the Baltimore grounds crew sop up the torrential downpour with towels and mops. Sort of looks like a party that someone invited a weak-stomached freshman to. They might as well play the damn thing in Cominsky Park.

And those mental midgets from ABC. Watching Howard (I hated baseball until I got paid for broadcasting it) Cosell, Keith Jackson, and Don Drysdale do a baseball game is about as exciting as, well, a Monday night in the Blue Wall. Or golf, for that matter.

Give us the guy from the Money Store.

Bruce Kison — we've already seen Bruce Kison make a fool of himself in the Fall Follies (1971 vs. the, yawn, Orioles). The only good thing that can be said for this one is that both teams have really neat and keen uniforms. And Mike Flanagan is in it.

That's why there should be an Alternative World Series. No, don't stage the fall classic between two teams of no-nukers or sets of 25 competing Bill Lee clones. Rather it should be a game or series of games that mean something more than which team of already over-priced hot-shots are getting even more 2nd more bucks.

I mean really now. Look at the two teams. Pittsburgh Pirates against Baltimore Orioles. Is there any rivalry there? Is there any hate there? Is there a seething battle between Ed Ott and Rick Dempsey?, If this game was played in Spring Training or something, no one but a few 79-year old geriatrics would even go to it.

So how about making the series a game that really means something, not just an athletic pantomime of one's first date — a ritual of unsure feeling and prodding that is over before you know it. Take, for instance, the real world series of 1978, when the Reggies played the Sox in the Game of October 2nd. So many memories from that one:

Bucky Dent's plip of a home run. Piniella dramatically battling the sun and that jerk in right field waving the program in his face: The Rooster holding at second. The Yaz pole-hugger. The close-ups of Goose Gossage's fat face staring down Cold Cut Rice. Thanks Corrine.

I'm a Yankees fan and even I don't remember very much from the subsequent excursions against the Royals and Dodgers.

The only useful thing that the World Series did was take Cosell off last night's Monday Night Football game.

Or how about an old Giants-Dodgers game when they were in Manhattan and Flatbush, respectively. Or even when they moved to California. Remember Juan Marichal, Johnny Roseboro and two Louisville Slugger 42 ounce jobs? Once more, with feeling!

Unless you happen to be rooting for your hometown team, the World Series isn't very exciting. Even when you are it can be an exercize in tedium. I remember watching my long suffering Yankees freeze through the 1976 extravaganza with the Polyester Reds. I had been a charter member of the Horace Clarke Yankee fans, the Jake Gibbs Yankee fans, the Curt (Yagggggg$$) Blefery Yankee fans, but I had to watch them go down the Redlegs (in Bellingham, Mass., no less) in weather that could freeze the nuts of a brass monkey.

The simple fact is this: when drama and excitement is staged and choreographed it comes off with the punch of a wet noodle. Look at the Oakland A's, in the major league years 72-73-74. Except for the Mike Andrews fiasco (Duh!), these series hit new heights of boredom. One of the most exciting teams in sports history became junior executives for IBM once they get in series.

And I'm watching Monday Night Footbore at the Wall. Don Meredith says: "turn in tomorrow for the exciting World Series."

Garage:

Repairs begin again as new leaks surface

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Repair work on the Campus Center Garage is scheduled to begin "within a matter of days" and should take about a month, Physical Plant Director George Norton said yesterday.

In response to a rumor that the garage might be closed this winter, Norton said, "There is no thought of closing it."

At a bid meeting on Oct. 10, a single bid of $40,000 was submitted by Desco Products of Conn., Inc., a West Haven, Conn. based construction firm. Desco is the firm that performed similar repairs on the crack-plagued structure last fall.

There were bids for the repair job at that time for $71,880, $59,000, and a low $23,854 by Desco. Change orders during the repairs brought Desco's bid up to $55,625. This change included $29,309 worth of repairs not included in the original specifications.

A report to the UMass Building Authority dated July 27, 1979 states that some of the work done last fall is "already leaking and cracking." The report also states that "the deterioration, particularly at the entrance to the stairwells, had started as early as January."

Although the repairs that held were considered to have brought the beams back to original strength, the report states, "It would be better if they were twice the original strength, for they will continue to crack."

In addition to the problems with the Campus Center garage, a recently obtained report shows the location and nature of leaks in the Campus Center Terrace. Diagrams by Construction Consultants, Inc. were obtained by Michael Pill, an attorney with the Legal Services Office, under the Freedom of Information Act. The diagrams show that the leaks are caused by a fallen waterproof membrane underneath the bluestone cover of the terrace.

Leaks in the terrace were the subject of a letter dated March 26, 1976 from Physical Plant engineer E.J. Ryan to UMass Building Authority member Morris Goldings. The letter states, "In regards to the terrace area, since the completion of the Campus Center and even subsequent to acceptance of the building, we have been plagued with numerous water leaks emanating from the area beneath the blue stone."

Both the Campus Center Terrace and Garage are currently under investigation by the Ward Commission in Boston, a watchdog agency established to examine state college and university structures.

NASA grants UMass $1.6M for space study

By LEROY C. HASSEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has received a $1.6 million grant from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to build a radiotelescope which will detect the presence of oxygen in space, UMass officials have announced.

The UMass project is one of 40 chosen by NASA from over 200 proposals submitted by universities, corporations and foreign countries. The projects are being developed for a series of space shuttles planned for the mid 1980's, according to Rich Shanor, a UMass spokesman.

Shanor said the NASA grant is the largest single science grant UMass has ever received.

Staff and professors from the UMass Electrical Engineering and Radioastronomy Departments will work jointly on the radiotelescope, which is scheduled to be completed by 1984.

According to Electrical Engineering Professor R. Sigfrid Yngvesson, director of the project, the radiotelescope will focus on radio wave lengths from oxygen molecules in space. It will be mounted in a laboratory to be transported into space by the Orbitor space shuttle and then brought back to earth again, he said.

The detection of oxygen in space has been impossible before this, Yngesson said, because radiotelescopes on earth are hindered by the oxygen in the surrounding atmosphere. The radiotelescope on the Orbitor space shuttle will transcend earth's atmosphere and get a clear reading, he said.

If oxygen is found there is a possibility that it could support some life forms, Yngvesson said.

The radiotelescope, which will measure about 10 feet in diameter, will be able to project into space "hundreds and thousands of light years away," he said. "We're talking about clouds bigger than our whole galaxy."

According to Shanor, the space shuttle radiotelescope will be similar to one now located at Quabbin Resevoir and operated by the Five-College science community. However, the Quabbin radiotelescope, thought by many to be the most sensitive instrument of its kind, measures carbon dioxide in space rather than oxygen.

Shanor said the UMass Radioastronomy Department, which helped design the Quabbin radiotelescope, is considered the best department of its kind in the country by authorities.

"NASA asked UMass to apply for the grant," he said.

Details of the contract are still being worked out, Shanor said, but work on the project should begin soon.

US economists win Nobel

STOCKHOLM (AP) — An American and a West Indian who teaches in the United States were jointly awarded the 1979 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science yesterday for their work to improve economic and "human" conditions, including women's liberation, in developing nations.

Theodore W. Schultz, 47, of the University of Chicago, and Sir Arthur Lewis, 64, the West Indian native and British subject who teaches at Princeton University, "both have extensive practical experience of development problems and are deeply concerned about the need and poverty in the world and how to find ways out of under-development," the academy said in a citation.

China—Soviet talks lagging

PEKING (AP) — Vice Foreign Minister Han Nianlong yesterday told seven American governors that China was not expecting much progress from the current Chinese-Soviet talks.

The veteran diplomat, just back from leading the Chinese delegation to the United Nations, said China has no great hopes of making any important progress in the talks, which began recently in Moscow.

The conferees have not yet agreed on an agenda, he said.

Han, the chief Chinese negotiator in China-Vietnam talks being held here, painted a particularly black picture of the situation in Indochina where, he said, the refugee problem is desperate.

Carter campaign boosted as Chicago mayor lends support

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press

CHICAGO — President Carter, ending a two-day trip to the Midwest, condemned Cuban military activities yesterday and expressed delight over Mayor Jane Byrne's near-endorsement of his re-election.

Carter came to Chicago on uncertain political ground with the city's Democratic leaders, but he returned to Washington with a suprisingly strong statement of support from Mrs. Byrne.

Although he did not get a firm endorsement for his expected bid for another term, Carter did get Mrs. Byrne's assertion at her fundraising dinner Monday night that if the decision were to be made now, she would vote for him.

And the Chicago mayor made a pointed reference to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who is considering a challenge to Carter for the Democratic presidential nomination, issuing a warning "to those who would divide the Democratic Party."

Before departing for Washington, the president held a "town meeting" with residents of suburban Dolton, Ill. He assured the audience gathered in a high school gymnasium that inflation would ease by the end of the year.

He also encouraged the use of newly-arrived gasohol—a mixture of 90 percent unleaded gasoline and 10 percent grain alcohol—as a means to save gas.

And he criticized Cuba as "the most highly militarized country on Earth per capita." The Cubans, he said, are "constantly interfering" with the affairs of other countries.

Carter said the Cubans have more than 45,000 troops in countries where "they have absolutely no business."

The United States will not move to establish normal diplomatic relations with the island nation until Cuba ends its involvement in the affairs of other countries and until the regime of President Fidel Castro releases "hundreds and hundreds, even thousands," of political prisoners.

Carter expressed delight at the level of support he received from Mrs. Byrne and the city's powerful Democratic apparatus, calling the mayor's remarks "perfect." He added: "I really did appreciate it."

Mrs. Byrne did not come away empty-handed, either. Carter used the opportunity to announce several programs beneficial to Chicago and to Mrs. Byrne's administration. For instance, he announced that the Air Force would vacate a facility at O'Hare Airport so an international terminal can be built there. Mrs. Byrne had been working to take over the defense facility there for some time.

In addition, Carter announced plans for federal funding of more than 1,300 city government jobs.

Asked if he had expected a formal endorsement, Carter replied: "I think that was enough." Mrs. Byrne interrupted to say that she had gone as far as she could without incurring the anger of the chairman of the Cook County Democratic Party.

Mrs. Byrne, a longtime friend of the Kennedy family, surprised even White House aides on Monday night when she issued a thinly veiled warning to the Massachusetts senator that a fight over the Democratic presidential nomination was illadvised.

Agriculture secy backs farmers

By NORM WHITEHURST
Collegian Staff

In a press conference and question-answer session held last night at the Campus Center, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Robert Bergland strongly supported President Carter's policies on farming and pledged to investigate problems small farmers are currently facing.

"Because the president is a farmer, he understands the problems of agriculture," Bergland said.

A number of programs have been formed by Bergland, including The Center for Human Nutrition and a study on transportation problems of grain. These programs, according to Bergland, are intended to improve human nutrition and find ways to lower transportation costs.

Bergland said Carter's policies will be different than those of his predecessors in that he will be more careful with Russian grain sales. In 1972, the United States gave away billions of dollars of grain to Russia, and Carter is seeing to it that this will never happen again, Bergland said.

Friday, Carter will announce his agricultural policies which include doing away with crop control. For the first time in years, farmers will be allowed to produce as much as they want.

When asked if grain could be used as an effective weapon against rising oil prices, Bergland stated that the grain was "no weapon whatsoever.

"We need oil more than they need grain. If a time comes when we no longer need their oil, a bargain may be brought up."

Many area farmers were present at the session and all posed the question, "What is the future of small farms?" Bergland replied that of the 2.8 million farms in the United States, 1.6 million are small farms. These farms produce only ten percent of the food in the markets and are slowly being stamped out by the larger, more stable corporations, he said. The government will not purposely subsidize these corporations, but, Bergland added, "Technology has changed farming."

The Carter adminstration has formed a Rural Development Policy which will provide jobs for these small farmers. There will be hearings on Nov. 27 in Montpelier, Vt. to discuss the problems of small farmers. Bergland will be present at the hearings.

Bergland called camplaints by New England governors about the high cost of shipping grain from the West and Midwest "valid." He said a new relocation plan is being worked out which will move grain to the New England area for storage.

Bergland said he felt that he and the Carter administration are doing their best to meet with the demands of farmers and consumers.

"Because the President is a farmer he understands the problems of agriculture."

Gripe method sought for sexual harassment

By JOYCE C. MUNROE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Women's Issues Team reiterated the need yesterday for a sexual harassment grievance procedure for University students and employees.

The group, part of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, is now gathering evidence to establish a grievance procedure which would include testimonies from women on campus who have been sexually harassed at work or in the classroom.

According to Ellie Bagli who chaired yesterday's meeting, the need for a grievance procedure at UMass "came out of the group's idea that sexual harassment at UMass is a pressing problem."

She recalled the team's first meeting when several members said they knew women on campus who had been sexually harassed. Since investigations began, many other women have revealed similar incidents of sexual harassment at UMass.

"This is not something that's just happening at UMass," Bagli said. She cited as an example a recent case at a state university where a black female student charged her white male professor with sexual harassment after he said he'd give her an A if she went to bed with him. She lost the case and received a C for the course, Bagli said.

Bagli recalls a personal experience she had in a radio communications class while attending the University of Maryland.

"The professor insisted on calling a certain piece of equipment a joy stick," she said. "I was the only woman in the class."

One member of the team said a campus policeman told her one of the biggest sexual harassment problems at UMass concerns women graduate students who are harassed by members of their dissertation committees.

The group is currently working with the Ombudsman's office, which is developing a general grievance procedure for students and university employees.

In other matters, the women discussed their upcoming newsletter and a march against pornography scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 20 in New York City.

Two buses to the march will be leaving from the Campus Center and tickets are available at the SCERA office.

According to one member of the team, the march, organized by a New York-based group called Women Against Pornography, is an attempt to "make women more aware of pornography as a feminist issue."

Two campus groups seek improved landscape plans

By KARIN HOLMES
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors is competing with the University's Campus Landscape Improvement Project for better designs to improve the grounds on campus, particularly the area around the Campus Center and Student Union Building.

According to board member John Furbish, the board proposed its project—Environmental Design Project—because it feels the University's CLIP landscaping plans "are inadequate and don't fill the needs of the campus and students."

The board is a student-based organization which focuses on the areas around and including the Campus Center and Student Union Building. CLIP was developed by the UMass Planning Office and the Department of Landscape Architecture.

"We want to make better plans and be specific so that the designs put emphasis on serving the public," Furbish said. "We feel these areas need planning to service the extreme volume of traffic by walkers, yet still have areas to sit and eat lunch, provide play areas for the children of students, have ramps for the handicapped and even hold rhododendron gardens or whatever."

The competition with CLiP has taken the form of a contest where students can submit ideas. The board is sponsoring this contest to find better designs for the specified areas of nine sites.

"Especially a better plan for the circle in front of the SUB," Furbish pointed out. CLIP wants to make this a plaza. We don't like their plans."

The Environmental Design Project and CLIP do agree on some matters, Furbish said, such as more walking paths and a possible outdoor cafe and barbecue pit on Metawampee Lawn.

Black Affairs

"Homeland" a drama about apartheid

By KAREN THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

Any drama about South African apartheid and U.S. racism that could have the audience laughing is definitely unique. "Homeland" presented by the Third World Theatre Series creates this unique experience by using surface humor and at the same time being serious about the grim reality of life for Blacks, both in South Africa and the U.S.

The drama is quite simple, and dead on target. Keentseng Monaheng (Suzanne Byam) is the house servant of a white family that prides itself in being liberal. Mr. Kenilworth (Steve Friedman) is so liberal that he tells Keentseng "just call me master, not boss."

The play opens with Keentseng standing on a train platform. She explains how apartheid interferes with her life—she must live outside of the city. She must take overcrowded trains into the city and once there she must constantly explain what she is doing in the "white" streets.

The next scene is very interesting. Before Keentseng is allowed to explain what makes her tardy everyday, Bob Kenilworth throws into her arms a loadful of dirty laundry. It is obvious that he feels Keentseng is late because of her own personal laziness rather than being a victim of her environment.

The Kenilworth family is packing for an unexpected business trip to the U.S. Kenilworth is a Public Relations man for General Motors. Keentseng is expected to go along to take care of the Kenilworth's child Tina. Madeline Kenilworth (Jackie Stern) gives a long soliloquy on her efforts to get Keentseng's traveling papers. No consideration is given to Keentseng's family on whether or not she wants to go.

In Darien, a wealthy Connecticut suburb, the Kenilworths and Keentseng all meet their American counterparts. Frances Green (Ouida Billups) is the "household technician" for the Sloans (Gerard Mercurio and Janet Langon). Right away, Frances asserts her fiestyness. When introduced to the Kenilworths she says, "You may call me Mrs. Green."

The two Black women are immediately attracted to each other. Right away the myths of the two cultures are confronted. Keentseng desires to call Diana Ross on the telephone and Frances wants to know if Keentseng knows Kunta Kinte. But when they begin to talk their attraction grows deeper—each is living an oppressed life and although the U.S. doesn't have apartheid laws, Frances tells Keentseng about the reality of black life in the U.S.

"America isn't better, but South Africa is worse," she says. Frances is suggesting that exploitation of Blacks takes place in the U.S. as well, although not as severe.

The meeting between Kenilworth and Sloane gives the audience a real political slap in the face. The document they are to discuss is called the General Motors Contingency Plan for South Africa. "The plan is not one of fiction but rather a genuine corporate memorandum published in June 1978 issue of South Africa magazine." It states that in the event of revolution "white workers will mobilize as a militia, plant facilities handed over to the police and army etc., all in order to preserve the profits in Southern Africa."

All of this comes to a head, when at the airport Keentseng announces her decision to stay in America. The "liberaliness" of Kenilworth seems to be forgotten as he grabs her and calls her a "black bitch." What seems to be important here is that Keentseng wins the right to stay in this country, only after Frances snatched the Contingency Plan and uses the threat of exposure. Mr. Sloan calms Kenilworth down, for he fears that the press will become involved and embarrass the company.

The final scene is moving. Keentseng explains why she must return to South Africa although, it is better in the U.S. She does not know how much her family has suffered for her disappearance. She cannot write them because the government opens the letters of the Blacks. Keentseng believes she must take her knowledge home to her family and her people because they must struggle together in order to overcome oppression.

"Homeland" has successfully weaved together two cultures into one—that of the black South African and the Black American. The choice of having two household servants meet each other proves to be excellent. It gives Blacks a universal feeling that their plights and destinies are intertwined.

"Homeland" also manages to be politically incisive, in it's analysis of the role of U.S. corporations in South Africa, and the system of apartheid. It draws parallels between two racist countries not in abstract terms, but rather in concrete evidence.

After the show Steve Friedman and Suzanne Byam addressed the audience. "Homeland" was written by Selaelo Maredi, a South African playwright/actor in self-imposed exile and Steve Friedman, who acted as Bob Kenilworth.

The drama began in New York last December where it received some recognition. Last month it was performed at the United Nations for the Delegates. But "Homeland" receives no financial support. It was turned down by the New York Council Organization. The actors and actresses are not paid regularly.

It seems to me that this is just another form of racism in our society. Perhaps if the subject matter of the play did not make political statements against apartheid in South Africa and U.S. corporation involvement, their drama would find some funding.

Friedman's request was that the audience donate whatever they could as they exited.

Personally, I felt happy as I left the theatre and saw many people making donations to the actors. I think this is precisely what "Homeland" is about.

To the University Community:

The recent series of violent incidents in the Five College area, and, most recently Sunday morning's fire in New Africa House, obviously an act of arson, have prompted us to make the following statement to the University Community:

This campus is feeling the effects of a growing atmosphere of sexism and racism which have resulted in several overt acts of bigotry, and intimidation that absolutely will not be condoned. As principal administrative officers let us re-affirm this University's commitment to a multi-racial pluralistic society of individuals engaged in the pursuit of that body of knowledge which will elevate the human condition. This rationale is our reason for existence; and if we permit it to be compromised in any way, then we fail in our charge.

Therefore, let it be known that we will not hold those guiltless who, being members of the community, fail to honor this most basic ethic. To protect the University, and its mandate, we stand fully prepared to take swift, sure and just action against anyone who violates the rights of others.

Accordingly, the University police and external investigative agencies will conduct a full investigation of the New Africa House fire and other incidents of violence on this campus. Should their investigation reveal the individuals or individual responsible, such persons will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law and every effort will be made to separate them from the University community.

We stand ready to act decisively, and we call upon the entire campus community to join us in our crusade to eradicate racism, sexism, and violence of any sort.

"Empty Buckets"

The Undergraduate Student Senate last year endorsed and backed a program to actively work towards the eradication of racism, sexism and violence. In a meeting with the former Chancellor, Randolph Bromery on June 12, 1979, it was promised that he and others would, upon release of the budget, assist in the support of an anti-racist program. We requested it since they had claimed to have a "crusade" for us to join.

It is now almost the middle of the semester and no semblance of a commitment has been shown. The reprinted letter sent to the University community was done after an Administrative office of the Afro-Am Department was burned.

No serious action was taken particularly of the "preventive type." They wanted to quickly erase it before it became a "symbol." Your letter is a symbol of how empty such claims are. Your crusade is an empty bucket. We have called, cajoled and held conferences. What are you waiting for-another corpse?

Sincerely Yours,
Tony Craton

DuBois dedication this Saturday

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

This Saturday, the William Edward Burghardt Du Bois childhood homesite will be dedicated as a National Historical Landmark. Julian Bond of the Georgia State Senate will be the keynote speaker and several ambassadors are expected to attend. The ceremony will begin at 1 p.m.

Du Bois was born in 1863, in Great Barrington, Mass. on the eve of the ratification of the 14th Amendment. He died in 1963 just before the march on Washington was to take place. Du Bois, one of the greatest and most influential political and social theroists of our time, dedicated his life to civil rights activities in America and a clear future for Africa.

The homestead actually dedicated by the Department of Interior in 1969, raised a great deal of controversy. Members of the local community complained that Du Bois who was a member of the communist party for two years before he died, did not deserve to be honored in such a way.

In 1969, Harold J. Beckwith, past commander of the James A. Modolo Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Great Barrington said, "It's like building a statue of Adolf Hitler. The man was a Marxist as far back as 1922 and we oppose a monument to a communist any place in the United States."

Supporters of the landmark said that it wasn't so much a fact that DuBois was a communist as the fact that he was a Black man. They were just using the communist argument as a cover up for racial overtones.

Du Bois' contribution to his race and the world far exceeded whatever negative things anyone could attempt to claim against him. He was a co-founder of the NAACP, he helped to draft what is known as the Niagara Resolutions which included, "Freedom, manhood,...the right to work, and the chance to rise." In the introductory passage it read, "The battle we wage is not for ourselves alone, but for all true Americans,...either the United States will destroy ignorance or ignorance will destroy the United States."

Du Bois has written numerous books and other materials in the form of correspondence some of which has been published by UMass. He founded the first Pan Afrikan Congress in Paris in 1919 and through efforts like this he became one of the most well known figures to Africa.

The plaque which will be set in a large stone will be in the form of a book. On one page, will be Du Bois' birthdate and death, and describing him as a historian, educator, civil rights leader and co-founder of NAACP.

A quote will appear on the other page from the "Souls of Black Folk," written in 1903. It will read, "The problem of the 20th century is the color line."

Du Bois is seen as extremely prophetic in many of his writings as he stated in 1903, "Men of America, the problem is plain before you. Here is a race transplanted through the criminal foolishness of your fathers. Whether you like it or not the millions are here, and here they will remain. If you do not lift them up, they will pull you down."

To columnist Jim Moran: There's good cops and bad

To the Editor

In response to the Editorial/Opinion and Law & Order columns in Monday's (Oct. 15) Collegian, I would like to express my viewpoints. Starting with the Seabrook incident—It seems to me that a large number of protestor's (not all) came prepared for a confrontation that weekend and with the intention of violating the law. Come off it! Who comes to a peaceful rally with gas masks, bolt cutters and crowbars.

With these materials it was evident that some protestor's were planning to destroy private property and trespass. Unfortunately, the police did have to use force and some of them obviously got carried away, but let's face it, there are bad apples in every group (including the protestor's). A police officer has a sworn duty to uphold the laws of the land regardless of his/her personal views.

Mr. Moran's Law and Order commentary was designed to sway the reader into believing that all Police officer's and departments are bad. Not true! I must state again that there are bad apples in every organization. Let us not judge all by the actions of a single person or persons. There are two sides to every story.

I have no sympathy for the protestor's that violated the law and were injured by police officer's or National Guardsmen. However, let me remind all police officer's and guardsmen to use only the amount of force necessary to control the situation. For any innocent by-stander's who were injured at Seabrook.

I'm sorry, but if you went there for a peaceful occupation then you should have left that area when the violence started. It's no one's fault but your own.

Let me make it clear at this time that I am not addressing the nuclear power issue, just the proper aspects of law enforcement and the obedience of those laws by all.

'National Vanguard' no source for anti-Zionist propaganda

To the Editor

The Iranian Muslim Student Association of UMass is distributing a pamphlet entitled The Masters of the Media at their information table in the Campus Center concourse. The subject of this pamphlet is the alleged control the Jews have over the news media of the United States.

While the Iranian students insist that this is an "anti Zionist" booklet the material in this pamphlet is xeroxed from a Special Issue of the National Vanguard, a white-supremacist, anti-Semitic, anti-Black, neo-Nazi newspaper. the front page headline advocates "Whites: Lets Unite!".

Other subjects dealt with in this racist rag are the calling for the deportation of such "racially alien people as Mexicans, Oriental boat people, East Indians, Pakistanis, Puerto Rican, Arabs and other non-Whites." It preaches that the "Negro skull has a smaller brain volume than Whites."

On page 5, is found the article The Masters of the Media, the same article used by the IMSA of UMass.

It may be well that the IMSA says they are anti-Zionist, and not anti-Jewish, but their true colors show through with their distribution of fascist, anti-Semitic, Nazi materials.

The next time the IMSA charges "Zionism is Racism", we'll just remember who was distributing Nazi propaganda.

Wright should have said individualism benefits minorities

To the Editor

Mr. Wright's article on 10/11 holds high the moral principle of individualism as the deciding factor in the struggle between Socialism and Capitalism. Capitalism upholds the individual he says. Could Mr. Wright show us how this principle has aided Blacks, Chicanos, Women and other minorities? Fellow conservatives would be grateful to Mr. Wright if he would explain the reasons for the social, political and economic position of Women and minority groups (Eastern and Southern Europeans) in the 19th century prior to government interference. I am sure he will not suggest that racial and national minorities were hopelessly lacking hard working intelligent individuals.

Mr. Wright would do us a great service of he wrote us an article that factually demonstrates how Capitalism protected the individual rights of the thousands who died in cotton agriculture, mining, steel and textiles prior to the existence of government controls on industry. It may be a difficult task to convince socialists that most of America's poor were "lazy and incompetent" but you can be sure that a factual, scholarly article will go a long way towards the conversion of well meaning intellectuals.

Of course you must properly demonstrate the historical dominance of individual human rights over property rights in American law as well as it's affect on the life of the average American worker. Admittedly this is no easy task but Mr. Wright must be persuaded to try.

Mr. Wright, I implore you, don't give in! The campus conservatives are behind you all the way! Enlighten us with the true history of unfettered capital! Show them that German capital was the undying enemy of Fascism.

Raise high the flag of individualism that has served America so well!

Iranian booth 'Nazi' literature

To the Editor

On Oct. 15, the Iranian Muslim Booth at the Campus Center concourse was distributing a pamphlet entitled "Masters of the Media" whose anti-semetic content, and fictionalized, hate-ridden propaganda was reminiscent of the Nazi literature distributed in Germany in the mid thirties.

The proposed purpose of this pamphlet was to assert that the Jews in America have complete control over the media. To back up this accusation it listed the names of approximately 30 Jews who have responsible positions in the hierarchy of the mass media. Thirty Jews among the thousands of executives employed in the field of television, radio, magazines and newspaper journalism. It is a wonder how these "students" can show their faces when presenting such absurdities.

This group has stated in the past that they have nothing against the Jewish people, but rather its the Zionists whom they are after. After reading this article we feel, as do others, that this is an attack on the entire Jewish population. In fact after close examination of the "facts" presented in this pamphlet one has to seriously question the sanity of the authors.

This group and other so called "revolutionary" groups on campus take great relish in pointing their fingers at the Zionists and the Jews as being the source of the worlds problems. Suppose one believed their assertions about Jewish control of the media. Could one imagine what this country would be like if some of their "heroes" such as Colonel Kaddafi, Yasir Arafat, and Idi Amin had such control?

Editorial showed no solution

To the Editor

In response to the recent editorials concerning the financial problems facing the Collegian, my only question is—what do you suggest be done about it? Neither editorial presented a possible solution to the situation.

Am I to assume that the Collegian Editorial Board is unsure of how to proceed? Is the Collegian asking students to lobby the Undergraduate Student Senate for a halt to these threatened budget cuts or merely excusing itself from responsibility for lax coverage of important issues?

Am I to believe that this student newspaper which failed to provide coverage of the recent student senate elections, except in the form of election results, can become more negligent? What amount of funding is necessary to report the proceedings of the Student Government Association—an organization which is located in the same building as the Collegian offices?

When these questions are addressed, perhaps then student readers can determine what action, if any, should be taken on behalf of the Collegian in its budget crisis.

Dormward walk not impulsive

To the Editor

I'm responding to Kathy Hanley's letter (Oct. 15) which proposed we reinitiate a buddy system basically for women's safety. While it is true this system is "practical," Ms. Hanley is making a dangerous assumption. Just because a man is courteous and friendly doesn't mean we know him well enough to trust him. It's important not to just walk with any man.

It's important for women everywhere to keep eyes open and if you don't feel comfortable with someone who has offered to walk you home refuse and either try hooking up with another woman, a mixed group, call a friend or arrange ahead of time to be met.

The "buddy system" could work but not on an impulsive decision made by the need for a walking partner. Unfortunately I must generalize and say that as women, we must view men as potential rapists, as too often women are seen as potential victims.

N-radiation 'buried' issue

James Lewis

Jane Fonda's reference to radioactive victims in Utah is: 146 persons have died of cancer because of exposure to radiation due to the above-ground detonations in the 1950's and early 1960's.

The AEC (Atomic Energy Commission) conducted 84 nuclear explosions in an 11-year period before above-ground tests were prohibited by the 1963 Test Ban Treaty.

Presently, 265 persons contractead cancer. They are sueing the United States government for $230 million on behalf of 442 cancer victims or their survivors in Arizona, Utah and Nevada. They filed suit with the Department of Energy on September 22, 1978.

According to Fonda, there are records in the defense department showing that government officials knew of the effects of the testing, which 20 years ago causing cancer.

The information is from the United Press International printed in the Boston Globe August 31, 1973.

Also, a government study of 3,500 uranium miners (Navajo's and whites) revealed that 200 have already died of cancer against a rate of fewer than 40 deaths per year.

A high proportion of the early uranium miners, those who worked in the late 1940's and 1950's before there were any safety requaltions, are dead or dying, according to government studies, according to an article by Molly Ivins, New York Times, September 1, 1979. This is going on in Grants, New Mexico.

"We are witnessing a tragedy," said Dr. Leon Gottleib of the Public Health Service in Shiprock, N.M., told visitors representing a United States Senate Committee. "There is an epidemic of lung cancer among former uranium miners."

The question is whether the Federal Government, the only customer for uranium at the time, will assume any financial responsibility.

This was the subject of a hearing conducted yesterday in Grants, N.M., the self-proclaimed "uranium capital of the world," by Senator Pete V. Domenici, Republican of New Mexico, a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging, and members of the committee staff.

According to the stories, the people did not know that they were contaminated until they started dying of cancer years later.

According to an editorial in the Christian Science Monitor, Monday, October 15, 1979, 200 million pounds of radioactive waste are being buried each day around the country.

Attorney General no politco

Bob Cleary

There is presently a controversy over the selection of the student Attorney General, Motion 79-S273, on the floor of the senate which would change the selection process from a presidential appointment to a committee appointment.

This poses a few problems.

The position of attorney general is a non-political position and should be treated that way. The new process would make attorney general a tremendously political position. As the process stands now, an advisory committee of nine people (2 senators at-large, 2 members of the Governmental Affairs Committee of the senate, 2 members of the student courts, 2 advocates (student lawyers), and one presidential appointment) review applications and submit recommendations to the president, who makes a selection. This is then approved/rejected by the senate.

The new process would add two more senators to the committee, and would have the committee directly submit the appointment to the senate for approval.

This is dangerous for a few reasons.

The previous balance of the committee was four senators and four judiciary members. The new committee would have six senators and four judiciary members. This is now uneven representation. The senate would then completely control the appointment of attorney general. Without the presidents as a check on the senate, the office would probably go to the most politically compatible person with the senate. This makes SGA investigation highly improbable. Knowing the senate's track recdrd, this would be a scary situation, especially, if another Brian DeLima should come to power.

The system also would overstep the jurisdiction of the senate. Ideally, the senate, area governments, and dorm councils are all on an equal level, with the president and the attorney general serving the entire SGA. The new system would give the already too powerful senate an extra boost of power. In an era of attempts to bring government to the students by decentralization, this new system would set the process back one hundred years.

The present system has worked since the SGA was formed, and there is no reason for it not to continue to work. The senate shouldn't complain about the present problems; they rejected a candidate they didn't eant, approved the appointment of the attorney general everyone is complaining about, and will have an opportunity to confirm or reject the appointment of a new candidate within a couple of weeks.

As it stands, the senate can check the president and the president can check the senate, but can we afford to let emotions go unchecked?

There is too much at stake.

Bob Cleary is a student senator.

Women volunteers needed for Everywomen's Center staff

Everywoman's Center is seeking women interested in working as volunteers or interns with the budget coordinator or the Public Relations/Outreach Program.

The budget coordinator is looking for women interested in research and grant writing to explore potential sources of funding, compile resource information on funding agencies, assist in developing grant proposals, and help program coordinators follow through on obtaining research and grant funds.

A second position is available for women to assist in all areas of the center's fiscal management, including bookkeeping, purchasing, developing budget plans, and keeping monthly budget sheets.

The Public Relations/Outreach Program needs women to provide direct services to community agencies by fulfilling public-speaking engagements, making radio tapes, developing radio and CCATV programs, collecting information on women's issues and organizations, and sharing skills in mass communications.

Applications and job descriptions are available at the center. Applicants should return forms by Nov. 6.

Support groups scheduled for victims of rape, violence

Everywoman's Center will begin support groups the week of Oct. 29 for women who have been victims of rape or domestic violence.

The initial meeting for rape victims will be held Tuesday, Oct. 30 at Everywoman's Center from 4:30 to 6 p.m. The group for women who have been victims of battering or other forms of domestic violence will have its initial meeting Wednesday, Oct. 31 from 4:30 to 6 p.m.

Future group meeting times will be determined by group participants, and the groups will meet for 10 weeks. For more information contact Myra Hindus at the Everywoman's Center.

Amherst College magazine seeks creative writing samples

Writing at Amherst, a journal of students' creative prose and poetry, is now accepting submissions for its fall issue. All work should be sent to Amherst College, Box number 69, Amherst. Deadline is Nov. 10. For further information, contact Suzanne Bird at 253-5155.

Harpsichordist Igor Kipinis will offer a presentation on Baroque aesthetics tomorrow at 10:10 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. in room 44 of the Fine Arts Center. The program will combine slides and historical background with music from the Baroque period. It is open to the public.

Public and Private Higher Ed focus of panel discussion

Public and Private Higher Education will be the topic of a panel discussion tonight at 7:30 in the main lounge of Field Dormitory in Orchard Hill Residential Area.

State Representative James Collins, D-Amherst, education professor Shirley Haslip from Fitchburg State College, and UMass education professor Earl Seidman will be the panelists.

This is the second panel in the Orchard Hill Series in Higher Education, open to the public.

UMass professor to play French horn at Bowker tonight

UMass Fine Arts professor Laura Klock will play the French horn in a free concert in Bowker Auditorium tonight at 8.

Halloween celebration opens 'an alternative disco'

All ages are invited to a Halloween party on Wednesday, October 31 at 8 p.m. at the Polish Home, 49 Pearl St., Northampton.

Concert Committee Productions, a newly formed group of former UMass students involved in the University's concert series, is sponsoring the party in an attempt to provide an alternative to disco. The live music of the "Converters" will be featured.

Costumes are not required but prizes will be given out for originality. Tickets for $2.50 are available in advance at Main Street Records, Northampton; For the Record, Amherst; and also at the door. For information call 586-5726.

Civil war: black soldiers unsung heroes

By CAROL MORTON
Collegian Staff

Former UMass English Professor Sidney Kaplan, considered to be an expert in the image of blacks in literature, history and art, last night told a Campus Center audience that the black soldier has become an invisible force in Civil War literature.

"How different now is the image of the poor, benign black thanking the white man for freeing him, depicting the grateful acquisence of the freed slave," Kaplan said.

The black soldier appeared vividly in the public eye, in art and in print during the decade of the Civil War and for thirty years after, Kaplan said.

A sculpture by New England artist Augustus St. Gordon, dedicated in 1897, stands on the Boston Common as a monument to black soldiers "acting perilously as volunteers for their own freedom," Kaplan said.

This Civil War relief shows sixteen black infantry men marching with their white colonel, said Kaplan, symbolizing the Civil War's Fort Wagner battle, called the "Bunker Hill of Black America."

Kaplan colored his lecture with quotations from poets who were inspired by St. Gordon's Civil War relief, and called the monument a "catalyst to the flaying of a catastrophic present.

Anti-nukers tried and fined in Greenfield

GREENFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Twelve anti-nuclear protesters who demonstrated at Yankee Atomic power plant in Rowe June 2 were found guilty yesterday of trespassing and fined $50 each.

Greenfield District Court Judge Benjamin Apkin said the defendants' "defense of necessity" was not applicable and the state had proved all the necessary elements of trespass.

The defendants had claimed they trespassed "for the higher good of the public" in an effort to cause the shutdown of the nuclear power plant.

Jeb Brugman of Amherst, one of the 12 defendants, said in a statement to the court that the group had chosen to trespass because "people weren't taking the problem seriously enough.

"We're serious about trying to get Rowe closed, and we ask you (Apkin) to hear us, as if your well-being and that of your loved ones depended on it," he said.

Assistant District Attorney Bernard Whalen told the judge he sensed "a note of arrogance" in the defendants' plea for a defense of necessity.

"If you accept the plea, your message will be that you can go to Rowe and violate the law and walk away," he said.

Apkins refused to admit the testimony of three expert witnesses who presented the dangers of nuclear power, but he allowed each defendant to give statements on the issue.

Apkin suspended payment of the fines for 30 days.

Alan Suprenaut, one of the defendants, said at least five protesters didn't plan to pay the fine and some wanted to arrange alternative sentences, such as community work.

No decision has been reached on whether to appeal, he said.

The 12 defendants were among 21 persons arrested at Rowe June 2 after they were warned the power plant was private property.

Tidal wave sweeps Riviera

NICE, France [AP] — A tidal wave crashed down yesterday on a 60-mile stretch of the French Riviera, killing at least eight men who were building a seaside breakwater, police said. Five other persons were reported missing and feared dead on the popular Mediterranean resort coast.

An undetermined number of yachts and other pleasure craft were wrecked at many points along the Riviera.

The huge wave swept cranes, bulldozers and trucks from the breakwater at Nice harbor into the raging Mediterranean, police reported. They said rescuers recovered eight bodies at the construction site and three workers were reported missing. Two workers were rescued.

In the resort town of Antibes, the tidal wave swept two pedestrians into the sea and both were feared dead.

California quake trail

By ROBERT E. LOCKE
Associated Press

EL CENTRO, Calif. — Officials said yesterday that California's worst earthquake in eight years broke the major canal bringing water to this arid border region, leaving some cities in the area with only two-day water supply.

At least 91 persons received injuries in the quake, almost all of them minor. Damage in the area was put at $10 million to $12 million but that's a very preliminary figure," said Imperial county fire chief Rudy Medina.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. cut short an East Coast political visit and returned to Los Angeles to tour the Imperial Valley.

Local authorities have already declared a state of emergency.

The quake along the Imperial fault, 150 miles southeast of Los Angeles, shifted some home foundations by a foot in El Centro and moved a road six inches.

Autopsy performed

Chad Green's death remains unsolved

BY DAN TEDRICK
Associated Press

TIJUANA, Mexico — An autopsy failed to disclose what killed Chad Green, a 3-year-old whose case of leukemia vaulted him into a dispute over Laetrile, a U.S. doctor said yesterday.

However, a joint MexicanAmerican medical team found "indications" that the boy may have died of the cancer, said Dr. Frank Raasch, an associate professor at the University of California School of Medicine in San Diego who worked on the autopsy.

He said extensive tests, which might take as long as a month, would be done to determine whether tissue samples taken from the boy's body contain cyanide, a byproduct of Laetrile.

Chad, whose parents fled Massachusetts last January when a court put him in state custody and forbade use of Laetrile, died Friday at a Laetrile clinic here. His body lay in a Tijuana mortuary yesterday.

Raasch said Chad's parents, Gerald and Diana Green of Scituate, Mass., told him after the autopsy that the boy would be buried in Hastings, Neb., Chad's birthplace.

In Boston, a resolution was passed by the Massachusetts Senate to lift contempt-of-court charges stemming from their legal fight to treat Chad's illness with Laetrile and abandon conventional chemotherapy.

Mrs. Green said Monday that she hopes the safe-conduct proposal is approved. "It's where we wanted to bury Chad in the first place," she said, referring to Massachusetts.

Irene Gonzales, owner of the mortuary here, said she was waiting for authorization to release the youngster's body.

Dr. Gustavo Salazar, a Mexican doctor who aided in the autopsy, said he found the boy's spleen and liver were "under different conditions than normal," a possible indication of death by leukemia. He said there was no evidence of great trauma.

Raasch also said there was no evidence the boy may have been injured, "but there were a few little bruises, minor ones, on the arms and legs."

"The autopsy we performed didn't show any definite cause of death," Raasch said. "The studies hopefully will bring out something that let this child die suddenly.

"I was concerned with possibly some type of injury or sudden hemorrhage which could be related to leukemia ... But we found none of that ... There was some indication in the organs of enlargement, which would go along with possible leukemia recurrence, but that will have to be confirmed," Raasch said.

Laetrile is a trademark for a substance derived from the chemical amygdalin, found naturally in the pits of apricots and peaches and in bitter almonds.

Advocates claim it is an effective cancer treatment, but the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the medical establishment in this country have said there is no proof it is of any value in treating cancer.

GOP candidate favors working class, youth

BOSTON (AP)— South Dakota Sen. Larry Pressler brought his youth-oriented presidential campaign to Massachusetts yesterday, urging the Republican party to pay more attention to the working class.

"We must appeal in blue-collar areas as well as more affluent areas," the GOP lawmaker told a Statehouse press conference.

Describing himself as the only senator to see military service in Vietnam, Pressler said students attending trade schools should be entitled to as much federal aid as those at four-year colleges.

He also called for lifting the expiration date on Vietnam veterans' benefits so that more former GIs can start college.

Though only 37, Pressler insisted his youth should not keep him out of the White House.

Junta controls San Salvador

By EDUARDO VAZQUEZ
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The new military government sent troops against opponents in one capital suburb yesterday, suspended constitutional guarantees and imposed martial law and a night-time curfew in the face of left-wing defiance.

Col. Jaime Abdul Gutierrez and Col. Adolfo Arnoldo Mahano also dissolved the legislature that was dominated by Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero's right-wing government that was toppled Monday night. They also promised a redistribution of the nation's wealth and a "moderate and eminently democratic" government. Romero reportedly fled to neighboring Guatemala.

In Washington, the State Department cautiously welcomed the ouster of the rightist regime by the generals

The government banned demonstrations and imposed a 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew throughout the country.

Under martial law, the government can also ban meetings, impose press censorship, make arrests without warrants and restrict entries and exits in the country. There was no indication whether any of those measures would be adopted.

A military spokesman said the coup leaders were studying a roster of possible Cabinet members. He said the Cabinet would be moderate and it would be made up of two military leaders and three civilians. The two colonels who ousted Romero were expected to be the military representatives on the Cabinet.

A spokesman for the colonels said El Salvador's archbishop, Oscar Arnulfo Romero — no relation to the president but a constant critic of the ousted regime — had given his backing to the new government. He did not elaborate.

Bootwomen win

By ROB EMMONS
Collegian Staff

History repeats itself, they say, and so it was with the women's soccer squad yesterday. In handling Williams 6-0, the script rom the weekend victory was unchanged; Natalie Prosser turned the hat trick, Maddie Mangini booted deadly corner kicks, and when the fianl whistle blew the relentless offense had registered a half dozen goals.

At least the field conditions had improved from last Saturday's contest with Cortland St., so the casual spectator knew he was watching soccer, not mud wrestling.

However, the really impressive display of footwork didn't come until late in the first half, beginning with Prosser's goal that gently arced over the Ephs' netminder. Up until that time, UMass had dominated but come up short on the myriad opportunities. As usual, once the goals came, they in bunches. Budweiser Athlete-of-the-Week Nina Holmstrom made it 2-0, blasting the ball under the crossbar. Prosser notched her second before halftime, taking advantage of a defensive lapse by the visitors.

The Minutewomen proved they were in control to stay by scoring quickly in the second half. Again it was Prosser, nudging the ball just inside the opposite post on a Mangini corner kick. She also assisted on the next tally, a deflected line by Beth Pickett. Maddie Mangini finished off the parade, lifting one past the crossbar. Kelley Tuller and Roxanne Donatini combined on the shutout, aided by a defense which allowed just twelve shots.

Weaver calls it quits in '82

By WILL GRIMSLEY
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Earl Weaver, manager of the Baltimore Orioles, says he will retire from baseball after the 1982 season.

"Definitely," he said with emphasis as he sat in the Orioles dugout yesterday talking to reporters prior to the sixth game of the World Series against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"When I first signed with Baltimore, I targeted my retirement date as 1980. Now I find that was unrealistic. Gas has gone up from 40 cents to $1.09 and cocoa has risen from 89 cents to $1.60. Economy has forced me to stay an extra two years."

Weaver is currently serving out a three-year contract reportedly at $100,000 a year, expiring in 1980.

Asked to explain his reference to cocoa, the peppery little manager replied: "My wife makes me a hot cup of cocoa every night."

This is the fourth American League pennant which Weaver has won in his 11-plus years as manager of the Orioles. He has won six Eastern Division titles and a World Series in 1970.

Weaver, 49, began his professional baseball career in 1948 and his managerial tenure in 1956 with Knoxville in the old South Atlantic League. After moving through the minors, he became Baltimore manager in mid-1968, succeeding Hank Bauer.

His record ranks him fourth on the all-time list of major league managers in won-lost percentage. He has had four seasons with more than 100 victories: 1969 through 1971, when his teams went 109-108-101, and this year's 102, best in the majors.

Someone asked Weaver if he was getting tired of baseball.

Baltimore Orioles manager Earl Weaver. (AP Laserphoto)

"No, it isn't baseball," he replied. "It's the constant travel, airports, pressures, and long absences from home.

"I get up at 8 o'clock, have breakfast, and then have nothing to look forward to until lunch. Then I have to get ready to go to the ball park."

Weaver is known to be well-fixed financially with a home in Baltimore and another in Miami, Fla. He's reportedly made some wise investments.

Slumping Minutemen face Providence Friars

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

After hitting a midseason slump which resulted in two straight losses, the Minutemen soccer team finds itself in a must situation when it plays Providence College today on Boyden Field at 3:00.

UMass can't lose any of its remaining six games if it hopes to be included in NCAA playoff action, Coach Russ Kidd feels. And with a game against New England's best, the University of Rhode Island, coming up Saturday, Kidd's Kickers have their dance cards full.

"We've got to make hay this week, that's for sure," Kidd said. "We cannot afford another loss this year."

Things were going along pretty good for the Minutemen this season. Their performance on the grid had improved steadily through the first five games, culminating in a 1-0 win over highly ranked Vermont on October 6. But after that game, UMass left their scoring shoes home and were blanked 2-0 in each of two away games against the underdog University of New Hampshire and tough Boston University.

Kidd cited poor playing conditions (adverse weather against UNH; unfamiliar astro-turf at B.U.) as factors in the two losses, but credited both opponents for playing fine agressive ball. "We got out-toughed," he said.

Kidd said he is not overly concerned about the team's recent scoring lull, noting that it's just a matter of the team not finishing off its scoring opportunities. "We've had our opportunities...It's nothing that we're panicked over."

UMass has beaten the Friars in their two previous meetings and should be considered the favorite in today's contest. But that doesn't mean it will be easy. Providence holds a 3-2 record wth wins against Holy Cross (1-0), Merrimack (5-1), and Rhode Island College (3-0). Perhaps more impressive, however, is their close 3-2 loss to URI, a team ranked in the top 10 nationally.

"They seem to play kind of a defensive style," said Kidd. "They're tough to deal with."

"The big thing we're hoping for is a nice day...a dry field," he continued. "We play better on our field."

NHL in Springfield

If someone would have walked up to me two years ago and said that the city of Springfield, Mass. would be the scene of regular season National Hockey League contests, I surely would have suggested a lobotomy as a way to clear up the misconception.

Yet, here we are, a mere two days away from Friday night's NHL home opener between the host Hartford Whalers and Los Angeles Kings. The game will take place at Springfield's tiny 7,500 seat Civic Center; roughly half of the capacity that the NHL requires for home attendance.

Okay, let's back things up a bit and see just how all this came about. The cahin events that has brought hockey to the minor-league city of Springfield actually began with a UMass-UConn basketball game at the then relatively new Hartford Civic Center during intersession two years ago. Yes you read right, a UMass basketball game. Four hours after UMass lost to UConn before five thousand fans, the roof over the modern arena totally collapsed to become one of the things that Hartford is famous for besides insurance.

The net result was the transferring of the then WHA New England Whalers to the Springfield Civic Center on a temporary basis until the roof was replaced. Then, a new, but welcome, monkey wrench was thrown into the works. The Whalers unofficially learned that they, along with three other WHA teams would be absorbed into the NHL for this season. This meant that Hartford would have to add about five thousand seats to the 10,000 seat facility. This necessatated an extension of the Whalers stay in Springfield until both the roof and the new seats were finished which brings us to the present.

"The net result was the transferring of the Whalers to the Sprinfield Civic Center...until the roof was replaced."

Now named the Hartford Whalers, the fledgling NHL team will bring the WHA's most successful franchise to Springfield for what looks like a longer than anticipated stay because of construction delays.

The Whalers consistently led the WHA in attendance since day one as Hartford became known as one of the area's newer hockey hotbeds. Overcoming the fear of lack of interest because of the proximity of the Boston Bruins and the Springfield Indians of the American Hockey League, the Whalers consistently sold in the area of 5,000 season tickets each year. This was the result of a novel community effort where area merchants and businesses banded together to support the team and the Civic Center itself.

A rabid Whaler's fan myself, I took in many of those exciting games in Hartford during the WHA days. It was something to see. The place was sold out night after night even with the constantly changing structure of the WHA.

The Whaler's will bring this same act to Springfield Friday night. Although they'll be losing money in the small arena, and probably have the oldest average age in the NHL, they're still the best show in town. The ticket prices are NHL status, from six to twelve dollars. I think few fans will argue with that when the Bruins come to town on January 30.

Pirates force Game 7 with 4-0 win over O's

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Dave Parker and Willie Stargell, the power part of Pittsburgh's lineup, drove in a pair of seventh-inning runs to ignite the Pirates attack as they tied the 1979 World Series at three games apiece by defeating Baltimore 4-0 in last night's sixth game.

It was the second straight victory for the Pirates and forced the Series to a decisive seventh game Wednesday night. Scott McGregor, the winner in Game Three, will pitch for the Baltimore Orioles — possibly against Jim Bibby, who started Game Four but was not involved in the decision for Pittsburgh.

Left-hander John Candelaria and bullpen ace Kent Tekulve combined for the seven-hit shutout — the first of the Series — as Pittsburgh kept its chances going to become the fourth team to recover from a 3-1 game deficit and win a bestof-seven Series.

Since scoring six runs in the eighth inning of Game Four, the Orioles have fallen into a dreadful slump, managing just one run in 19 innings. Their slumbering bats proved fatal to starter Jim Palmer, who pitched a creditable game, matching Candelaria's shutout through the first six innings.

Candelaria, who has been troubled by back and rib cage injuries, was lifted for pinchhitter Lee Lacy leading off the seventh as the Pirates sought to get something going against Palmer. But Lacy struck out as a capacity Memorial Stadium crowd of 53,739 roared its approval. Soon, however, the Pirates silenced the crowd.

Speedy Omar Moreno, criticized for his poor hitting in earlier games, drilled his third hit of the night, a single to right. Then, on a hit-and-run play, Tim Foli bounced a ball up the middle. Orioles shortstop Kiko Garcia tried to field the ball and keep his foot on the base for the force play on Moreno. But he succeeded in neither, and the ball squirted through for a single.

That set the Pirates' table with big guns Parker and Stargell coming up. In the first inning, Palmer had escaped a similar jam against the same two hitters. This time, however, he didn't get away.

Parker, who carried a .429 Series batting average into this game, drilled a single past second baseman Rich Dauer, scoring Moreno with the game's first run and sending Foli scampering to third. A moment later, Stargell got the second run home with a sacrifice fly to left field.

Finally in front, Pittsburgh went to the ace of its bullpen, the lanky, bespectacled Tekulve. He had been ripped in Game Four — the victim of the bulk of that big Baltimore sixrun rally. This time, it was a different story as he mowed the Orioles down easily, allowing one hit the final three innings.

The Pirates doubled their lead in the eighth. Ed Ott opened with a single and dashed to third on Phil Garner's ground rule double that bounced into the left field stands. It was the second hit of the game and 11th of the Series for Garner, who also set a World Series record in Tuesday's game by participating in his ninth double play.

Pittsburgh's Dave Parker smashes a ball that Orioles second baseman Rich Dauer couldn't handle, allowing the Bucs Omar Moreno to score the first and winning run. (AP Laserphoto)

Cyclist sets record

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

If you happened to be riding south along route 116 in Hadley yesterday afternoon at about five o'clock you were able to see James Miekka riding his Schwinn LeTour ten speed bicycle at an incredible 67 M.P.H.

Miekka, a sophomore, had previously driven at 66 MPH, but yesterday represented a new record. The way the whole thing is done, he drives directly behind a van, driven by his friend Steve Campbell. Once they get out on 116, they drive at the same speed with Campbell constantly gaining speed. Someone is also watching out the back window of the van to make sure Miekka is keeping up and is alright.

They begin at a comfortable thirty miles per hour, and keep building until they get to the desired speed. Miekka stays directly behind the van in order to use it as a windshield. Without the van, Miekka can travel at a maximum 30 mph.

Campbell and Miekka got together this year after Campbell heard him talking of his interest in fast biking. Miekka began bicycling at 13 when he discovered that was his only means of transportation. He started by traveling to different states, and today he can average up to 120 miles per day, and 10,000 miles per year.

The thing that worries Miekka the most is being stopped by the police. Not only is bicycling illegal on highways, but last year while in Florida he was stopped at an intersection and given a speeding ticket for doing 61 mph.

Miekka, 19, says that he just likes to see how fast he can go. He considers it a challenge to go faster than the time before. So next time you're on 116 beware of the Sudbury native, who'll probably be traveling faster than you are.

Sex for grades; too high a price

Task force addresses the problem

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Last semester, UMass sophomore Linda Jones, (not her real name) was receiving low test grades in one of her classes. In Jone's case, however, going for extra help proved futile.

Jones went to her professor for help. He told Jones her exams revealed she lacked sufficient academic background to excel in the course, but he agreed to raise her marks nevertheless if she would have sex with him. Jones refused and instead went to another student in the class for extra help. She began to do much better on her tests, but the professor continued to give her low grades.

When sophomore Paula Burke (also a pseudonym) asked her teacher toward the end of last semester what grade he would give her, he said he planned to give her an 'AB,' but would give her an 'A' if Burke would have dinner with him. The dinner never took place and Burke received her 'AB.'

Situations like Jones' and Burke's are what has prompted the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy to begin tackling the problem.

The 12-member team says sexual harrassment of female students by male faculty and employees is "very common" on this campus. The team is currently designing a formal grievance procedure to handle such problems. The team plans to "solicit detailed information—signed affidavits" by harrassed women and bring those testimonies to the Undergraduate Student Senate to approve such a procedure, team member and full-time SCERA staffer Elli Bagli said.

If approved, the team will then ask UMass Legal Services for its assistance in implementing the procedure, she said. The team will also seek information for the University's Ombudsman's Office, where workers are developing a procedure to handle a variety of student and employee grievances, Bagli said.

The team is also seeking data from groups at schools developing similar procedures, such as the California Women's Organization Against Sexual Harrassment at the University of California—Berkley.

Ultimately, Bagli said, the team would like to develop a student and administration committee which would study grievances, conduct hearings and fire harrassing University employees.

Such action, however, might prove challenging, Bagli indicated. A groundbreaking sexual harrassment suit—in which Yale University student Pamela Price charged Yale with sex discrimination for not providing a student grievance procedure—failed, reported the most recent In These Times. Price vs. Yale, filed in 1977, is the first sexual harrassment suit brought against any school under Title IX of the Equal Education Amendment. In August, the article reported, Price announced at a press conference that she is appealing the decision by Federal District Judge Ellen Burns.

"A professor offered to give me an 'A' if I would go to bed with him and gave me a 'C' when I refused," Price told the press conference members.

Even with the establishment of a grievance procedure, getting harrassed students to reveal their situations may also be difficult, team members agreed at a recent meeting.

Both Jones and Burke said they weren't sure they would be willing to publicize their grievances. "I might be afraid that revealing the information would jeopardize my standing with the department (of my major)," Burke said.

Burke also expressed concern that publicizing her grievance "might hurt me somehow."

Outlining recent team discussion on sexual harrassment, Bagli said, "We've heard there are teachers at UMass who will give you an 'A' if you sleep with them and an 'F' if you won't. There are also the little things—like a business professor who ran night classes and told his female students he didn't want to hear anything about their being afraid to walk alone at night.

"Last year, a professor propositioned a student. She got really scared and upset because she had been getting A's and B's on her tests. When she said no, she got an 'F' on her next test," Bagli said.

Most team members are doing independent studies involving campus violence against women, Bagli said, but the grievance procedure will be a group project. "We all know women who have been harrassed. Women in this situation are afraid and embarrassed. We want to say to them, 'Please come forward...' We want to have an atmosphere of confidence," Bagli said.

"If your grade is dependent on sexual performance, then what's the use of going to school?" Bagli observed. "This type of thing only perpetuates further that women are sexual objects. What good is it to go to school then—to get a job and have to sleep with your boss?"

Irish revolutionist tells of ongoing Irish strife

By ELLEN TUCHMAN
Collegian Staff

Irish Revolutionist Bernadette Devlin McCallisky last night called for a greater awareness of the political and economic strife in modern-day Ireland.

"We feel it is very important that the people in the United States understand our struggle in Ireland," said the former member of the British Parliament, as she spoke to an audience of 120 about the ongoing struggle in Ireland.

"The continual imperialist relationship (between Ireland and Britain) is what divides our people...kept us a poor country, and kept working class people at the bottom," McCallisky said. She added she is now dealing with the move for the liberation of Ireland.

McCallisky said she is not a part of the arms struggle and recognizes that an arms struggle is not enough to defeat British Imperialism. "We don't have any choice but to keep rising...once you learn to resist oppression, oppression becomes intolerable. We must recognize the strength of our class and our right to our place in the world's history and power," she said.

"We have no choice but to fight for a free Independent Socialist Ireland," she added.

The oppressed people in Northern Ireland "occupy the same position in Irish society as the black people occupy in the United States," the former leader of People's Democracy—a civil rights organization—said.

The civil rights movement of 1968 did not begin in Northern Ireland but in the United States, McCallisky said. "When Martin Luther King spoke of his dreams he spoke to and for us and the dreams we had of being acceptable as human beings. We're clear where our inspiration came from," she said.

In 1969 the British army came to Ireland—it was the first time in 150 years that Irish were fighting back. There was a need to establish law and order, she said.

"When people talk about violence they forget that the first violence was oppression. All oppressed people must speak up or else violence isn't recognized," McCallisky said.

She added that when the Irish take up arms the liberals begin questioning their respect for the sanctity of human life—yet no one questions the British the lives of those who died fighting oppression.

"I don't think at this point Protestants are willing to be involved in civil war—violence is a result of British troops," McCallisky said.

She also said people are under the impression that if a free, independent Ireland is realized they will suffer from the loss of British funds. This would not result, she said, because "social and welfare benefits would be shared—taking over the means of production is the only way our people could survive..."

She said the Irish struggle is not an isolated one, and "...we'll see a free and independent Ireland in my generation's lifetime."

Commenting about America's ignorance of the Irish political struggle, McCallisky concluded, "If the British couldn't beat us in 800 years, we would make mince-meat of the Americans."

McCallisky said she felt the murder last month of Lord Louis Mountbatton was necessary to awaken the world to the Irish struggle for independence.

Bernadette Devlin McCallisky first joined the Irish Civil Rights Movement in 1968, when she was a student in Belfast. After her election to the British Parliament in 1969 and reelection in '70, she was jailed six months for defending a Catholic ghetto. Witness to Bloody Sunday in '72 in which 13 civilians were killed by British troops, McCallisky physically assaulted Tory Minister for Irish Affairs, Reginald Maudling. In '73 she was defeated in Parliament and this year was a candidate for the European Common Market Parliament Elections. Her platform was the Immediate Withdrawal of Troops and Amnesty and Political status for Prisoners.

In the question and answer period following the speech, an official from the International Socialist Organization announced $140.00 had been collected to aid the Irish cause. Collection buckets were circulated, for additional audience contributions.

Inmate dies; drugs suspected

NORFOLK (AP) — An autopsy was planned to determine the cause of death of a reputed mobster who died in his cell Tuesday at Norfolk state prison.

Investigators said they suspected drugs were involved in the death of Vincent J. Flemmi, who survived two underworld attempts on his life in the mid-1960s.

Another inmate, Paul Robinson, 33, of Boston, was listed in fair condition Wednesday at Norwood Hospital after being found unconscious in the cell next to Flemmi's.

BU trustees 'ousted', profs say

BOSTON (AP) — An official of the Boston University professors union charged yesterday that five trustees who are leaving the board were "pressured, manipulated or ousted" because they disagreed with President John Silber.

University sources told The Boston Globe that four trustees have resigned and another will be dropped from the 43-member board over a conflict surrounding a faculty strike last spring.

"It's clear that trustees who dissent from Silber's policies cannot be tolerated," said George Psathas, vice president of the BU unit of the American Association of University Professors.

Those who reportedly resigned are philanthropist Paul Hellmuth; Robert Goldhammer, a vice president of Kidder Peabody — Co.; John L. Thompson, president of Blue Shield, and Samuel Shapiro, president of Sweetheart Plastics Co.

San Salvador leftists fight on

By VICENTE MORALES
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Army troops killed at least six leftist protesters Wednesday during a five-hour gun battle in a mountain town near the capital, witnesses reported. It was the second day of fighting following Monday night's overthrow of the rightwing government by members of the military.

Only hours before the latest fighting erupted, leaders of the new military government claimed their coup had prevented a popular uprising and "a sea of blood" in the Central American nation.

However, sources within three major leftist organizations said Wednesday that their groups would not accept the new government and would continue their fight.

Witnesses said the six persons killed belonged to a group that had put up barricades at the town's entrance earlier in the day. The same witnesses said leftists in the town were still in control of the city hall, the church and other buildings.

There was no official confirmation that the troops had fired on the protesters.

Monday's coup toppled the rightist government of Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero, whose regime was the target of mounting leftist violence.

The new leaders appealed for calm and reconciliation in the divided nation, but moved quickly on Tuesday to crush a series of leftist disturbances in towns near the capital.

They declared martial law, imposed a seven hour curfew starting at 10 p.m. and banned public gatherings of more than three people to discourage attempts at a possible countercoup by leftists who may believe that the coup will result in nothing more than a continuation of the old system.

Texas gov. urges offshore drilling

By SUE BASS
Associated Press

BOSTON — Warning of the possibility of an oil spill, Gov. William Clements of Texas flew yesterday to Massachusetts to urge drilling for oil and gas off the New England coast.

"I encourage you to do this," said Clements at a news briefing where he was accompanied by Gov. Edward J. King of Massachusetts. "The only one way to know if there's oil is to get out there and drill."

Environmentalists and fishing interests have opposed offshore drilling in New England, fearing spills would pollute the fishing grounds.

Clements is founder and former chairman of SEDCO, which owned the rig where a 100-million gallon spill occurred in the Gulf of Campeche in June. The spill, considered one of the world's largest, eventually reached Texas beaches, but Clements said it "has not been a catastrophe.

King has supported off shore drilling near the Georges Bank fishing grounds off New England.

"There is a need for more energy resources," said Clements, who placed SEDCO in a blind trust when he became governor in 1978. "

UMass students guilty of trespassing at Rowe

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

Three UMass students were among the twelve anti-nuclear protestors found guilty of trespassing at the Yankee Atomic power plant in Rowe June 2, and Monday were fined $50 each.

Jeb Brugmann, Eileen Murray and Kristy Nelson have 30 days to decide whether they will pay the fine, or face a jail sentence or some form of alternative service, according to the court's decision.

"I will not pay the fine," Murray said yesterday, adding that most of the defendants have decided not to pay. Plans for alternative service are being made with the probation officer for the Franklin Superior Court, she said, although nothing has been finalized.

Amy Edelman, a co-defendant, said "people are glad they have 30 days to think about it (paying the fine)." She said the defendants were "not greatly disappointed at the verdict," in light of the message they spread through their actions and the education they received about the workings of the legal system.

One of the legal advisors for the group, Larry Hott, said the fines were much less than in similar cases he has worked on in California and Oregon. "Some people have been jailed up to six months for these things," he said, with fines up to $100 for those convicted.

The defendants chose trial without a jury after Superior Court Judge Benjamin Apkin ruled expert evidence on the dangers of nuclear power could not be heard by a jury. Three defendants then changed their plea to guilty to protest Apkin's decision, according to Edelman.

The defendants said they would use a "choice of evils" defense, hoping to convince a jury the crime of trespass is a lesser one than nuclear radiation from the plant. This case marks the second time in two years that a New England judge has refused to allow that defense.

Nine other people were charged in the June trespass action. Of these, three minors were tried in juvenile court and given six months unsupervised probation and two were given $50 fines with 30 days to decide whether to pay. One was sentenced to 10 days in jail after refusing to pay on moral grounds.

Another defendant, Gil Wieland, was arrested at the group's pre-trial hearing after failing to appear at a previous conference. Wieland was sentenced to a $100 fine after a nolo contendere plea was entered for him when he refused to cooperate with the proceedings.

Two other defendants, Richard Dodge and Edward McGlynn, also refused to cooperate and warrants are out for their arrest.

Town keeps liquor quota

By JOYCE C. MUNROE
Collegian Staff

Voters united at last night's special town meeting to defeat a motion to grant additional liquor licenses in Amherst above the state specified quota.

After limited discussion, the Amherst Junior High School Auditorium echoed the overwhelming "nays."

The article, introduced by the Board of Selectmen, would have allowed them to issue additional licenses. The present town quota is already filled.

Selectman William C. Atkins, the only Selectman who opposed the article, urged voters to defeat it. He said the results of the 1980 census will show a sufficient increase in population to boost the present quota by about 12 licenses.

"I don't think this is the proper time to jump the gun," Atkins said. Atkins added that Amherst Police Chief said additional liquor licenses would require additional police officers at night, adding to the town's financial burden.

Selectman Donald Routhe voiced support of the article, reminding voters that the Selectmen could still refuse to issue a license if the new measure was passed.

"We could operate just as well under no quota at all," he said.

But the Selectmen were outvoted although, as one townsperson said, "It's the first time I've seen this town follow Boston's rules."

In other matters, an ammended article to expand PVTA service to the Cushman section of town was passed.

After much discussion, voters agreed to extend the service beginning in January 1980 providing an additional bus could be found, present service is maintained and federal and state funding becomes available to minimize costs to Amherst taxpayers.

Senate reappoints Pierce as temporary Atty. Gen.

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to approve a motion to reappoint William Pierce as Acting Attorney General until a new Attorney General is appointed. The appointment of a new Attorney General will take place in about weeks, according to SGA co-President and Trustee Rich LaVoice.

Debate centered on the selection process by which Pierce was chosen to serve as Attorney General, and his involvement during the summer.

The official minutes of the Senate meeting of May 19, 1979 recorded Pierce's acting appointment as one for just the summer. According to SGA co-Presidents Brian Burke and LaVoice, the minutes were incorrectly written." In a letter to the Student Senate, LaVoice and Burke said, "The minutes are incorrectly written and say 'move to appoint Will Pierce to work through the summer.' This is not the motion which was made, however that is what is written in the minutes."

The motion was "to have Will Pierce Acting Attorney General until we have a permanent Attorney General," LaVoice said.

Pierce did not serve as Attorney General during the summer, due to a lack of funding for the office.

In opposition to his reappointment Senator Bari Mjuri said "We should not have someone in the office who was not elected or appointed beyond a certain period of time. It is illegal."

Bob Cleary, a senator in favor of Pierce's reappointment, said, "If someone else fills the two week period, by the time they learn their job the appointment would be over."

Luna out of tune when it came to Pope

To the Editor

On Friday, October 12, Luna was appearing at the Blue Wall in the Campus Center. I had heard that this was an up and coming rock group so I decided to attend the show that evening. The advertisements in the dining commons showed that the admission was one dollar. When I arrived at the door I was informed that admission was two dollars. UPC, the recognized student organization in charge of booking and advertising for the entertainment apologized for the mistake.

At 10:45 Luna began to play. They played a couple of songs and then stopped. During this pause the lead singer encouraged the large audience to disregard the Pope's recent advice to American youth. The other members of Luna that were on stage then began to join in at the same time and began chanting various degrading insults about the Pope and the Roman Catholic religion. By hand gestures and verbal insults the religion was viciously ridiculed. Statements such as "The Pope does shit in the woods!" were made by members of Luna on stage that night.

Soon after those remarks were made I left the Blue Wall in disgust. Not only was I insulted by the fact that Luna would make such statements but I was also disappointed because the audience was showing no discomfort with them. Many in the audience were cheering as the insults were being made.

I do not necessarily believe that one person must agree with another's religion, but I do believe that we should respect its right to exist.

It's dangerous living under buckets of tar

To the Editor

As a resident of Northeast, I am glad to see that Johnson and Lewis House are finally having their roofs tended to. However, I am regally miffed at the sloppy, careless, and downright dangerous manner in which the roofers took their sweet time fixing the peaks whilst their cylinders of tar sat in the sun all summer, melting and dripping over the slate sides and dormers. That is correct, two charming slate roofs have been aesthetically ruined. Thank you roofers.

On a campus of poured concrete, glass, and self-destruct brick, we have few enough examples of handsome architecture to have any one defaced by juvenile artisenry.

If the roofers feared that tar and other materials might be stolen, these should have been taken with them, or locked up on the premises until the job could be returned to. Heavy rolls of tar paper weighing at least 75 pounds, cylinders of tar weighing twice that, and Ed King only knows what else should not have been kept atop a pitched roof waiting for a strong wind to knock something off and kill someone.

Whether the materials were secured or not is beside the point; a residential area should not have to suffer such a hazard.

Editorial/Opinion

"I DON'T KNOW WHY WE HAD TO IMPORT A POPE WHEN WE HAVE ME!"

Letters

Dear Lisa:
In response to Pope story

To the Editor

I would like to comment on Lisa Capone's editorial of October 16. I really feel that her criticism and mockery of Pope John Paul II, I quote "His Holiness", was unnecessary. She was correct that he indeed is against abortion, contraception, sex education, extramarital sex, homosexuality and divorce, however I really do not agree with her calling him an anti-feminist and degrading him for his beliefs.

I feel that her argument is irrelevent to woman's issues. It appears to me that this is a matter of moral beliefs and religion rather than women's rights.

Pope John Paul II is not the one making judgements on our social practices, the Catholic church is. I would also like to point out that most religions do not condone these practices either. I do not necessarily agree with his "idealized beliefs". However, I respect and admire the man for being consistent with the traditional beliefs of his religion, especially in our current society where these are so often such controversial issues. Although abortion, contraception, etc. are related to both women's issues and the morality of the Catholic church, morality and women's rights are two completely different subjects.

Cathy Whalen

To the Editor

I'd like to comment on Lisa Capone's rather hysterical editorial, "Morality reigning on pontiff." Besides being off-base on Church issues, her editorial bends words, and worse, is poorly researched. First of all, the Pope's views are not only his own, but those of the Catholic Church. If Ms. Capone wants to condemn the views of the church, be my guest.

Contrary to popular belief, sex is not the only way to express love. The way Ms. Capone talks about this hypothetical women's dilemma with sex ("living in constant fear" of unwanted pregnancies) to me sounds like the woman cannot exercise self-control. On marriage: this woman should have found out her husband's intentions and ideas before they got married, since as a Catholic, she knew damn well that marriage is a lifelong commitment in the eyes of the church. On Ms. Capone's view of the Pope: Nobody said he is a perfect human being, if they did, they are fools, because no human is perfect. Nobody said he was sent down by God; You and I know, Ms. Capone, only one was sent down, and that happened about 1979 years ago.

The Pope is a representative for God, his purpose is to make known God's message. His views are not antiquated or idealistic just because they refuse to be swayed by popular beliefs and trends.

The statement that exposes this article to be a lousy piece of journalism is the one that says that the Pope is against sex education. This is a lot of baloney: he (or the church) never made such a statement. If it was true, then the priest I talked to was wrong.

Nicholas Triano
Washington Tower

To the Editor

This is in response to Lisa Capone's Editorial/Opinion entitled "Morality reigning on Pontiff." Miss Capone stated that the Pope is against abortion, contraception, extramarital sex, homosexuality and divorce. This is all very true but in the context of her editorial it appeared that Miss Capone felt that the Pope is telling the world what to do, which is incorrect.

This is the doctrine of the entire Catholic Church and not the Pope alone.

Thomas A. Cardamone Jr.

Dear Elved:
In response to Southwest madness

To the Editor

Hurrah for Elved Owens, whoever he may be! His article on Southwest's "youthful high spirits" should really hit the fan. I, too, believe that there should be plenty of good times without destroying the area of Southwest.

I am a freshman and a resident of Southwest. I enjoy living here, but I will never understand what thrill a person derives from smashing bottles, or from destroying the buildings in which we all have to live. Everything that gets wrecked, has to be fixed, and the money has to come from someplace—the students being the source.

Seems pretty senseless adding more to our ever-rising college costs.

In defense of Southwest, I think that we should not have been singled out. The other living areas of the campus have many of the same problems, some only a smaller version, but the problems still exist. It should also be noted that Southwest isn't all bad. There are plenty of things offered here that aren't offered in other areas of the campus, such as more colloquiem's, city environment, and a lot of very interesting people.

James Cahill
Washington Tower
Southwest

To the Editor

This letter is in regards to the column written by Elved Owens on Oct. 16 about the living conditions in Southwest. Mr. Owens I have a few questions to ask you. Have you ever lived in Southwest? Have you ever been there? I think not.

I have lived in Southwest for almost three years; I have also lived in Central. I didn't notice any difference between the noise, litter, or people in either area. Loud stereos are not only a problem in Southwest; the people on this campus have enough maturity and understanding to lower a stereo when they are asked.

No one in Southwest makes excuses for any person that drops bottles from their windows. We all understand too well how dangerous that can be. People that take part in such activities are dealt with severely. As a staff member in one of the famous towers, I can tell you some of the ways we try to prevent any dangerous behavior. We not only pass out endangering behavior forms but we have every floor member read, sign, and return these forms. This way we know that everyone has been informed of the rules. As for the quiet hours, they are working. I study in my room every night and the only noise I hear is an occasional toilet being flushed and my own moans of confusion from trying to do Calculus problems that have made up answers in the back of the book. I invite you to come and study in my QUIET room any night.

It's people such as yourself that speak only of the bad aspects of Southwest that allow people to believe that excessive noise and dangerous behavior are the norm.

Well, Mr. Owens, I didn't write this letters to "define present disruption," as you stated, but to clear up a confused columnist.

Punk

Punk rock: it inspires strong reactions ranging from "Barbaric and disgusting" to "It's the only thing that can save rock 'n roll." Me, I like it.

It is very different from the usual top forty fare. That you realize the minute it jars you awake. Early punk/new wave music roared from the guts of the unemployed youth in the industrial cities of England. Its anger often threatened to explode the very songs themselves, as they careened at a high-powered manic pace.

The punk/new wave movement is a reflection of two trends. One is a desire to bring rock 'n roll, always a rebellious music, back to the roots, back to the basement bands and away from the million dollar stage productions of the supergroups. The other is social and political commentary on the condition of white youth in England—unemployed and without a future.

They offered me the office offered me the shop
They said I'd better take anything they'd got
Do you wanna be do you really wanna be a cop

Career opportunities are the ones that never knock
Every job they offer you is to keep you out the dock
Career opportunities are the ones that never knock

I hate the army and I hate the RAF
I don't wanna go fighting in the tropical heat
I hate the civil service rules
And I won't open letter bombs for you

They're gonna have to introduce conscription
They're gonna have to take away my prescription
If they wanna get me making toys
If they wanna get mee, Well I got no choice
Caaarrreeers Caaarrreeers Caaarrreeers
Ain't never gonna knock
Careers Opportunities, the Clash

Comments like "barbaric" are a reaction to the violent aura that surrounds punk/new wave. The fighting in the audience, spitting by the performers, safety pins through the nose, colored hair, etc. all belong to punk but are an aspect overplayed in the American and British press.

Poly styrene, lead singer for X-Ray Spex, explained her use of bondage suits: "I just used that kinda bondage theme to express repression. When people see these people wearin' bondage they think they're for bondage—but they're not. 'Cos by wearin' it or singin' about it, ya against it. Ya don't pretend that ya not chained up and everything. Ya admit ya repressed."

Certainly not all of the punk/new wave movement is so introspective. Some of it is extremely nihilistic. But a very prominent section of the movement formed "Rock Against Racism (RAR)" to channel their energy.

5-01; 18 picas; pam

England is a dying, former imperial country. Many people of color, forced out of their countries (former English Colonies) have gone to England. An extreme right wing group, the National Front, has provoked numerous violent racial clashes by blaming many of England's problems on "colored foreigners".

Punk/new wave groups formed "Rock Against Racism" to establish a cultural expression of opposition to the National Front. Many of the most well known groups like the Clash, Elvis Costello, the Saints, Graham Parker etc., are a part of it. RAR concerts brought together thousands of black, West Indian, Jamaican and white youth when reggae groups like Steel Pulse joined. Bob Marley wrote a song called Punk-Reggae Party. The Clash do a song that is a product of that unity:

Black men have got a lot of problems
But they don't mind throwing a brick
But white men have got too much school
Where they teach you to be thick
So we're content, we don't resent
We go reading papers and wearing slippers,
White riot! I wanna riot
White riot! A riot of me own
All the power's is in the hands
Of people rich enough to buy it.
While we walk the streets
Too chicken to even try it.
And everybody does what they're told to
And everybody eats supermarket soul food.

The music that goes with the songs is highly charged. When a group like the Clash hit the stage they strike a defiant post and then they're off. Loud explosive music going about a hundred miles an hour. The words are matched by thundering guitars and drums. You've got all you can do to catch up.

There's a lot of truth to the feeling that punk/new wave is the only thing that can save rock 'n roll. More than any other musical trend in the last decade it's provoked the formation of many, many, new bands from the grass roots, profoundly linked to their audience. It's wild, exciting and most of all, energizing music.

The fact that the music is combined with insightful social commentary, even rage, is highly complimentary.

Straights feel gypped by this 'sorry rag'

To the Editor

As usual, the Collegian has totally misrepresented the views of the majority of UMass students. The glut of letters responding to Ephraim Baron's was indicative of the treatment of anyone who expresses a rational viewpoint in this sorry rag.

I've always believed that if you have nothing constructive to say, don't say anything. The rambling drivel of the gays who responded to Ephraim's letter clearly showed what troubled, unhappy lot they are. Perhaps is they had not torn into Ephraim so viciously, their arguments would seem less absurd.

I literally cannot count the number of times I have seen the word "homophobic" bandied about in the Collegian, yet, contrary to the tone of the paper, most of the campus is straight, which would (according to the gays), make them "homophobic."

The current outcry by homosexuals to do whatever they please and the lax attitude towards them by straights brings to mind (witness Frisco fags run amok) not a society becoming "socially conscious", but, rather, a society like ancient Rome that is crumbling to pieces under its own debauchery.

Fed: living standard declines to inflation

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans face a reduction in their living standards if inflation is to be brought under control, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board said yesterday.

"The standard of living of the average American has to decline," Paul A. Volcker told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress. "I don't think you can escape that."

Volcker said Americans must accept less because they are producing less with the same amount of effort as before, while the nation is losing billions of dollars of its wealth each year to oil producing nations.

"If we fail to recognize that, and people try to catch up with the existing standard of living, or try to increase their standard of living ... up goes the price level some more," he said.

Volcker said his best outlook for inflation this year is to reduce the annual rate of price increase below 10 percent by the end of 1979, down from the current 13 percent annual rate of inflation.

On another front, Charles L. Schultze, chairman of President Carter's Council of Economic Advisers, said the administration will consider its policies successful if inflation falls below 10 percent "in the not too distant future."

Volcker and Treasury Secretary G. William Miller appeared before the congressional panel to explain recent government actions to drive up interest rates and to slow economic growth in the fight against inflation.

American consumers are saving too little and borrowing too much, Miller said. He also said he did not want to "foreclose the possibility" that the government might need to impose direct controls to limit consumer credit. But Miller said he didn't think this action will be necessary.

Miller conceded that the tightening of credit "is a worry" for the housing industry because it could slow the amount of money available for homebuilding and homebuying. But he said the growth of money and credit in the economy has to be restrained.

"If we do it rapidly enough, and forcefully enough, then housing does not have to go into a tailspin," Miller said.

Meanwhile, new Commerce Department figures indicated the housing industry is so far escaping major harm from current economic conditions. It said new houses were being started at an annual rate of 1.88 million in Setpember, up from 1.81 million in August, a gain of 4.2 percent.

However, housing industry representatives have predicted homebuilding will be hurt in future months by the Federal Reserve Board's Oct. 6 decision to push interest rates up sharply.

The Commerce Department will report on third-quarter gross national product Friday. And this is expected to show that the economy returned to positive growth in the period. However, there has been nothing to alter Miller's expectation that a recession is imminent.

Introducing breakfast at the Top
GOOD MORNING
The members of the T.O.C. Restaurant staff would like to welcome you to the loveliest breakfast dining room in the Pioneer Valley. We hope you enjoy a leisurely breakfast and the breath-taking view of the surrounding communities.

THE COLRAIN - Two eggs any style and a healthy portion of bacon 2.25
Colrain was the site of the first school to fly the United States Flag and was founded in 1735 by the Scotish-Irish from Northern Ireland.

THE MONTGOMERY - Two eggs any style with a delicious ham steak ... 2.25
Montgomery is nestled on top of Montgomery Mountain. This rural town was settled in the 1740's and named in honor of General Richard Montgomery.

THE WHATELY - A plump cheddar cheese omelet, cooked to perfection 2.25
Whately was a part of Hatfield until 1771, when it was named after Gov. Hutchinson's friend, Thomas Whately. The town has the dubious distinction of being the site of the first gin distillery in the state.

ADDITIONS TO YOUR BREAKFAST:
A portion of: Bacon 75
Ham Steak 75
Sausage Patties 65

Beverages are served as part of your breakfast.
Milk is an additional 45

BREAKFAST BAR
All of our breakfast entrees include a selection of ice cold juices, fresh fruits, hot toast, cold cereals, warm pastries, and blueberry muffins from our breakfast bar.

THE AMHERST - Our house specialty, this offers you the opportunity to sample one pancake one piece of French toast and a French waffle 2.65
Amherst, settled in 1703, was named for Lord Jeffery Amherst, a British general in the French and Indian War. It is surrounded by rolling meadows, orchards and rimmed by the Holyoke range.

THE ASHFIELD - A Western Omelet to give you a substantial start on the day ... 2.25
Ashfield with a rugged terrain and wooded hillsides, has been named "Little Switzerland" for its high elevation and rolling pastures.

THE GRANVILLE - Your choice of plain, apple or blueberry pancakes 1.90
Apples, antiques, blueberries and toy drums are the main enterprises of Granville. Settled in 1754 the early town was made up of three villages.

THE MONTAGUE - A handsome serving of our famous French toast 1.90
Montague is on the eastern edge of the Connecticut River Valley. It is made up of five villages, each with its own historial significance: Montague Center, Montague City, Turners Falls, Lake Pleasant and Millers Falls.

UM students to march in national anti-porn rally

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

About 140 people from UMass are expected to join an estimated 25,000 to 50,000 others in a national march against pornography in Times Square on Saturday, October 20.

Two buses and several car pools from UMass will leave for New York City Saturday at 8:30 a.m., and will return at 9 p.m. Round trip bus tickets are $7.50 and are available at the SCERA office.

A bus servicing Hampshire and Smith colleges will take about 47 people to the march, according to Jodi Cahn, an organizer from Hampshire College.

The march will begin at Columbus Circle at 1 p.m., proceed through Times Square, and end with the rally in Bryant Park, according to HERSAY news.

Slide shows of different themes in pornography were recently shown at UMass, Smith College, and Hampshire College to large groups supporting Women Against Pornography, according to Cahn.

The slide show at UMass last Saturday created a heated discussion between opponents of pornography and Albert Sparks of Baroque Enterprises, an organizaiton which supports pornography on campus.

"We want to make people aware, through the slide shows, how pornography leaks into our daily lives," Cohn said.

The march is "historical" because it's the first time women have organized to march against pornography," according to Denise Kendall, march organizer from the SCERA Women's Issues Team.

"We want to present pornography as a feminist issue and create an awareness in women for dealing with pornography. We want to show that we can say and do something about it personally and collectively," Kendall said.

Women Against Pornography want to establish a "feminist analysis toward pornography. This is a call for women to start developing that analysis," Kendall said.

Speakers at the march will include Gloria Steinem, Bella Abzug, Adrienne Rich, Susan Brown Miller, and Ms. magazine editor and author Robin Morgan.

Times Square has been chosen because "it is the pornography zone of New York and in order to make a national statement, we should go to the pornography capital of the United States," Kendall said.

Barbara Mehrhof, a spokesperson for New York's Women Against Pornography, said in the HERSAY article "the march was organized to show there are quite a few women and men all over the U.S. who are concerned about pornography."

Spikers split tri-match

By PAT McGRATH
Special to the Collegian

The UMass women's volleyball team split a tri-match in New Haven Tuesday night. UMass couldn't get themselves going in the first match against Central Connecticut and were defeated 15-8, 15-6. In the second match, however, UMass displayed their capable offense and defense, sweeping New Haven, 15-9, 15-5.

Central Conn. had beaten UMass last year, and UMass wanted revenge. After a fast start with good passing and setting, the Minutewomen lost their momentum, and Central went on to win. Although UMass got some good blocks, most of them landed out-of-bounds. In game two, Central ran off seven unanswered points before UMass regrouped. Led by the passing of Chris Perron, Kathy Shinnick's serving, UMass came alive to rally, but Central's lead was too much.

Against New Haven, UMass mixed up their offense, utilizing middle hits and back sets, along with excellent passing and serving. Brenda Simmons had several good spikes, along with excellent back row defense; Peggy Barber used her strong serving to end the match for UMass.

UMass assistant coach Al Morel said of the two matches, "We needed to mix up our offense against Central; we were too predictable. As far as New Haven goes, our hitting and blocking were much better than Central. If we had played Central after the UNH match, we would've won both for sure."

Teamwork is the key to this undefeated team. Tuesday afternoon Hixon's squad traveled to play Southern Connecticut and came back with a 8 to 1 victory. O'Neil gave out four assists in the game. Judy Strong scored three goals as did Laurel Walsh. Julie McHugh also scored two goals for the Minutewomen.

And so, as they prepare for Northeastern (away) this Saturday, the team has temporary bragging rights to number one in New England. Just ask the UConn Huskies.

JV booters win

By JAY BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Staff

The men's JV soccer team remained undefeated as they won a hard fought game over Amherst College, 2-1. Amherst College came into the game with a 2-5 record but played better than their record appears. Mike Jenkins started the scoring four minutes into the game as he headed a corner pass from Bob Boyd into the upper left corner of the net.

For the next twenty minutes the game seesawed as each team had equal opportunities to score yet neither team could capitalize. Amherst proceeded to take matters into their hands as they tied up the game at 26:01 of the first half. The Minutemen bounced back twelve minutes later to regain the lead. The goal came as Gary Deets booted the ball across the field to an onrushing Jenkins who kicked the ball into the far side of the net.

The Minutemen seemed content to sit on the lead for the remainder of the game. Amherst had a few opportunities to score in the second half but fine goal-tending by Brett Olsher helped UMass hold on to a 2-1 victory.

The JV team will travel down to Springfield for a 3:00 game today to put their 2-0-1 record on the line against Springfield College.

Moran's goal blanks PC

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

UMass forward Wayne Moran headed a shot past a stunned Providence College goalie 10 minutes into yesterdays game to give the Minutemen soccer team a 1-0 win and keep UMass' playoff hopes glimmering.

It was the kind of goal coaches try to teach at soccer clinics. Tony Dias has the ball in the corner to the left of goal and served a pretty line drive to Moran, coming across from the opposite side. Moran shirked off a defender and headed the ball from about 10 yards out in front to the lower right corner of the net. Goalie Peter Chenette was caught flat-footed. It was Moran's fifth goal of the season.

UMass, coming off two straight losses, owned the ball for the first 15 minutes of play and looked like they were ready to explode. But momentum seemed to slowly shift toward the middle of the first half and Providence began to apply some pressure.

At the end of the first half UMass clearly had the shots on goal advantage, outshooting the Friars 15 to 4, but Minuteman netminder Mark Marilla was called upon to make three nice saves.

The second half saw both teams get scoring chances and both goalies make good saves. Providence almost tied the game midway through the half when Friar forward John Murphy rifled a rising shot from 30 feet out to Marilla's left. Marilla jumped and stabbed at the ball, tipping it as it went by. The ball continued toward the net and came down hitting the top of the cross bar and going out of play.

UMass finished the game with a total of 27 shots on goal to Providence's nine.

Minuteman tri-captain Mark Vasington said he was pleased with the team's performance and feels the squad will be ready to take on number one University of Rhode Island tomorrow.

"We're moving the ball better," Vasington said. "It's definitely coming."

BOOTER BANTER—Wayne Moran is no stranger to scoring winning goals. He scored the lone goal in UMass' last victory, October 6 against Vermont.

Stargell named MVP

PIRATES PREVAIL

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE — Remarkable Willie Stargell cracked a game-winning tworun homer last night to give Pittsburgh a 4-1 triumph over the Baltimcre Orioles and make the Pirates only the fourth team to overcome a 3-1 game deficit and take a best-ofseven World Series.

Stargell, known affectionately as "Pops" by the rest of the Pirates, put the third of his four hits for the night over his team's bullpen in the sixth inning for his third homer of the 1979 Series.

The 38-year-old captain of the Pirates is one of the few players left from the 1971 World Champions who clinched their title exactly eight years ago, also against the Orioles and also in Baltimore.

He was the 40th player in World Series history to get four hits in a game and the fourth batter to do so in this Series.

Stargell unloaded against lefthander Scott McGregor, who pitched a courageous game in defeat for the Orioles.

In the ninth, Pittsburgh added two wrapup runs, against a parade of five Baltimore relief pitchers.

Phil Garner opened with a double to left — his 12th hit of the Series — and scored on Omar Moreno's third hit of the game.

A single by Tim Foli moved Moreno to third and then Dave Parker and Bill Robinson were hit by pitches, forcing home the final Pirates run.

The Series loss, after they had won three of the first four games, was a heartbreaker for the Orioles. They went into a stifling slump after Game Four and never came out of it.

They launched a crowd-thrilling comeback attempt in the eighth inning that was ended by Pirate relief ace Kent Tekulve with three Orioles standing on the bags. Tekulve, the fourth Pittsburgh pitcher went on to complete a four-hitter.

Pittsburgh's historic comeback from the 3-1 deficit matched the accomplishment of their 1925 club that came back against the Washington Senators, the Detroit Tigers against the St. Louis Cardinals in 1968 and the New York Yankees against the Milwaukee Braves in 1958.

McGregor nursed a 1-0 lead through the first five innings, a lead provided by a third-inning home run by Rich Dauer that set off a long, loud celebration by the crowd of 53,733 that included President Jimmy Carter and Speaker of the House Thomas "Tip" O'Neill.

McGregor opened the sixth by retiring dangerous Parker on a roller to second. That brought up Robinson, who bats cleanup in Manager Chuck Tanner's lineup against left-handers but sits on the bench against righties.

Willie the Wonder Man wasted no time. He jumped on the first pitch from McGregor and sent it soaring high and far into the night.

Stickers stay undefeated with shutout over UConn

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

All-american forward Laura O'Neil's goal late in the first half carried the eighth-ranked and undefeated (9-0) UMass field hockey team to a 1-0 victory over the previously third-ranked (10-3) UConn huskies yesterday at NOPE.

Laurel Walsh had the best opportunity at the mid-point of the first half as UConn coach Diane Wright watched her squad make sloppy passes and a masked, overworked goalie Hughes make save after save.

However, for all their work the Minutewomen had nothing to show for it. Enter stage center; co-captain Laura O'Neil. By this time goalie Karen Stifter was perhaps getting lonely down at her end of the field. O'Neil broke up the monotony and scored the only goal thirty three minutes and fifteen seconds into the game. O'Neil completed the long rush, an unassisted goal, and the score read UMass 1, UConn 0. The Minutewomen took 11 shots on goal and enjoyed five penalty corner shots in the pivotal first half. UConn ? No shots on goal and only one penalty corner shot.

The second half was almost a blueprint of the first. Sixteen minutes into the half UConn managed to take two shots on Stifter and defensemen Sue Kreider, Carol Duffy and Jody Wickman along with midfielders Ro Tudryn and Patti Bossio were equal to the task. The stickwomen got a scare when their other All-American, Judy Strong, caught a stick to the jaw. Strong remained in the game.

Despite the oncoming cold the stickwomen continued to pin the Huskies in their own end. At the twenty three minute mark Strong narrowly missed another penalty shot and goalie Stifter made a tremendous save off UConn forward Debbi Walker. This was the third and last shot of the day for the confused Huskies. Leading scorer Mary Taylor of UConn and UMass' Patty Bossio collided with one minute left to play. Both were uninjured physically, but the pride of the Huskies was hurt in this game.

Old folks at home

A few weeks ago, the Los Angeles Dodgers pinch-hitting ace Manny Mota, whom many feel is old enough to have fathered Kunta Kinte, announced his retirement. Former Bruin favorite and currently Hartford Whaler forward Johnny 'Pie' McKenzie will join the ranks of the unemployed come January.

These two may be leaving the ranks of professional sport, but there are many who remain, remain for much too long.

In football, the Vikings duo of Jim Marshall and Mick Tinglehoff have been around since the days when helmets didn't have face masks on the front. Marshall's claim to fame over the years has been his running the wrong way after picking up a fumble in a crucial game some years back. Now he doesn't have to worry about running the wrong way, it's running any way.

As for Tinglehoff, one day he's going to bend down to hike the ball and not be able to straighten up. While others dig into thick steaks at training meals, he sits there gumming his mush.

Baseball's contribution to the athletically aged consists of Willie McCovey, Gaylord Perry, and Luis Tiant to name a few. McCovey, who can barely walk anymore, surprised the baseball world two years by actually stealing second base. When the big man took off from first, the opposing catcher was so shocked he forgot to throw to second.

Perry will continue as long as he can muster up some fluid from his mouth and his Geritol supply holds out. To show that the senility process is slowly gaining on him, Perry indicated that he will remain active only if he can pitch for the Texas Rangers; The Texas Rangers, baseball's answer to certain boredom.

As for Tiant, he claims that he'll be thirty-nine in November. Jack Benny went to the grave saying he was thirty-nine too.

Paul Silas of the NBA's Seattle Supersonics is the grand old man of basketball, already having been bestowed the honor of becoming a grandfather. The Sonics claim that Silas is needed for his leadership qualities. Must be, because physically he just ain't got it anymore.

The Celtics Don Chaney isn't a babe-in-arms either, having made the team only because his years of experience triple those of all the other candidates for his job combined.

Last of the fastbreak fossils is the Nets Phil Jackson who possesses as much ability at playing pro basketball as Amherst Towing does at hauling cars away. Both only lift rear ends when it means a buck.

Perhaps the grandest geriatric in all of professional sports is the Hartford Whalers Gordie Howe. This post-mortum puck patroller announced this week that he doesn't plan to give up hockey until he drops dead on the ice, which some reports say happened in 1975.

Why this ancient one goes on is beyond my imagination, continuing to play a sport where fights outnumber the goals scored and hard hitting is commonplace. When he finally gets his face pushed through the back of his head by some player who doesn't care that he's facing the Great Gordie, maybe then he'll hang 'em up.

It is a wonder why many athletes choose to go on until humiliation sends them into retirement and obscurity. Willie Mays, as great a player as he was, hung on two years two long. Hank Aaron escaped in the nick of time, and George Blanda attempted thirty too many field goals.

Hopefully, men like Carl Yastrzemski, Willie Stargell, Roger Staubach, Earl Monroe, and Earl Anthony will see it fit to quit before father time turns them into athletically old men.

Who's the man in the 'Aluminum Foil' mask doing the Gerald impersonation? It's his creator...

Steve Lafler

'Gotta get home ... ... before the fish rots'

As Yale has the bulldog, West Point has the goat, and Harvard has the yo-yo, UMass has Gerald and Benb. The brainchildren of Steve Lafler's comic strip, Aluminum Foil, along with Guido, Knoot, the horny Gleebes and a cast of thousands have the biggest cult following on campus since, well, Alex Eldridge.

Lafler, an art major with a concentration in painting ("I was here for three or four semesters without a major. I saw art and I said, 'hey that looks like fun,') is currently in his ninth semester at UMass and his eighth doing Aluminum Foil. He lives in Hadley in a "veggie co-operative household."

The 'zooting' Gerald and the ever-smiling Benb, who appear regularly in Lafler's Collegian comic are as much a part of UMass as the auto-destruct library and springtime mud puddles.

A good example of students' devotion to Foil characters was seen last spring when someone climbed to a seemingly unassailable high spot high on a Physical Plant wall and spray-painted "BENB LIVES". "I didn't do it," said Lafler. Of the plethora of Foil-related graffitti on area walls, Lafler said, shrugging, "I'm responsible for about 10 percent of it."

UMass students' long strange trip with Aluminum Foil officially began on February 5, 1976 when the characters, Gerald Forge and his buddy Stan (since deleted) debuted on the Collegian comics page.

"I wanted my starting point to be as bizarre as possible," said Lafler of Foil's inception." Almost anything can be twisted around so it appears to be bizarre."

And, Lafler did provide a bizarre starting point to kick off the Foil saga. He got the idea on the last night of intercession/1976 when he and four of his friends went driving around wearing foil helmets much like the one Gerald wears today. "We were kinda buzzed that night and we went plowing into snow banks so deep that we had to get out and pull the car loose. Then we went into this Chinese restaurant and started walking around, people were staring and saying, 'what the hell is this?'"

Peanuts this was not to be.

Music

Jammin'

Whites imitate blues, says Shepp

As the sole music professor in the Black Studies Department, reknowned jazz and blues saxophonist Archie Shepp questions UMass; "why is one black man expected to teach the entirety of his tradition? Why doesn't the University expand its budget to bring in three or four more professors? Money should be poured into ethnic studies, not out. Black, Jewish and Asian courses should be mandatory."

Yet the Afro-American music professor said UMass probably has one of the strongest Black Studies departments in the country. Although he said he is proud and happy to be here, he is dismayed that the department doesn't receive much economic support.

"The more one knows about minorities, the more flexible we are as a society — each person can have his maximum potential to grow," he said. The University hasn't given significant attention to Black Studies, thus denying students' growth, he said.

Shepp has many views on music in society today: "the blues were created after slavery and it was the first time blacks were orally able to express their grievances as free men."

"Our music is being stolen — rock is a rip-off of black blues," he said. The Beatles' "Twist and Shout" was taken from Chuck Berry and Gato Barbiereis' sound is virtually a duplicate of Afro-American Musician Pharoh Saunders, he said.

Concerning the revival of blues and rock n' roll, Shepp said, "I think white folks patronize the niggers and the blues. The white youth are into Afro-American blues fur their own motives — they feel the music upholds the ideas that blacks are ignorant, inarticulate and non-intellectual. These are confirmed by superficial listening to blues music and it fortifies racist notions. I think white folks like their niggers ignorant."

Shepp said he believes "you can sell anything in America" but many black musicians are denied commercial success: "Black music is controlled and owned by white people. Music is not a good business for niggers — Blondes have more fun in this business."

He also said there is an attempt by the "American music establishment" to destroy musicians who play jazz and blues: "Music like mine is being killed off commercially. Blacks in the U.S. don't listen to their own music, especially so-called jazz music. This is discouraged by the whites because it's seen as a political threat."

In describing his music, Shepp said, "I'm not completely Western, nor should I have to be. Contemporary African American music is created through the genius of African-American songsmiths — completely untutored by Western academic systems. The music I play is purely creative, doesn't rely on written notes (all the time), contains a lot of percussion, and is non-capitalist and anti-war. It is chock-full of political and social implications and is even advanced for much of the white audience."

Although Shepp specializes in percussion, especially the saxophone, he is also considered and expert in his use of African elements in his compositions, particularly the traditional Nigerian talking drum (membranophones); rhythm logs (tuned wooden blocks); and triangles. "I have completely dispensed with western trappings as I always have," Shepp said.

Some of the music in his composition, "Magic of Ju Jus" and the entirety of "Blase" were included in the Broadway show, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Not Enough."

"Teaching and performing are a symbiotic relationship," Shepp said of his two careers. "When I perform I gather experience which enriches me; my ideas are fresh and creative when I return to school."

— Ellen Tuchman

Archie Shepp

Chuck too old to cut it

Poor old Chuck Berry. Once he was widely recognized as the "king of rock 'n roll." With a stream of classic singles, he helped change the face of popular music. But in recent years his recorded output has dwindled to nothing, his shows are "golden-oldies" festivals, and this year he even spent some time in prison for income-tax evasion. And his new album Rockit is the most pathetic recording on the charts.

Probably it was meant to usher in Berry's renaissance period, expose him to a new audience, reestablish him as a major rock performer (and moneymaker) but it sounds like Grandpa Berry's energy reserve has been depleted. The 10 cuts on Rockit plod along lifelessly, despite crisp production and the quality of the backing musicians. With a rocking backup of piano, bass and drums, Berry's guitar ought to zoom around with its old enthusiasm and enjoyment. But Berry sings as if he'd like to get it over with and go have lunch — his guitar work is too uninspired to liven up even the fast songs.

And what's worse is the pointlessness of the production — Berry breaks no new ground and does nothing with the old ground. The guitar introductions on "If I Were" and "Houselights" are indentical to those on "Johnny B. Goode" and "Back In The U.S.A." The songs are the usual blend of rock-country rhythms with a few ballads thrown in for variety. Even the old Berry humor, on "Wuden't Me" fails to hit. He simply has nothing new to say. You won't know the difference but will enjoy hearing Chuck Berry's Greatest Hits and Chuck Berry's Golden Greats instead.

Terry Gilliam stars as a Roman jailer in Monty Python's Life of Brian.

'Life of Brian' a letdown

Monty Python fans are in for a big letdown.

Because of the religious hullabaloo accompanying the opening of The Life of Brian, true Python addicts have been licking their chops in anticipation of a grand, religious roast.

But unfortunately actor-director Terry Jones and his five Python cohorts (Graham Chapman, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle and Michael Palin) presented a mere skeleton of their usual robust humor.

This is not to say that the film didn't leave a few scraps for the audience to nibble.

Life of Brian focuses on the life of a pauper who was born one stall down from Jesus, and spends his life being mistaken as the Messiah. The "three wise men" mistake the baby Brian for the Messiah yet after showering Brian with gifts, they learn of their mistake and take back the presents.

Filmed in Monastir, Tunisia, Brian has an air of realism which aids in Python's search for absurdity. Unfortunately though the gags are silly and drawn-out. When Brian (Chapman) is caught scribbling anti-Roman graffiti, a Roman centurion (Cleese) grabs him by surprise and tells him his grammar is incorrect. He then commands Brian to write the sentence 100 times correctly.

It seemed as though some of the gags themselves were repeated 100 times. Every time the Romans invaded the hide-out of the Judean People's Front the Judeans would hide in obvious places and the Romans would trot in and trot out without finding anyone. The scene worked the first time, but was silly when repeated.

The brightest scenes in the film are the ones the religious critics are upset about. Several times during the movie the "real" Jesus is the object of ridicule. A rowdy mob at the "sermon on the mount" mistakenly interprets a biblical phrase to be, "blessed are the cheesemakers" and "the geeks will inherit the earth."

And a leper, who was cured by Jesus, loses his livlihood of begging. Although he admits "leprosy is a pain in the ass," he is upset since he is left unemployed.

Obviously lacking from the film were the brilliant graphics of Gilliam. His outlandish cartoons and drawings have always been an accepted part of Python's routine until now. Only during the beginning credits and one brief encounter with a space ship is his work shown.

More Gilliam art might not have made Life of Brian a great movie but it certainly could have sped up the tempo in many parts. Python humor relies on tight editing and variety to keep the audience from getting bored. Life of Brian was not up to par.

Seeing Life of Brian might be a good thing to do to kill an afternoon, or fill an empty evening, but it is not worth going out of one's way to see.

Lafler does it with a brush

Lafler then had Gerald and Stan wrapping their heads in aluminum foil when they were bored and decided to use the symbol to name the strip.

Lafler said the point of Foil's story line is "you can look at things in a different way and see how crazy things really are. It shows that you can choose from alternatives that are not accepted by society." He pauses to sip a Rolling Rock: "Ask me tomorrow, I'll tell you something different."

Another reason for Foil's unusual nature is Lafler's success with development and change. Frequently he has changed story lines right in the middle of a plot, and has also killed off both Gerald and Benb. For a brief while he changed the name of the strip to Aluminum Ghost: "I didn't want it to get stagnate and boring."

"Change equals vitality," said Lafler. He said change produces a high energy level to work at and this in turn stimulates thought.

In fact Foil themes often vary—Lafler has touched upon such subjects as the military, drugs, police, student politics, the Grateful Dead, and food. The food theme has manifested itself in many diverse ways, including the famous, "It's Pie For Sure" ditty ("When I worked at a Rustler's Steak House, the way to be a revolutionary was stealing pies and singing about it."); The Onion people; Cake people; and Major Carrot. Now the adventure is with Banana Man and his pal, Roger the Cherry.

"Munching out is an important theme," Lafler said, pointing to a strip when Gerald killed his roommate to get a donut. "It shows that the human race is so obsessed with food."

Aluminum Foil is a comic strip which cannot be understood when read the first itme. It must be read for awhile for the reader to obtain an understanding of who the characters are and for what they stand. Lafler offers this explanation:

Gerald Forge (Foilhead): "Gerald is me, my friends, my enemies, whatever emotion is flowing through me at the time," said Lafler. "He's on Planet L, thinking in the bake zone." Explaining the origin of Gerald, who zoots through life and frequently thinks in hieroglyphics, Lafler said, "Whenever I draw a character I give it some kind of dippy name. Gerald sounded right, it has syllables and not too many people are name Gerald." Also, Lafler said, Gerald Ford was president when Mr. Forge first hit the scene.

"However, the name means nothing until you give a character life," he added.

Gerald's friend, Benb (pronounced BEN - buh): "We were sitting around in Kennedy one night, buzzed and drawing on the wall. We drew a lot of great characters—Murphy, the Messenger from C.A.K.E. Then one night my friend Tim drew Benb. There it was, the basic visual Benb. And I said 'wow, I've got to put this in my strip.' There was Benb, a model pulled from the human consciousness."

"There are two things about Benb," said Lafler," A — he is always smiling, and B— he never says anything. He can always make the best of a situation, but he's so naive sometimes he does some really stupid things."

Lafler has offered Benb's life history in some strips. The first description entitled, "Special Personality Profile" credited Benb with singlehandedly averting an invasion from Pluto in 1948, and then becoming a detective in the Amherst area. Benb always smiles and loves pie.

Another strip traced Benb's origin to his being a "normal enough youth" when he munched out on "1,502 chocolate donuts," and awoke the next morning as Benb. Benb's first appearance in Foil was as Detective Benb, working with a character named Leeklace on the case of the stolen wall.

One controversial character in Aluminum Foil is Gerald's feminine friend, the "sweet and lovely" Sugar Magnolia. "I caught shit about that," said Lafler, referring to charges from some that Sugar was a sexist stereotype. Lafler said Sugar Magnolia (taken from the title of a Grateful Dead song) represented a "male perspective on things." To counter the charges of sexism Lafler once drew a strip featuring such characters as Darlene Skank and Elvira Ernst. "I'm for feminism," Lafler said. "But I wanted to draw some ugly, gross women, the real Guide Kratchmer of women to show that I can look at others too."

Guide Kratcher (the fall guy): "I kinda feel sorry for Guide. People always shit on him and he always gets the short end of the stick," said Lafler. Just this semester, poor Guide has been stuffed into a Space Sock, been avoided because he is boring, been beaten-up by an angry customer at the Framed Footprint Franchise and has had his head shrunk.

Many episodes of Aluminum Foil have been grounded in Lafler's own real-life experiences, he said. For instance, Lafler said that one day he and some friends were relaxing, getting high and "watching something really amazing, like 'Leave It To Beaver,' when a friend left, saying "Gotta get home before the fish rots." Lafler later drew a strip of Gerald and Benb eating fish that had been left out in the sun. Gerald then exclaims, "Bllllllllieeeennnnhhhhhh, This fish is bad!!!!!!!!!"

The creation of Guide Kratchmer came from an experience Lafler had boarding a bus in Natick, Mass. "You know how when everyone is trying to get right near the door of the bus," Lafler said, shuffling and waddling across his studio. "Well, I thought, 'hey, they all look like penguins.'". Lafler then drew a stip about this incident substituting Guide for himself.

Reactions to Aluminum Foil have been as varied and bizarre as the strip itself, according to Lafler. It has run the gumut from, "'It's the best thing in the Collegian,'" ("I guess that doesn't say much for the Collegian,") to "'This really grosses me out!'" Lafler told of one person's reaction to a strip which featured eggplant that tasted "like rotten lizard heads. A guy got so grossed out about that, I think he wanted to punch me," said Lafler. "You can really tell a lot about a person by the way they react to something like this."

"I think caricature is powerful, it's the best story-telling technique." Lafler then pulls out an edition of a comicbook, The Spirit, illustrated by Will Eisner. "When I first started out, I wanted to draw exactly like him," said Lafler. Eisner wanted to make a point, he did it through caricature. For instance, when he wanted to draw a beautiful woman he would draw her with unusally big eyes..."

Lafler's strips carry a heavy dose of the Grateful Dead. once Benb wanted to communicate with the Dead but instead of holding a seance, he picked up the phone and called Jerry Garcia. And when Lafler stopped his strip midway through the fall semester of 1978(he returned in Spring/1979), he ended with a chorus from the Dead's "Truckin": "Sometime's the lights all shinin' on me/Other times I can barely see/Lately it occurs to me/What a long strange trip it's been."

"The Dead have put themselves into a position where they can be artists and make beautiful music. You can enjoy yourself being creative like the Dead.

"Creative art is a hard thing. You have to detach yourself from all other things in the world to be really creative—money, sex, partying, studying, school, parents. You have to stop out of the moment, keep daily worries at arms length. You have to laugh at your worries."

When Steve Lafler graduates at the end of this semester with a B.F.A. he will take three and one-half years (450-plus strips) of Aluminum Foil with him: "Someone once told me, maybe the school should have a new symbol aside from Benb. Maybe he is getting a little tired. I don't know, maybe."

Art

Art? You judge

Even the critics can't agree

It was a curious parade, winding its way through the uneven stacks of driftwood and towering steel spindles. One becomes certain of one's inadequacy in the face of modern art.

Here were knowledgable and highly respected critics of the art world arguing the merits of one heap of driftwood against the next before innocent bystanders who could barely detect a trace of human creativity in either.

"Clearly," intoned the broadest of the three, "These are the work of genius." The others leaned a little closer and one took off his eyeglasses. "Note how the piece invites the viewer to participate in its creation. Who could dispute the successful communication of ambiguity – while capturing the piece in time, the artist has stopped its natural process of decay. Yet the true meaning is that decay is inevitable."

Inquisitive looks were met with a shrug from someone who swears that because she can't draw a straight line she must accept what the critics tell her. But, a moment later, she turned to me in a flurry of excitement: "They don't agree!"

"Nonsense," said a bystander, "They will agree. They know art."

By this time the entire group was watching in dismay as the portly critic waved his sheaf of papers in the face of the others yelling, "It's time, I tell you." The other two, for their part, were trying to outshout him, one insisting that the object had no relation to the significance of the stack of wood and the other muttering, "It's all a hoax. Just a hoax."

As the bystanders started to leave, one of the gentlemen wrenched loose a piece of wood and brandished it in the air. "See this," he shouted at us. "It's not a piece of wood. It's form! It's pattern and texture!"

The next pulled up several chunks and yelled, "Hoax!" Bystanders started to run. Just before a small board hit one on the arm the first man's voice rose above the havoc: "Judge for yourselves."

It was about a week later that a small item appeared in the local newspaper announcing the artist who created those stacks had decided to refrain from displaying his work for the next six months.

Music

Female country singers on the rise

Since there are few impressive female artists in popular music today, new wave and country singers are emerging to fill the void.

New wavers such as Patti Smith and Deborah Harry have popularized their brand of music, while other female singers have brought a unique meaning to the word "country."

Several albums over the last year have stimulated interest in country music and provided encouragement that the female singers have not totally disappeared.

One exciting album released last year was Bonnie Tyler's It's a Heartache, a fine example of current country crossover music. Her latest album, Diamond Cut, also has proven to be a winner. As on Heartache, the bulk of the songwriting is by the Ronnie Scott/Steve Wolfe team and the results are wonderful. Tyler's husky voice singing about broken hearts and fools comes across as eminently sincere. Cuts like "Too Good to Last" and "What a Way to Treat my Heart" are as good as the best in country music.

Another singer who consistently has turned out good albums is Emmylou Harris and her latest is no exception. Blue Kentucky Girl gets away from the mainstream of her last few releases and sounds more country than Quarter Moon in a Ten Cent Town. Yet it is less rousing than her previous work.

As in the past, Harris spans a range of tunes from the 40s to the 70s. She is rather unique among contemporary female singers in her ability to perform songs well which are neither self-penned nor custom-written.

Several other recent releases by female country singers have made a distinct impression. Carlene Carter's Two Sides to Every Woman has several nice moments. On the album Carter sings a version of the rare Elvis Costello gem, "Radio Sweetheart," and for that alone it is worth a spin. Other noteworthy cuts include "Do It in a Heartbeat" and "It's No Wonder (Why I Love Him)".

Carter's voice is not as distinctive as that of Tyler or Harris but she does an excellent job of running from up-tempo country-rockers to lilting ballads.

Another singer often grouped in the "cross-over country" category is Karla Bonoff, who has just released her second album Restless Nights. The one-time songwriter for Linda Ronstadt has broken free of the inevitable comparisons but the results are a bit disappointing. The songs on Restless Nights are mostly ballads and they don't measure up to those on Bonoff's debut album. Still there are a few outstanding cuts, including "Trouble Again" and Jackie De Shannon's "When You Walk in the Room."

Yet, there's still Jennifer Warnes' new single, "I Know a Heartache When I See One," – the best country single to hit the Top 40 since "It's a Heartache."

Escapist films are the coming trend

Perhaps to spicen an expected early and cold winter there will be a spate of "escapist" films on the market, particularly the horror film and science-fiction thrillers.

An apparent recurring cycle in motion picture history is the appearance of a large number of escapist films during times like now—when the economy is down and people are disillusioned. Perhaps escapist movies—presentations which emphasize sensationalism, shock value, fantasy or utter mindlessness at the expense of dealing with social issues—are popular because they allow the moviegoer to get away from the frustrations of day-to-day life. Screwball comedies and musicals grew out of a reaction to the Great Depression, while sci-fi thrillers and beach blanket bingo movies appeared during the McCarthy era and the recession of the late 50s and early 60s.

This escapist trend in film was most evident this summer when theaters featured a wide variety of creatures of doom and destruction. The Amityville Horror and Alien did well, grossing over $40 million and $60 million respectively, while Dracula and Prophecy grossed less and Nightmare bombed.

Yet the trend continues as the scary summer has fast become the frightening fall. Some scaries to soon be seen are Time After Time featuring Malcolm MacDowell (A Clockwork Orange) as H.G. Wells frantically chasing Jack the Ripper into the 20th century via a time-machine; When A Stranger Calls (Carol Kane and Charles Durning); and The Legacy. And, Nosferatu, the Vampyre, director Werner Herzog's bizarre tribute to F.W. Murnau's silent classic, Nosferatu, further feeds a blood-thirsting public for films about the chief bloodsucker like Dracula and Love At First Bite.

Yet while still being "escapist," and a contrast to the horror-thriller films soon to be seen are an abundance of romantic comedies including Starting Over (Jill Clayburgh and Burt Reynolds); Something Short of Paradise (David Steinberg and Susan Saradon); and 10 (Dudley Moore and Julie Andrews).

And others soon to come which sound good enough to possibly start trends are The Rose (Bette Midler) and The Jerk (Steve Martin). Steven Spielberg's 1941 stars John Belushi and Dan Akroyd and will hopefully make up for their absence on television's "Saturday Night Live." And cult star "uglies," Al Pacino and Dustin Hoffman star respectively in non-escapist films—And Justice For All provides a jarring look at the American justice system, and Kramer v. Kramer also with Meryl Streep is about a child custody battle. To sweeten the Star Wars start of sci-fi adventure films will be Star Trek: The Movie, premiering in December.

Following the opening of Apocalypse Now, it remains to be seen whether the Vietnam War film years will continue. Yet as art films go, Luna, also starring Jill Clayburgh opens soon.

C.C. Garage: Opinions vary on problems

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The upcoming repair work on the Campus Center Garage "could be an annual thing," and is "standard maintenance work," Physical Plant Director George Norton said in yesterday's Springfield Morning Union.

Norton was paraphrased as saying there are currently no structural problems with the building.

According to an annual Loomis and Loomis Inc. report about the cracks in the garage, "the building moves, and such cracks form—some may get worse and require correction." The report characterizes the cause of the cracks and spalls as "the lack of steel in the T-beams." A spall is a chip or fragment from stone. It states the deterioration of the structure "accelerates with the years along with repair costs and risks of failure."

Loomis and Loomis Inc. is a professional engineering construction frim also observing problems with the campus center and the library.

The physical plant purchase requisition for the upcoming work requires the contractor "to perform emergency repairs on the Campus Center Parking Garage."

Evan Johnston, former Vice-Chancellor of the UMass Building Authority, said Norton's statements in the Union yesterday were "incompatible." Johnston, who has been involved with most of the construction on campus for the last fifteen years, continued, "standard maintenance is not the same as emergency repairs."

It needen't be an annual effair if they would correct the cause of the cracks which is the grout in the expansion places," Johnston added. He explained that the spaces are necessary to allow for temperature changes and pressure from cars.

The report estimates the cost of the upcoming repairs at $40,000 "all except the 'waterproofing' of the sixth level" which it estimates at $140,000. The report explains that the deck can only be made to shed water better but not be waterproofed.

Plans for the waterproofing of the garage's top floor have only been suggested, and not finalized.

Regarding the subject, Johnston said, "Waterproofing the top surface is not going to do it."

Proposition 2½

UMass budget may suffer

By NORM WHITEHURST
Collegian Staff

"The UMass budget could be cut as much as thirty percent in 1981 which will destroy the institution as it is known today," said Ken Moore, student senator and a member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy Legislation Team in response to Proposition Two and a half.

Moore said the proposition would also wipe out the budgets of public services such as road services, librarians, public education, police and fire departments. The controversial proposal has drawn negative response from several campus and state organizations, which have formed their own proposals.

Proposition Two and a half includes the following major provisions:

—Limits local property taxes to two and a half percent of fair market value. Where communities now exceed two and a half percent, taxes will be reduced fifteen percent a year until the two and a half figure is reached and where property taxes are now below two and a half percent, taxes will be frozen.

—Reduces automobile excise tax from sixty-six dollars to twenty-five dollars per $1,000 valuation.

—Permits tenants to deduct one-half of their rent from state income taxes.

—Limits any governmental entity from mandating costs, no matter how justified, onto communities.

—Repeals local school committee fiscal autonomy.

According to the Massachusetts Teachers Assocation officials, Proposition Two and a half will devastate public services and cause massive layoffs in public jobs by reducing property taxes 40-50 percent statewide.

"MTA tried to block Proposition Two and a half being put on the ballot but failed. So we came up with a proposition of our own," said Cathy Dziuba of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

The MTA is proposing an alternate form of "two and a half" called the MTA Limitation School Aid Petition. The major alternate provisions of this act include:

—Limiting state and local tax increases to the same percentage increase as that of total personal income of all Massachusetts residents.

—State aid to communities will be no less than in previous years and will be increased by at least one half of any increase in growth of state taxes.

—States share of local education costs will jump from current 30 to 40 percent in 1982, 45 percent in 1983, and 50 percent in 1984.

—Every school district guaranteed an increase of at least 15 percent over 1980 state aid.

—Provides override procedures so that limits on property taxes may be exceeded with a two-thirds vote of the School Committee.

"This proposal will keep taxes proportional to income and

Police search Gorman for shooting clues

By KAREN LIBUCHA
Collegian Staff

Two separate sniping incidents put two holes in the window of the third floor lounge in Gorman dormitory Wednesday night, dorm residents said. No one was hurt during either incident.

UMass police said the shots were "probably from a pellet gun or a bb gun," but the incidents would be treated seriously—as if they were fired from a small hand gun.

The first incident occurred at 7 p.m. while students in the lounge were playing ping pong. Roxanne Edwards, the Community Resource Assistant on the floor, called the police and they conducted "a fairly thorough search for a pellet or a bullet." UMass police said they "investigated and found nothing."

At 11 p.m. shots were heard by several students on the floor. The police again searched the lounge and found nothing more than an additional hole in the window. A full search of the adjacent Hills office building was conducted by police and no one was found. A security guard was assigned at 1 a.m. to watch the dormitory for the rest of the night. Another search was conducted at 2:30 a.m.

Greg Fairbanks of 320 Gorman was playing ping pong in the lounge when the first shots hit the window. "They sounded like they were shot from an air gun," he said. After the two shots shattered a section of the window, Fairbanks said, he shut the lights and looked out to see if he could identify the sniper. "No one was out there," he added.

Fred Winer, Assistant Cluster Coordinator for Gorman dormitory, said he hoped the sniping was "just an isolated incident," but when it happened again the same night, he said, "people are leary in the dorm; some of them have been pacing the window."

"Students were on edge about the two incidents and that there was no apparent reason why the lounge was the target," Winer said.

Brezhnev rumored dead

MOSCOW (AP) — A top Communist Party official dismissed reports yesterday from Western capitals that Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev had died, saying "with rumors like that, he should live for 100 years."

Unconfirmed reports that the Soviet president was seriously ill or dead flooded Washington, New York and European capitals. Reports of "special newscasts" from the Soviet Union floated in Moscow and Brezhnev remained out of sight for what was said to be reasons of health.

The big buses that can't

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — They wish they could, they wish they could...but, try as they might, the buses in the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority's new $10.8 million fleet can't climb the steep hills on two of the area's more heavily traveled routes.

PVTA administrator Ronald Tober said Wednesday the new buses cannot climb the section of State Route 141 near Mount Tom which links Easthampton with Holyoke. Nor can they make it through "The Notch," a mountain pass which connects Amherst with Granby and South Hadley.

Ted sets 'exploratory' drive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and his political advisers still are debating whether he should announce his presidential intentions before or after President Carter makes his expected re-election announcement on Dec. 4.

While there remains the possibility that Kennedy could announce he has decided against running, repeated hints from the senator as well as the preparation being made, leave little doubt he intends to challenge Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

Tom Southwick, Kennedy's press aide, said Thursday that an "exploratory" campaign committee would be formed in "the not too distant future," possibly next week.

When an authorized campaign committee is formed and it files with the Federal Election Committee, the individual promoted by the committee is viewed under the law as a candidate.

Southwick said the only matters holding up formation of the committee are internal decisions, such as who will fill various jobs on the committee and whether some members of Kennedy's Senate staff would shift to the campaign organization.

Meanwhile half of the nation's Democrats now say they would like to see President Carter try for re-election in 1980, a turnaround for the incumbent in the past month, an Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

With the members of his own party leading the way, Carter's standing with the public strengthened a bit from September's historic lows, the poll found in interviews Monday and Tuesday.

There were no major Carter triumphs in the last five weeks to explain the 5 percentage point rise in his job rating — the largest jump since the 16- point surge following the Camp David Mideast summit in September 1978. This lack of a major event to explain the rise may indicate a possibly significant turnaround in public opinion about Carter.

However, even with this month's jump, Carter's job rating remains at extremely depressed levels compared to other presidents.

Grad president blasts faculty on input lack

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Graduate Student Senate President Monte Pierson, speaking yesterday at a Faculty Senate meeting, blasted the faculty for not allowing more student input at the meetings.

Calling the senate a "private club" and saying "only allowed non-voting members to speak when they are told to," Pierson said "it is going to hard for the Faculty Senate to hide from the students.

"At these meetings," he added, "it is all right for the students to be seen but not heard."

Pierson told the group that students on campus are being "oppressed," but warned the senate that "the students are not going to go away." He said both he and the Student Government Association co-presidents, Brian Burke and Rich LaVoice, pledged to take steps toward insuring student access at the senate meetings, and promised that students will be heard from in other faculty related matters on campus.

LaVoice, who was not present at the meeting, said later that the faculty meetings "were the only times that students had direct access to members of the faculty," and added "the faculty seems to forget that all the decisions that are made on campus affect us, the students."

Reaction from the senate was negative. Senate secretary Harvey Kline said that "student representatives are given an allotted time to report the progress of their organizations." Other faculty senators expressed concern that the time allotted to student representatives should be for announcements rather than for expression of student policy.

In other Senate business, Chancellor Henry Koffler stressed the need for "better planning and development in the future of UMass." Koffler called for advancements in the university's student recruitment program and careful planning regarding next year's budget process. "We have to decide where we are going," he said.

Also, in the annual report from the senate's Research Council, Chairman Prof. Bronislaw Honenberg reported the council was involved in evaluating graduate programs, and took an active part in interviewing candidates for chancellor, provost, vice-chancellor for Finances and Dean of the Graduate School. The chairman of the council also said members of the group served on an advisory board for Dean of Student's William F. Field in the past year.

Lord Jeffery employees may strike

By JOE GANNON
Collegian Staff

Employees at the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst have voted unanimously to go on strike Monday morning unless a contract agreement can be reached before then, said Neal Nettler, a waiter at the Lord Jeffrey.

Nettler, who is a union steward in local 116 of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union, said the contract problems center on three issues: the length of the contract, a cost of living increase and a group health insurance policy.

Nettler said the union was asking for a 15 percent cost of living increase, a one year contract, and a better health insurance policy that requires additional bookkeeping but no additional money.

"The cost of living increase is within presidential guidelines," said Nettler, "because employees at the Lord Jeffrey are paid less than four dollars an hour."

"We (the employees) decided to look for a new health policy," Nettler said.

"Amherst Inn Co. (the owners of the Lord Jeffrey) pay $20 a month for health insurance for employees and $20 doesn't buy much," he said.

"So we decided to get a better policy. It is more expensive than our old one but everyone has agreed to pay the difference out of their pockets," he said.

"The insurance company, however, refused to accept individual payments on a group policy, so we asked the company to do it through payroll deductions," he said. "The company has refused to accept the extra bookkeeping and this has become a major hinderance to completion of a contract," he said.

Ray Kelleher, manager of the Lord Jeffrey and a member of the negotiating team for the Amherst Inn Co., could not be reached for comment. Steven Ostrowsky, a lawyer for the Amherst Inn Co., who is also negotiating with the union, said the negotiations are ongoing but refused to comment on them.

"We are not being unreasonable," said Nettler. "We want enough to live on. We have not been playing games with them," he said. "We went in there being very straightforward. We told them what we wanted without inflating the figures, but so far, all offers from the company have been totally unacceptable," he said.

Students turned away from rhetoric exam

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Several hundred students were turned away from the Rhetoric Exemption Exam Wednesday night due to overcrowding in Mahar Auditorium.

Fern Johnson, acting director of the rhetoric program, said over 400 students took the exam, far more than the 250 to 300 people estimated by the rhetoric department. Johnson said the estimate was based upon past turnout for the test.

Johnson said about 150 to 200 people were turned away from Mahar, which seats 496 people according to the University scheduling office. Other students, however, reported different figures of those turned away. Bruce Levy, a sophomore who attempted to take the exam said there were "twice as many people as there were seats for."

Another student, a junior, said she arrived late, after 7 p.m., and observed "masses of people walking down Massachusetts Avenue, towards Southwest."

Johnson said Mahar Auditorium was scheduled for the exam based upon the estimates for turnout. She said the test was primarily designed for graduating seniors who needed the credit this semester. Graduating seniors were permitted to stay and take the exam, without seats.

Complaining about the lack of space, senior Will Pierce said "if the test was geared towards juniors and seniors it's beyond me why freshmen and sophomores were there."

'Fourteen carat gold' women engineers needed

By SHERI SIMONTON
Collegian Staff

Women with engineering degrees are fourteen carat gold premiums, according to Arthur Hilson, Director of the University Placement Service.

Hilson said all women who complete an engineering degree with reasonably good academic standing can expect to have many job opportunities—many with starting salaries averaging approximately $20,000 per year. School of Engineering Associate Dean Joseph S. Marcus agreed saying "companies are beating the bushes for women engineers."

Despite this apparent plethora of opportunities available, women still comprise only 286 places in the School of Engineering's total undergraduate enrollment of 2,164 students. Professionally, women constitute approximately 2.7 percent of the engineering working force and only 0.8 percent of the 4.18 million professional working women in the United States, according to statistics released by "Graduating Engineer," a magazine published by McGraw-Hill Publications Company.

Marcus says social attitudes and stereotypes are primarily responsible for the dearth of women applicants to the School of Engineering. Engineers have traditionally been stereotypically depicted as "guys in hip boots lifting beams"—an image not especially conducive or appealing to women considering engineering as a possible career.

"Engineering was not considered to be an appropriate career for women by teachers, parents, guidance ocunselors, peers and fellow classmates," Marcus said. He added that this view of engineering is changing as more women join the working force. He said women themselves—rather than government enforced Affirmative Action Laws—have been largely responsible for the change in attitudes. Although Affirmative Action policies have created increased openings for women engineers, Marcus said "women are involved in real life engineering—not showcase jobs to bring quotas up."

He said he feels that women engineers are proving that they can maintain their own identities, and be wives and mothers as well as engineers.

All of the persons interviewed said they felt the vast majority of engineering professors at UMass are very accepting of female students are interested in helping all students to understand the material without making any distinction between men and women. Many students felt they received close individual attention from professors.

The engineering faculty includes one female professor, Dr. Mireille Clapp, who joined the mechanical engineering department this year as a professor of Materials Engineering. Clapp said she feels that the steadily increasing number of women entering engineering has tremendously changed attitudes during the past decade and that men are increasingly able to relate to women as equal colleagues on all status.

But some women questioned said they felt that a few of their male classmates still had the attitude that women do not belong in engineering. The women said they tried to avoid such men as much as possible and generally plied men who had such out-

Black Affairs

If the shoe fits...

After attempting for the sixth time to create an Anti-Racism program, campus-wide, the racist re-acts managed to procedure, amend and offend the proposal again. A number of Senators, thoroughly confused by the bogust amendments and points of order set in motion by the racist block, created an atmosphere of total chaos resulting in not only a delay but further revisions. White folks still talk with forked tongues. After several rounds of approving the program in principle; when it came to implementing it, every polemic was used to destroy it.

It was a disgusting display of devious destruction. It immediately recalled the Fall of the Reconstruction Period after slavery, whereby every tactic of parlimentary procedure whittled away every decent gain that Blacks had made. It was also reminiscent of the Nixon Era's dismantling of the gains from the "War on Poverty" and other programs that people died for.

An even more revolting aspect was what preceeded the Fiasco. After clearly documenting that the Acting Attornev General had no right to collect a pay check since the start of the semester, he was removed and the position vacated. LaVoice didn't wait two seconds to abuse presidential authority and he reappointed him for another two weeks! Under cover of a well prepared battery of points of information and appeals that "it's only two weeks"; Pierce is in again!

They had no questions concerning the easy-handed manner he dealt with the former treasurer O'Connells theft of $301.00, nor any questions as to why he collected checks; knowing he was only appointed for the summer. The obvious defense to all of this is that he and his cohorts didn't know. Having been Acting as Attorney General since last March, are we to believe that the one who is in charge of the constitution's constant upkeep and revision didn't know? Why they insult your intelligence!

Another matter to consider, is the self-righteous backwaters in the Senate who were so concerned in the budget process about tightening up the system, could allow such sleazy moves to go on without question. Yet, when it came to voting on an Anti-Racism program, they had every question of fact and procedure all lined up (thanks of course to the constant coaching by co-president LaVoice).

I will submit in summary, words long since forgotten but frighteningly pertinent. It has been enumerable times since February 8, 1979, when the Senate endorsed the Anti-Racism program. Since then, people have been assaulted, insulted and their property damaged and burned. Let the words of Chief Joseph's Lament speak for me: "Good words do not last long unless they amount to something. Words do not pay for my dead people. They do not pay for my country now overrun by white men. They do not protect my Father's grave...Good wordsdo not give me back my children. Good words will not give my people good health and stop them from dying. Good words will not get my people a home where they can live in peace and take care of themselves. I am tired of talk that comes to nothing."

Women attacked in store

Shortly before closing on Saturday, September 29, three Third World Women entered Russel's Liquors in downtown Amherst. They were Sheila A. Johnson, Amherst College employee; Gloria Stevens, Amherst College student; and Ada Griffin, a student at Hampshire College. According to the Amherst Student (October 4, 1979), Johnson was asked for identification while making a purchase. As she presented it, the clerk involved "flung the I.D. back at her", and an argument ensued. Meanwhile, Stevens and Griffin had made their purchases and were leaving the store. Another clerk, thinking that the women had not paid for their liquor, told them to stop. The Amherst police were called, one of whom "reportedly pushed Griffin against a shelf of wine bottles twisted her arm behind her back, and handcuffed her. In the course of this the authorities used abusive language and racist name calling. Even as the women said they were not resisting, one of the policemen, in an attempt to control one of the women, threw her (she weighs 96 pounds) to the ground and sat on her. The three were then arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

This case follows a number of other incidents in the Valley. With the Brown and Gethers case, Seta Rampersad, and Jose Pontes, a pattern develops indicating a prejudice within all the institutions against justice for Third World, women, and working people.

On October 24 at 9 a.m. a pre-trial hearing is scheduled for Hampshire District Court in Northampton. We urge your attendance at the hearing to indicate your support for the defendants and to monitor the courts as the only way to find out the truth about justice in the Valley.

UMass to honor Bond

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Black Affairs Staff

In a joint ceremony scheduled for Monday, October 22 at 3:30 p.m., the University of Massachusetts (Amherst), the University Library and the School of Education will honor the late Horace Mann Bond, a distinguished black scholar and educator. At the celebration which will take place at the Marks Meadow Auditorium (School of Education Building), the University will formally announce its acquisition of the Bond papers and the naming of the Horace Mann Bond Center for Equal Education. The Center stands in tribute to Bond and the cause to which he pledged his life.

Bond, a dedicated scholar, received his A.B. degree from Lincoln University in 1923 and his A.M. (1926) and Ph.D from the University of Chicago. He held faculty and administrative positions at Langston University, Alabama State College, Fisk University and Dillard University before becoming President of the Fort Valley State College where he served from 1939 to 1945. He then served as President of Lincoln University from 1945 to 1957. In 1957, Bond left Lincoln to become Dean of the School of Education at Atlanta University. He remained in that position until 1966 when he assumed responsibilities of Director of the Bureau of Education and Social Research at that institution, a title he held until 1972.

Bond committed his life to the right of equal education for every child. He participated actively and played a leading role in organizing and conducting research for the NAACP in the famous Supreme Court Case of Brown vs. Board of Education (1954). He has also made several important publications which include the classic Education of the Negro in the American Social Order, Education in Alabama: A Study in Cotton and Steel, and Black Scholars. The Bond Papers which the University will formally acknowledge on Monday is an extensive collection in the field of Black education, African affairs and related topics.

In the tradition of Bond, the Center for Equal education stores information on racial and other social factors that stumbling blocks to the achievement of first rate education for every child. The Director of the Center, Professor Meyer Weinberg has outlined one of the Center's goals as the formulation of direct research and inquiry into those aspects that are continually neglected by the more traditional approaches. The Center provides students and practitioners with empirical documentation including court decisions, administrative rulings, school district studies and civil rights reports. While the central emphasis is focured on the black child, a significant percent of the Center's holdings is devoted to Mexican American, Puerto Rican and American Indian children. Increasing attention is being given to children from Asian, poor white, Jewish and European immigrant backgrounds and to women.

Professor Weinberg himself has shown a commitment to the civil rights movement over the years. In 1961 he tried to rally public school teachers in a move to integrate the Chicago school system. In 1963, he along with others began the magazine Integrateducation, of which he has since served as editor. The Center also publishes another journal, Research Review of Equal Education as well as other related material.

The keynote speaker at the ceremony will be John Aubrey Davis, member of the Political Science Faculty, City College, CUNY. Also present will be Mrs. Julia Bond (widow of Horace Bond) and their son, Georgia State Senator, Julian Bond.

Commentaries

Positive points of busing...

Forced busing is the busing of public school children to racially unbalanced schools for the purpose of desegregation. I will explain the positive points of force busing partially from my own experience and why I feel that busing is a good solution for fair education and racism.

I have attended all black ghetto schools, racially balanced urban schools, and all white suburban schools.I received a far superior education in the all white schools. I got a very low rate of education while attending the all-black schools. This shows that the ruling class is not ready to give blacks an equal education. Now if you took some of the black kids and bused them into the suburbs, and took some of the white kids and bused them into the city, you would have desegregation. Then the ruling class would have no choice except to give both races equal education opportunities. I feel that you cannot have an equal society without educating the youngsters equally.

Some people don't think it is fair for them to have to pay taxes for busing their children away. I feel that they should look at it from another point of view. They should see it as an improvement of society, instead of a personal loss.

An even more important factor is racism. People are not born racist, they are not racist when they are young children. Society conditions them to be racist. They are taught the stereotypes that were created 400 years ago. I feel that the reason their ideas stick is because the children have nothing to disprove these theories. They see them on television and learn them from their parents and older people. If black children and white children started going to school and growing up together when they were young (kindergarten, or first grade), then they will see that these theories are not true.

I am not claiming that racism will end just like that. But perhaps these children will grow up to be a little less racist. If these children go through the same process they would be less racist and so on, until one day, racism will be nothing more than a bitter memory.

By giving all children an equal education, you will increase the productiveness of the country. By making white and black children grow up together you decrease the degrading effects of racism. That is why I feel that busing is a step forward in a backward moving society.

Food for Thought

The article appearing in this week's Nummo News, on the attack of three Black women, should be taken seriously. The problem re-establishes that Third World people in the Valley are treated as inferiors.

Because of the large migration of Black and Third World students in the 70's, the Valley has responded with an increase in racial tension. In fact, there have been a number of cases involving violence against women in the area. In 1974, three Black women were harrassed in the Blue Wall. The incident occurred, when two white males told the sisters, they could not sit at a particular table. The women ignored this threat, and proceeded to sit down. The white males decided to counter this move by yelling racial slurs. This was followed by a pitcher of beer being thrown at the women. Although the beer hit the women, the glass pitcher (containing the beer) hit an innocent bystander.

Because the situation involved Blacks, the bystanders instead of finding out who originally hit him, filed charges of assault and battery against the women. The women were not allowed to file charges against the white males. The fact that the three sisters involved the community in their case, they avoided probation, fines and the normal ignorance of a defendant.

Another situation involved Sister Jill Dickerson in 1978, who was found seriosly injured around Franklin Dining Commons. The UMass police have never found the individuals involved in this case. But to this day, the Sister has problems with walking. The scars can only remind her of that terrible night. A third situation was the mysterious death of Sister Seta Rampersad. She was found in a Sunderland Motel last year. The District Attorney office in Northampton, has not given any support to the family or supporters in this case. The situation against women has also produced similar result to the brother. Brothers from Amherst College, UMass and the area have appeared on the scene (1973—Amherst brother accused of robbing a local establishment; 1974—Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers (UMass) accused of robbing MacDonald; 1977—Brothers from the Amherst vicinity accused of robbing the Northampton bridge Gasland; 1977—Brothers from UMass were accused of robbing Cumberland Farm).

The incidents have occurred when the community was staggering and moving. Thus, the case has turned into a serious analysis for every Black and Third World person in the Valley. The situation is whether we want to pressure the local establishment into dealing with these problems or do we decide to handle the matter ourselves. The choice is one the whole community will have to make.

SATISFACTION

The most beautiful
for those who have fought a whole life, is to come to the end and say:
we believed in man and in life and life and man never let us down.

And so they are won for the people.
And so the infinite example is born.

Not because they fought a part of their lives
but because they fought all the days of all their lives.

Only this way do men become men:
fighting day and night to be men.

Then the people open their deepest rivers and they enter those waters forever.

And so they are, distant fires, living, creating the heart of example.

SATISFACCION

Lo más hermoso
para los que han combatido
su vida entera,
es llegar al final y decir:
creíamos en el hombre y la vida
y la vida y el hombre
jamás nos defraudaron.

Así son ellos ganados para el pueblo.
Así surge la eternidad del ejemplo.

No porque combatieron una parte de su vida, sino porque combatieron todos los días de su vida.

Sólo así llegan los hombres a ser hombres:
combatiendo día y noche por ser hombres.

Entonces, el pueblo abre sus ríos más hondos
y los mezcla para siempre con sus aguas.

Así son ellos, encendidas lejanías.
Por eso habitan hondamente el corazón del ejemplo.

For Johnnetta Cole—Happy Birthday!

Dignitaries to dedicate Kennedy Library

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

This Saturday Senator Edward M. Kennedy, members of the Kennedy family and a host of civic, political and religious leaders will be joined by President Carter and other national and world dignitaries for the dedication of the John Fitgerald Kennedy Memorial Library at its Columbia Point home in Dorchester.

The Kennedy Library, proposed in the last year of the Kennedy adminstration, was to have been built in Cambridge, near the late President's alma mater—Harvard University. Through the objections of local residents, however, the original site was turned down and the library relocated to its present location on the UMass Boston campus.

The libray is situated at the tip of a peninsula looking down Boston Harbor to the sea. Designed by renowned architect I.M. Pei, and erected by the Boston-based Turner Construcution Company at a cost of $20.8 million, the 115,00-square foot complex is largely funded from private contributions.

Historically, the library is one of seven Presidential Libraries administered by the National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration. The other six are the Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Johnson and Ford Libraries. It will be the first dedication of a Presidential Library at which the person for whom it is named will not be present. His widow, Mrs. Onassis and his children, John and Caroline, will be seated with other members of the family.

President Carter will fly to Boston at around 10 a.m. and go directly to the one-and-one-half hour outdoor ceremony at Columbia Point site.

Dedication speakers will include the President, Sen. Kennedy and Joseph P. Kennedy, III, as well as Stephen E. Smith, brother-in-law of the Senator and President of the Kennedy Library Corporation, who will preside at the ceremony.

Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, matriarch of the Kennedy family, is scheduled to present the keys to the privately-constructed Library to the federal government's General Services Adminstration.

'NOW COMES THE TRICKY PART...'

Rationalizing hate towards any peoples a sick state of affairs

Yitzhak Santis

Stereotypical attacks on any given ethnic, racial or religious group tend to be based on ignorance, hatred, intolerance and fanatacism. By publishing and distributing the anti-Jewish pamphlet The Masters of the Media, the members of the Iranian Muslim Student Association (IMSA) of UMass have more than adequately displayed these qualities.

The Masters of the Media is not an IMSA original. While their pamphlet says it is a reprint, it does not say from whence it came. Yet, I have a very good idea what their source is: the National Vanguard, an anti-black, anti-Jewish, white-supremacist, neo-Nazi newspaper. Special Issue, No. 68 has the same article, The Masters of the Media on page five.

The front page of this racist rag proclaims: "Whites: Let's Unite!" There is a photo of a small white child holding a sign declaring "I don't want to go to school with the blacks!"

But the IMSA denies that it copied their pamphlet from the National Vanguard. That it is only coincidence that the Nazis are using the same article as they. One would have to then conclude that if this is indeed so, the IMSA must coincidentally have the same outlook on Jews as the fascists.

Let's examine briefly this Iranian Muslim Student Association document. It opens by explaining that the media is a very powerful tool which, if properly used, can manipulate the way people think. It then points out that the presidents of the TV networks "dictate what 210 million Americans shall learn of what has happened in the nation and the world each day." It makes the assertion that because the network presidents are Jewish, that there is an "alien news monopoly."

This is a very strange thing for foreign Iranian students to say about American citizens!

The booklet continues, "Jews, with an uncanny instinct for power, insinuated themselves into every nook and cranny of the communications industries. Until this Jewish control of American public opinion is broken, continued misfortune, confusion and decadence shall be our lot."

What the IMSA, and the Nazis, ignore is the many thousands of non-Jews involved in the decision making process in the media. They also choose to ignore the fact that the most influential and largest news czars are non-Jews, such as Hearst, Gannet, Knight-Ritter. And, they also fail to point out which Jews in the media are actually Zionists and which are not.

The IMSA's pamphlte has such wonderful verbiage as "the media is positively lousy with them (the Jews)" and most media Jews are not all that Jewey."

Needless to say the IMSA claims this to be an "anti-Zionist" document which "supported the facts" (Collegian 10-16). But it is obvious that the IMSA's anti-Zionism is a mere cover for their true and not so well hidden feelings of unabashed Jew-hatred.

Ayatollah Khomeini, which the IMSA supports and gloats over, set the tone for this Judeophobia in 1970 in a speech in Arabic in Iraq, Khomeini declared that Jews and "atheistic materialism are joining forces to pervert...Islam...We see the Jews making a mockery of the Koran...the Jews and their foreign masters are plotting against Islam and are preparing the way for Jews to rule the entire planet...We may wake up one morning and find a Jewish ruler dominating our country—God forbid!"

I am not against the IMSA's right to free speech. But what I find disgusting is the abuse of their right in printing and distributing racist, Judeophobic and anti-Semitic trash.

I will say one more thing about the IMSA. If ignorance were a virtue, they'd be very holy and pious people.

Jimmy Carter playing games

Jack Gallagher

You wouldn't have seen the Queen of England there.
Nor the local grocer.
But he was there.

Jimmy Carter was there. The President of the United States, he was there. It was a spectacle that much of the world saw. So he was there.

If the guy from the local barbershop was there, I would go somewhere else to have my haircut because I would be too embarrassed to look him in the face.

But I have to look at the guy's face who was there. I have no more choice as far as that goes. Sometimes you would think he wanted it that way, that he knew I had no choice but to look at him.

They couldn't refuse him. They had to let him in, but they didn't have to pay any attention to him—as they showed. He must think self-effacement means votes.

I can't figure why else he would have been there, subjected himself to such ridicule—made himself look like Dostoyevski's Idiot.

What is wrong with Gerald Rafshoon?

There is no way that the President of the United States should have been in the Pittsburgh Pirates locker room Wednesday night.

Maybe it would have been ok if the Baltimore Orioles had won and he had gone into their locker room, because Baltimore is close to Washington.

But the President has no such geo-political connection with the city on the banks of the Allegheny, Monogahela and Ohio rivers. I'm sure the guy from Plains, Ga., didn't win over any hearts in Baltimore.

Should he choose to walk around downtown Baltimore, as he has been wont to do in the past, Carter will be thrown in Chesapeake Bay.

However similiar baseball and politics, the peanut-boy from nowhere blew it—badly.

He wanted a baseball, which a guy named Willie Stargell also wanted, but most of all he wanted to make a speech to his fellow Americans. He wanted to campaign in a sweaty, champagne-soaked locker room.

Is nothing sacred?

The President of the United States ruined a perfectly boring World Series.

He keeps saying the 1980 elections are going to be a dogfight, and he proved it when he went on national television after a baseball game.

No one wanted to hear him say anything about inflation or recession or anything else. They wanted to hear from the Pirates and how they had won the Series.

Sports are the great escape for many Americans. The last thing the beer-drinking construction worker wanted to hear before he went to bed after the Fall Classic was Jimmy Carter.

The one-time Oriole fan became a Pirate praiser. It was the ultimate political move.

Everyone wants the underdog, so Jimmy jumped at the chance to do so on ABC.

He's pushing much too hard, alienating his constituency.

The comparisons between baseball and politics are not endless, however.

He'll never make it to the Seventh Game.

The sticky Teddy dilemma

Peter Torkildsen

Now that Ted Kennedy is officially considering running for the Democratic Presidential nomination, Americans can watch what might be the third incumbent president in twelve years faces a serious challenge from within his own party. The rationale for Kennedy's candidacy is complex, though, as his implementation will have to be if it is to carry him to the White House.

The continued vulnerability of the incumbent must be considered the overriding factor in Kennedy's decision. A recent poll showed only 19 percent thought that, overall, Jimmy Carter was doing a good or better job, while 45 percent thought his performance was only fair. The possibility that the White House would be turned over to a Republican with Carter heading the ticket is of legitimate concern to Kennedy. Not only would the Democrats lose the White House, but Kennedy's presidential ambitions would be further stymied with a Republican president running for re-election in 1984. Carter heading the ticket puts him in the unenviable position of being able to lose more than the White House, and that is where Kennedy's concern can turn to worry.

Many Congressmen feel that with Carter as the Democratic nominee, many traditional Democratic voters will simply stay home on election day, this would increase the vulnerability of many Democratic senators and representatives. With five or six Democratic senators already considered vulnerable, the possibility of the G.O.P. picking-up the nine seats necessary for control of the Senate becomes a reality.

With the control of the Senate goes the control of every committee chairmanship, including Kennedy's chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee. The thought of Kennedy becoming ranking minority member of a committee chaired by Strom Thurmond is too much for many Kennedy enthusiasts to conceive.

Another factor in Kennedy's availability extends beyond the likely loss of the White House and possible loss of the Senate. The political climate in the country can only be described as rightward-moving. Through a fiscal conservatism that grew as a reaction to inflation and gas lines, people appear to be demanding less government and less taxation. Kennedy's record and concept of government has been for an increased government role in most areas, and the increase in spending necessary to finance such programs.

As the country moves farther to the right, the likelihood of a Kennedy victory in 1988 or beyond diminishes.

This must be counted as a factor in Kennedy's decision to challenge Carter now, instead of waiting for Carter's retirement or defeat.

The implementation of Kennedy's candidacy must be precise; it cannot appear to widen the rift in the Democratic party, rather in must appear to result from the split that, according to Lane Kirkland, cannot exist in a party that doesn't exist. If Carter's forces fight to the last primary, as it appears they will from the effort they put into the non-binding Florida caucuses, then a major split could develop that could conceivably deny the presidency to whoever emerged as the nominee.

Though Kennedy presently enjoys an enormous lead over all his Republican opponents, this could change, especially in the deep South, after a series of battles between a liberal northeastern senator and a moderate southern incumbent.

And it is unlikely Ted Kennedy will forget the northeast-southern coalition that sent his brother to the White House twenty years ago.

dated, limited views of women.

Laura Jean Cushing, a junior electrical engineering major and secretary of the UMass chapter of the Society of Women Engineers—an organization devoted to informing and supporting female engineering students—said the department encourages women to enter engineering. She said she feels many women "chicken-out" and are scared away from disciplines emphasizing mathematics and the sciences.

Cushing also cited the difficulty of the UMass engineering curriculum which takes at least half of the engineering students more than four years to complete. Cushing said students help each other a great deal in study groups and homework networks, noting a general "community effort to graduate everyone."

This pervading spirit of community support and unity is also reflected by the large number of organizations, clubs, and activities for School of Engineering students.

The women interviewed said they chose engineering as their major for a wide variety of reasons. Some had been attracted early to the field as children by parents or relatives in engineering, while others had never considered it before coming to UMass. Many said they had always been mathematically oriented and saw engineering as a practical means of applying their talents to real problems and solutions.

will benefit lower income and minority family areas," said Moore.

"There will be a lot of strikes if 'two and a half' goes through," said Dziuba. "Inflation is going up but the bill will freeze the budgets. People won't be able to get raises," she said.

Another proposal, the Tax Justice Act, is sponsored by the Massachusetts State AFL-CIO, MassPIRG, Massachusetts Fair Share and various other labor groups. This act includes:

—Property taxes cut by 15 percent for residential property and by 10 percent for industrial property in most cities and towns. A share of this relief will be passed through to individual tenants.

—The growth of state and local taxes will be permanently limited to stay in line with the growth of the economy and the cost of providing governmental services and the state will be barred from adding increased costs to local budgets.

—The corporate tax loopholes will be closed.

"This problem would cut roughly $270 million from current property tax collections and would target at least 90 percent of that relief to individual homeowners and tenants," according to authorities from the Campaign for Tax Justice.

Arts preview

Bonnie Raitt tix on sale today

Bonnie Raitt will be performing at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, tomorrow night, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are still available, but sales are expected to pick up after the Boston Celtics' season opener, which is sold out, and the Bruins' home opener, which is also sold out, are played today. She also will be expected to be a sellout because of Raitt's "popular" anti-nuclear stance and the success of her new album.

While originally from California, Raitt began performing in clubs in the Boston and Philadelphia areas in the late 60's.

Her first album, Bonnie Raitt, appeared in 1971 and its success led to the release of an album each year through 1975, including Give It Up, Takin' My Time, Streetlights, and Home Plate. Her latest efforts have been Sweet Forgiveness in 1977 and The Glow, which was released this fall.

Raitt has recorded material written by many well-known artists including Jackson Browne, Randy Newman, James Taylor, Joni Mitchell, and Isaac Hayes. In addition, musicians such as Lowell George, J.D. Souther, Michael McDonald and Paul Butterfield have performed on her albums.

Throughout her musical career Raitt has also expressed her political convictions. She has sung at benefits for women's rights, tarmworkers, various political candidates, and recently for the anti-nuclear movement. She was a founding member of Musicians United for Safe Energy (M.U.S.E.) and appeared at the M.U.S.E. concerts in New York last month.

Appearing here with Raitt will be Minnesota-based blues artists the Lamont Cranston Band.

Tickets for the concert at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, which were originally scheduled to go on sale Wednesday but were delayed due to printing problems, will cost $9, $8.50 and $8 for UMass students and $1 more for non-students.

Uncle Vanya premieres

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

"Uncle Vanya," Russian playwright Anton Chekov's character study of an irrational, frustrated man, has its UMass premiere tonight featuring a professional and student cast.

"This is the most exhausting role I have ever played," said Ronald Willoughy, who plays the lead role of "Uncle Vanya" and is also a regular on the television soap opera "Somerset."

The actor said it is physically and emotionally intense to perform and will also be exhausting for the audience because of an evocative, griping script.

Of the mixed cast director Richard Trousdell said he brings professional guest artists here who are experienced actors and employ other theater skills that students can learn from. "The students work with the actors instead of just watching them, which is often the case in similiar programs," he said.

Denise Kotch, a professional actress, plays Elana, a woman of tremendous spirit and great beauty who is persued by all of the men in the play. The student players incude Audrey Jaques, a UMass theater undergraduate, as Vanya's niece Sonia and graduate student George Angell as Elena's husband, an art history professor and Andrew Lichtenberg as the family doctor and Sonia's unrequited lover.

"We haven't performed a Chekov play in a long while. You need an expert in Russian to do a Chekov play so we took advantage of the new translation, Trousdell said of the three-hour play. The translator, Tufts University Professor Laurence Senelick attended some of the rehearsals and provided information on Russian customs and traditions.

"Uncle Vanya" is presented by The University Ensemble Theater at the Rand Theater tonight, tomorrow night, and Oct. 25-27 at 8.

The deadline for entering is November 30, 1979, and a jury will award the winning proposals prizes ranging from $25-100. The prizes are provided by the Campus Center Administration, while the jury will be representative of the design professions and the University community.

There is no fixed format for entries, but the go-ahead for proposals must be given by the Board of Governors Environmental Design project (contact John Furbish at CC 817, 545-0198). Winning proposals will be displayed, and they may become incorporated into a master-plan for the CC/SU exterior spaces.

'Schools need more sex education'

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Students at Amherst Regional High School are not required to take any courses that teach sex education, according to the school's health teacher, Dr. Ralph Linstra.

Only 10 percent of the school's 980 students, grades 10-12, enroll in the one health course offered, which has a lengthy unit on sex education. Another 20 percent of the high school students are exposed to education in sexuality through two elective courses offered through the home economics department. Consequently, only 30 percent of the entire high school community receives a formal education in human sexuality.

Linstra said he has found that many high school women do not understand basic concepts in sexuality, such as menstruation. Both men and women have common misconceptions about sexual intercourse. Many think that women can not get pregnant the first time they have sex, and that withdrawal is safe.

Statistics show that most families do not educate their children about sexuality, nor do they learn about it in church. For this reason, Linstra feels that a school course that deals with sex education is essential to students, and should be required for all students.

He said he knows of a few states such as New York and Michigan where the law requires students take health in order to graduate. A tight state budget has prevented the change in Massachusetts, he said.

Linstra said students from rural areas should receive sex education in their sophomore or junior years. Students from urban areas, where the level of sexual activity is higher and occurs at an earlier age, should take a course in junior high school, he said.

Both the school system and the community are sympathetic toward the problem, and in early November, the Community Health Advisory Committee will meet to discuss possible alternatives.

One alternative that Linstra does not approve of is asking outside organizations to lecture to students about human sexuality or family planning. He feels these groups do not understand the backgrounds or personalities of the students and may offend them, present a bias without explanation, or have a flippant attitude toward sex. Linstra said small personalized classes are the most helpful and least offensive way to teach sex education to high school students.

Linstra teaches the unit on sexuality primarily as a lecture, but any questions or issues that arise in class are discussed, including controversial subjects such as homosexuality and abortion. A detailed analysis of birth control methods and devices, with a careful study of their effectiveness and dangers is presented.

Linstra mailed a letter to all parents informing them of the controversial nature of the unit on sex education. Those few who object, usually do so for religious reasons, he said. The affected students may then be asked to write a paper relating sexuality to their religion as an alternative to attending the class. This tactic usually satisfies the parent, Linstra said.

Linstra said he wishes he could counsel those students who come to him in search of advice, but Massachusetts does not have a statute which extends the right of privileged communication between school teachers and students or guidance counselors and students, he said.

Even though Linstra is qualified to counsel professionally, he is not protected if parents decide to take legal action. Without parental consent, he rarely gives advice or referrals. But, he said, "Some teachers and counselors really go out on a legal limb and take tremendous risks to help students in need."
